The semi-annual meeting of the executive committee of Iowa W. C. T. U. held in Ft. Dodge was most satisfactory. As much was accomplished as is usually done at an annual meeting. A slight departure from the usual program charaterized the meeting, in that public evening meetings were held. The first evening the address of welcome, the response, and a most excellent paper by Mrs. Clippinger, entertained a good audience most acceptably. The welcome was given by Mrs. Hawley, of Ft. Dodge, and the response by Mrs. Mahin, of Muscatine. The resolutions adopted give a partial outline of the work planned for the future:

Resolved, That while we rejoice in the passage of the prohibitory law, and give thanks to our God for the added victory, we realize that it is only another fort taken, and that the open field of contest in the courts for enforcement of the law is yet before us, and we pledge our best efforts to the work of securing to the home the benefits of the law which has cost us so much.

Resolved, That we rejoice in the fulfillment of our hope, and the justification of our faith in the republican party, evidenced by its action in the enactment of the prohibitory law, that we honor the men who stood for principle, and that we express our appreciation and thanks to the men of all parties in the twentieth general assembly for faithful earnest work in securing laws for the elevation of society, and the better protection and purity of our homes.

Resolved, That the defeat of the suffrage amendment in the house of representatives of the twentieth general assembly does not in any measure diminish our faith in the ultimate triumph of the principle of impartial suffrage, or discourage us in our work for the same, and that we will continue our efforts to secure the ballot for women with undiminished zeal, believing that it will be a power to be obtained in no other way for the protection of women and the home.

Resolved, That we heartily approve the object of the Prisoner's Aid association, that we rejoice in the appropriation given them by the general assembly, and we tender them our sympathy and co-operation in their work.

Resolved, That we will heartily co-operate with all other temperance organizations in the effort to secure thorough enforcement of the prohibitory law, and urge unions to give special attention to the laws against liquor selling, gambling, and prostitution, studying well the provisions and the possibilities under them.

The second evening meeting was in the interest of the Benedict Home. Mrs. Conger had a fine paper on "The Home and its Needs," and Mrs. Benedict an address on "Woman's Work for Woman". Mrs. Aldrich gave an address on the last evening and Mrs. Smith an original poem.

These public meetings, while making no pretentions to great merit in oratorical display, were an effective means of arousing interest in W. C. T. U. work, some ladies, heretofore conservative on the suffrage question, saying, "Well, it these women are suffragists, then we are."—Iowa Capital.

TEMPERANCE WORK AT THE SOLDIERS' HOME.

Washington.—A large and patriotic audience assembled at the Methodist Protestant church, on a recent Sunday, in the interest of the veterans from the Soldiers' Home.

Mrs. Clara L. Roach presided, and Mrs. Dr. Rogers made the opening prayer. Mrs. Roach gave a short Scripture reading, and in the opening remarks stated that nine months had passed since she and Mrs. J. W. Rowan had presented a kindly letter of introduction by Mr. B. H. Warner to General Sturgis at Soldiers' Home. They were received with the greatest courtesy by the General, and assured that they could have the chapel for a temperance meeting for the soldiers on any evening during the week. He also told them he would send a conveyance to the cars for the workers, etc. Major Rittenhouse supplied the chapel with gospel hymns, and every care was taken to make the room pleasant and cheery for the ladies. Ice water was always provided and often handsome bouquets of flowers beautified the chancel.

Speeches were made by several of the veterans. All testifying to the great change wrought in the moral atmosphere of the Home since the organization there of the Soldiers' Temperance Union which now numbers 156 total abstainers, many of whom were once hard drinkers.

WASHINGTON W. C. T. U. WORK FOR COLORED PEOPLE.

Mrs. F. E. W. Harper, National superintendent for work among the colored people of the north, has just given us eight days faithful labor in Washington. Arrangements were made for meetings in several of the largest and most influential churches, also a spiended meeting was held at Mayland seminary. The chapel was filled with the students of both sexes. Prof. King gave Mrs. Harper and the ladies a most courteous welcome. Mrs. Harper made a most able address, which was heartily applauded, she also gave a valuable lesson from charts showing the effects of alcohol on the stomach.

Following this a "Wayland Seminary Temperance Union" was formed, all offices being filled by some of the brightest and best of able students. One young lady said she was so glad she had been brought into this work, for when she went home for vacation she would go to work there, where it is so much needed. A crowded hall greeted Mrs. Harper also at Howard University, where she made a most valuable address. At the churches collections were taken up and the colored people responded most liberally, relieving the district from paying but very little to the expense of the week's campaign. One of our own women entertained Mrs.

Harper free of charge. Mrs. Harper is a most indefatigable worker, and one fully fitted for the work she has in hand.

We have now six auxiliaries among the negroes here, and most of them have thorough and efficient officers.

Hon. Fred Douglass, Prof. R. T. Greener, Rev. Mr. Brooks, Baptist, and Rev. Mr. Grinke, Presbyterian, and Mr. Waring, also Baptist, and Rev. Mr. Reed, Methodist, all rendered most valuable aid, also Rev. Mr. Valentine. The field is white to the harvest, but our hands are full. Pray for us. SARAH D. LAFETRA,

MICHIGAN.

SECOND DISTRICT CONVENTION.

A convention of the W. C. T. U. of the 2d district was opened in Manchester, Tuesday, April 29, at 2 p. m., Mrs. Merritt, of Tecumseh, leading the devotional exercises. A pleasing expression of welcome was given by Mrs. Hoy, of Manchester, responded to by several delegates.

Ann Arbor reported a membership of ninety, an average attendance of twenty-three, holds regular weekly meetings. The last meetings of the month is devoted to educatioal interests, by prepared papers on the work, discussions, essays, and reports from superintendents of the different departments.

Their temperance school reports a membership of one hundred and fifty, an average attendance of sixty-five, holds weekly meetings, uses Dr. Reed's temperance text book; have two or three public entertainments during the year.

Dexter reported general interest; has received new members during the year. Monthly exercises by Band of Hope, distribute leaflets on beer and tobacco, and the Temperance Banner.

Tecumseh holds public meetings. Nothing done toward influencing the use of school ballot.

Adrian has weekly meetings with an attendance of four to ten. Temperance sentiment good. The Band of Hope has regular meetings, the officers being among the children; they have lessons and essays upon tobacco and beer.

Clinton, seventeen members; organized one year ago. A good attendance with interest. Had Mrs. Boise, state missionary, in December. Has a blue ribbon Band of Hope, meeting weekly.

Somerset Union organized in 1881, membership of twelve. A Band of Hope, hold monthly meetings. No saloons in township. Had Mrs. Boise and Mrs. Lathrap for public lectures.

Pittsford Union, twenty members; holds its meetings at residences of the people with good results. Entertained Mrs. Boise in December. No saloons, one drug store.

Mrs. McElwain, of Chelsa Union, reports five temperance organizations holding regular meetings, and good interest. Band of Hope with 84 members, pay state dues, send delegates to state meetings.

Lenawee Junction a membership of 20 earnest working women, holds regular meetings. Report of committee of resolutions accepted and adopted without amendment.

Mrs. Lathrap, president of state W. C. T. U., gave us, in few cheering words, the why and wherefore of our slowness in our district. We had lost our crown, now we should take it back.

A children's meeting was arranged for four o'clock Tuesday, Miss Kimball, of Chicago, was expected but sickness detained her. Miss Brown, of Ann Arbor, and Mrs. Stannard, of Dexter did their best to atone for the disappointment.

At the evening meeting of Tuesday, an exposition of the "mottoed tree" was given by Mrs. Geddes, after which Mrs. Lathrap addressed the people.

At three o'clock Wednesday, the Manchester ladies were present to be organized (by Mrs. Lathrap), into a working union, twenty-two ladies representing the union.

An interesting children's meeting was held after the organization, which enlists over one hundred.

A public lecture Wednesday evening by Mrs. Lathrap to a full house, closed the convention. Officers for the coming year are as follows: president, Mrs. J. M. Geddes, Adrian; corresponding secretary and treasurer, Mrs. C. Humphrey, Adrian. S. H. BISHOP, Rec. Sec.

NEW YORK.

Brewster, in Putnam county, N. Y. is a beautiful and flourishing little town, lying on high ground and overlooking a branch of the far-famed Croton river, from which the thirsty Gothamites draw and slake their thirst. On its bank stands too the great milk condensing factory of Borden's whence comes the great supply of canned milk to our large towns and cities.

The town has from two to three thousand inhabitants, and it seems to be a thriving community. Three or four fine churches have been built, and an earnest Christian people meet there for worship and to carry forward all branches of Christian work.

With all the natural beauty of the place and the prosperity of the people, the same omnipresent evil of liquor selling and drinking exists that we find lurking everywhere, and on April 27 we, Mrs. McClees, Miss E. Underderhill and myself spent the day helping the ladies to organize a W. C. T. U. for the purpose of fighting this evil, and if possible to drive it out of the neighborhood. The ladies came together in the afternoon and organized with twenty-three members. Mrs. Lucy Lagrave, president; Miss Julia Roberts, secretary; Miss Emma Knapp, treasurer.

We were most cordially met, and delightfully entertained by Mr. and Mrs. L. F. Roberts and daughter whose home and hospitality we shall not soon forget. Mr. Roberts is the leader of the M. E. church choir, and gives every year parlor concerts in his own house, and with his enthusiasm in the temperance work, and the earnestness of his wife, and the musical ability of his daughter the cause must prosper when connected with the organization just starting out into the battle field.

MRS. A. M. STEWART, Organizer Putnam Co.

STATE CONFERENCE.

We are still alive in our state prosecuting the work of organization in every town, village and city within our borders where there are no W. C. T. Unions. Where there is an open door we enter in and where the door is not open we knock until it opens. Over fifty locals and one county union have been organized since September.

We have just held a state conference in New York city, at which the following topics were opened and discussed: "What is Temperance Education?" Miss Julia Colman; "Temperance Work among Soldiers and Sailors," Mrs. S. A. McClees; "The Influence of Social Drinking," Mrs. Helen E. Brown; "Constitutional Prohibition," Rev. Geo. E. Reed; "Temperance Text Books in Schools and Colleges," Miss E. W. Green; "Congress and the Liquor Traffic," Mr. A. M. Powell. The discussions were lively, animated and pointed. There were also two devotional meetings conducted by Mrs. K. E. Cleveland and Mrs. Romelia M. Clapp, and a Bible Reading by Mrs. H. W. Smith, of Philadelphia. These were all very instructive and deeply spiritual, especially the latter. Miss F. E. Willard addressed the evening meeting, and though suffering from indisposition, gave an excellent talk, such as she only can give, touching every vital point in the great problem of W. C. T. U. effort and success.

Among the visitors present we noticed Rev. Wm. H. Boole, Horace Waters, J. N. Stearns, Philip Phillips and Gen. Clinton B. Fisk. Several of our National officers and superintendents were also present; among those not already mentioned were Mrs. F. W. Bottome, Mrs. C. B. Buell, Mrs. Anna Hammer, Miss Emily Underhill, Mrs. F. J. Barnes and others. The following telegram from the Oswego union was read and replied to by Mrs. Dr. Stewart of Peekskill, and Mrs. R. A. Thurston of Poughkeepsie:

OSWEGO, N. Y., April 25, 1884.

Mrs. M. T. Burt: "Conference Session." Read Jer. 9:17–22.

CAROLINE B. RANDALL.

Gen. Clinton B. Fisk rendered very efficient service at the evening meeting by encouraging words and asking for means to carry on the work.

May the forces move on in the strength and wisdom of God with a determination, perseverance and force which the enemy cannot equal and which shall insure complete victory for God, home and native land is our prayer.

R. A. T.

NEW JERSEY.

GLEANINGS BY R. P. PENFIELD.

The semi-annual meeting of the W. C. T. U. of this state, was held in Glassboro, Mrs. S. J. C. Downs presiding, April 16 and 17. The devotional exercises were especially impressive and helpful throughout.

The addresses of welcome by Mrs. Green, president of the local union; Rev. Messrs. Wheel and Stultz, and response by Miss Leavitt, of Vineland, were all excellent and well received by the convention. As the design of this meeting was mainly to instruct the new members and others in our methods of work, the superintendents of the various departments gave fifteen minutes each to their particular line of work, and ten of the fifteen heads of departments present gave instruction with so much interest as to be kept answering questions for a much longer time than was allotted them on the program. This was especially true of the juvenile work. Bands of Hope and temperance schools are multiplying fast all over the state

At four o'clock on Wednesday afternoon the memorial service was held in memory of "Mother Hill" of Newark, Mrs. Magee, of Belvidere, Mrs. Janvier, of Princeton, and Mrs. Fannie Flavel Collins, of second Newark union The service was very solemn and interesting throughout.

On Wednesday evening a large audience assembled in the Methodist Protestant church to hear Mrs. Bourne, of Newark, and Mrs. Carrow and Mrs. Carr, of Camden. It was a good meeting and a good round sum in the baskets kept up the interest to the last.

Thursday morning the business was resumed at 9 a.m. and continued until 4 p.m. At 2 p.m. Mrs. H. W. Smith gave a Bible reading—excellent every way. Her subject was "Christ, our Passover." At four Mrs. Baldwin met the children of the Band of Hope. She gave one of her best lessons and illustrated it with Sewell plates, showing the effects of alcohol on the human stomach.

At the evening service in the Methodist Episcopal church Mrs. Nobles presided; Mrs. E. A. Boole, of Brooklyn, was the speaker of the occasion. Her subject was "Deborah in Battle." Her lecture was a finished production, strong, forcible and pathetic.

A large number of delegates were present from new unions for the first time and the growing interest in the cause is very encouraging. Thirty-five unions were represented by one hundred delegates. Nineteen new organizations is certainly a wonderful gain. Raritan, the youngest of the nineteen, was represented by four delegates who came on Tuesday evening and remained throughout. (That is the way to get the good of a convention.) Vineland union reported that a petition 17 feet long had been presented to the mayor and council, asking, that no license, for any pool, or billiard room be granted in that town. Mrs. Seabrook of Keyport, superintendent of legislation had sent a petition bearing 8,000 names asking for constitutional prohibition.

Mullica Hill, one of the new societies, was represented by nine delegates. Montclair sent a goodly number of delegates, Jersey City with her new officers, Woodstown and Salem brought up new faces, and others were there in force and power, and every one seemed in the best of spirits and anxious to know how much they could do to push forward the gospel temperance car. There seems to be no drones in the hive.

Three new superintendents were elected to serve the remainder of the year. One vacancy occurring through the illness of Miss Scranton, of Oxford, superintendent of young ladies' work, was filled by the appointment of Mrs. Dr. Reed, of Camden. Two new departments were created in the state—soldiers' and sailors work and flower mission. The first was given to Mrs. H. T. Lummis, of Cedarville, and the latter to Mrs. Fuller, of Rahway. From Clayton we hear that the public schools of that place are to have temperance text books placed in them, and going further than some of the school boards they include all narcotics.

There is a general waking up on this subject and more enthusiasm manifested than ever in the idea of asking our legislature to give us a law requiring the school boards to place these books in the curriculum of study and teachers to be examined in them. Mrs. Nobles, our state superintendent, will prepare for this early in the season and be ready with petitions well signed for the next session.

On Sunday evening (20th) we were at Bridgeboro, a small village two and a half miles from Beverly. The house was well filled and the attentive listening showed a lively interest in the cause of temperance. There is a live organization already in working order which is exerting a strong influence in the neighborhood as was indicated by the number of votes cast for prohibition last fall. Rev. S. F. Gaskill, the pastor of the only church in the town (Methodist Episcopal) is an out and out temperance man and is doing all he can for the dissemination of truth. Oh! what a rolling up of solid prohibition votes there would be in this state if we could only bring the churches up to the point "of all at it and always at it," until the victory is won.

ILLINOIS.

CONVENTION OF TENTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT HELD IN GALESBURG MARCH 27TH AND 28TH.

Delegates were present from each union of the district except three and reports from all but one! With but one exception the reports were exceedingly gratifying; the work progressing, new lines of work taken up, membership increasing, the interest growing, the outlook very promising.

Mrs. Freer welcomed the delegates and Mrs. L. M. Davidson of Lewiston, responded. A pleasing feature was the presence of the delegates and members of the Galesburg Y. W. C. T. U., the only one in the district, and one giving bright promise for the future, rejoicing our hearts and giving new inspiration.

A table generously full of temperance literature, a gift from headquarters, was another agreeable and profitable feature.

The sessions of the convention were well attended by both ladies and gentlemen, especially in the evenings. The pastors of the city gave us encouragement by their presence and kindly sympathy and we have the assurance that the convention was both pleasant and profitable. The papers were unusually helpful and practical.

The report of the committee on plan of work based on the National and state plans was accepted.

The election of officers for the district resulted as follows: President, Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng, of Peoria; secretary, Miss Lina Jordan, of Elmwood; treasurer, Mrs. Wm. Reynolds, of Peoria; district organizer, Mrs. E. B. Hamblin, of Galesburg; financial secretary, Mrs. C. H. Smith, of Elmwood.

We start out upon the new year with fresh courage, strong resolutions, renewed zeal and "great expectations." S. E. C.

A CAPITAL SUGGESTION FROM THE TWELFTH DISTRICT.

I have been holding meetings in school houses in rural districts recently, with most gratifying results. All present were invited to take part and express themselves in regard to the need of temperance instruction in our public schools. In Ellington township two live, earnest, lady teachers (subscribers of The Union Signal), earnestly advocated it, are now teaching the same but said "We need a law to sustain us." An intelligent, but, alas, dissipated man, said, "Yes, by all means let the hildren be thus taught. Could I have had such instruc-on in my youthful days, I should not be what I am day. Teach temperance, yes, at home and at school d so save the coming men and women."

These meetings greatly please the people and become the general topic of conversation.

I am recommending this to all unions in my district and why may it not become general? It is within the power of any union. We also had a temperance spelling school in one place, with music, and recitation, in addition to the consideration of the question, "Ought we to have instruction in our public schools as to the effects of stimulants and narcotics on the human system." A unanimous vote in favor of it has been given thus far. I believe herein lies an opportunity for us all to build up public sentiment, almost by the wholesale. Ellington schools also gave a donation for temperance literature, which we gladly send them. We consider this an especially delightful feature to be commended, and we trust adopted. A short time before, No. 3 district subscribed for a copy of The Union Signal to be sent to Joliet state prison. Our next legislature we hope will thus understand what the people want. Now is the accepted time to work. Irene H. Smith.

Chillicothe.—The W. C. T. U. returns its hearty thanks to Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng, of Peoria, for her elegant gift in the lovely picture of Mrs. Lucy Webb Hayes. God bless the giver, and God bless her who has so positively spoken for the right from the highest position of any woman in our land, and may her noble example be an inspiration to every woman (who loves the right and hates the wrong) to stand by her principles, in whatever position in life God may place her, till the awful curse of intemperance shall be driven from our fair heritage.

Mrs. H. M. Chipperfield.

Anna.—The W. C. T. U. of Anna asked their pastors to preach temperance sermons April 15, and take a collection in each church for the German work. This was done and German tracts have been bought and will be sent to each of the four hundred German voters of the county. The Anna W. C. T. U. see that the foreign voters hold the balance of political power in their county so they have aimed their ammunition exactly at the right spot.

Ada H. Kepley, Supt. Foreign Work for Ill.

Rushville.—A thanksgiving temperance meeting was held in the M. E. church last Sunday night, in consequence of the glorious victory which gave 119 majority against license in Rushville. The church was crowded with an attentive audience, who listened with deep interest to addresses from Revs. Palmer, Ford, Knowles and Coats, Rev. J. B. Ford, presiding.

We have abundant reason to be thankful not only that our own town, but our neighbors in Lewiston, Yates City, and Bushnell, have also defeated the license ticket.

Mt. Sterling had four saloons each paying $800 yearly into the city treasury, but the citizens concluded they—the surrounding country and neighboring towns—could thrive better without the $3,200.

This thanksgiving meeting was a complete success and initiated a temperance sentiment that will deepen and broaden till all Schuyler county will feel its influence. All the speakers alluded in glowing terms to the work inaugurated and carried on by the wives and mothers of America, thus encouraging the members of the W. C. T. U. who, mayhap, some time become faint hearted.

Our Band of Hope is in a flourishing condition. An entertainment just given by the Band was a decided success. The attendance was large and the exercises were exceedingly interesting, as was plain to be seen by the fixed attention and evident enjoyment of the audience. The bright faces and sweet voices of the children in song and recitation, were sermons in themselves.

M. A. Bagby, Cor. Sec. W. C. T. U.

Lee County.—But for Dixon, Amboy, and Compton, this would be a prohibition county. May another year make the victory complete!

Mt. Sterling.—Tuesday, April 15, 1884 will not soon be forgotten by the citizens of Mt. Sterling. It was truly "Red Letter Day" for our city. All day long a very quiet but very vigorous contest was carried on between the license and anti-license men. When the polls were closed at seven o'clock every man on each side fairly held his breath in a lull of anxious suspense. Both parties claimed the victory but in only a half decided manner, but the final count gave the anti-license ticket a majority of nineteen. The new board will stand two for and four against license, with the mayor against license.

This victory is largely due to the efforts of the W. C. T. U. An incident of the election worthy of note was the part taken by Mrs. Henry Bartlett, who in the afternoon came walking up to the third ward polls leading a well known colored democrat, who has been on the sick list for some time and for whose vote the license men had been working hard. She asked for an anti-license ticket, which was handed to her, she passing it over to Charlie who folded it up and voted it remarking that he knew he had but a little while to live and he wanted to do right that little while. Mrs. B. deserves the praise she is receiving for her womanly courage and resolution; also the substantial evidence of the appreciation of her temperance friends which the silver ware presented her will always afford.

Kane.—The recently organized W. C. T. U. of Kane held morning and afternoon prayer meetings on election day which were well attended, and now we are rejoicing in the triumph of no-license.

Leland.—On the evening of April 14 a mass meeting was held at the M. E. church, called by the W. C. T. U. On the day following Leland stood up gloriously for temperance with a majority of two to one.

On the Thursday following the election the good women of the town gave an entertainment and supper at the Hall in honor of the board of trustees.

Our president presided during the short literary program preceding supper. It was a grand glad time for all and the union is rejoicing.

Mrs. A. M. Boston, Sec.

Elmwood.—We have won our election. Majorities this year 50 to 75. Last year 2 to 9.

Mr. Jacob Hoofstitler has done a grand work here. His power to shame license voters is wonderful. Those here who have heard many lecturers say his prohibition lecture of Saturday night cannot be surpassed in eloquence, profound statements and power of holding the intense attention of the hearers.

Clara Holbrook Smith.

Geneva.—I am happy to report that the temperance cause has won the victory of no license. As there is no W. C. T. U. here I assume the privilege of sending the report Mrs. J. W. Davison.

Mercer County.—The elections in Mercer county have all resulted in favor of temperance. Aledo has elected a strong temperance board. The Keithsburg election resulted in a majority for temperance, also Cable elected a temperance board. Now there is but one town in the county that has a licensed saloon and their election comes in the fall, then I hope this barbarism will be banished from our county never to return.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—Unions have been organized at Butler by Mrs. Glenn, at Antioch by Miss Pratt, and at Marissa by Mrs. Morrison.

—Mrs. Lucy Simpson is doing effective work in the fifteenth district. Has spoken at Rankin, Hoopeston, Danville, Ridge Farm, Chrissman, and will visit East Lynn, Rossville, Georgetown and other points before leaving the district.

—The fourth district will hold its convention at Oak Park on the 20th.

—Mrs. Jennie F. Willing has accepted the presidency of the second district.

—The sixth district will hold a county convention at Warren, May 17 and 18.

—A union with twenty-nine members has been organized by Mrs. M. K. East, of Duquoin, at Steelville. An advance step was taken by adding to the constitution a clause pledging the members to: "Never speak a disparaging word about a worker or a discouraging word about the work."

—A convention of the nineteenth district will be held in Mt. Vernon, May 27, 28, and 29. Miss Hood and Mrs. Louise S. Rounds will represent the state work.

—Mrs. M. H. Villars has just closed a series of revival meetings at Noble. Over one hundred conversions are reported.

—All applications for Mrs. L. S. Rounds must be sent promptly to Miss Hood at Headquarters as a round of appointments is now being made up for her.

A CALL TO PRAYER.

ISSUED BY THE NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION IN VIEW OF THE PENDING PRESIDENTIAL CONVENTIONS AND CAMPAIGN.

16 East 14th St., N. Y.

To All Christain People.—"Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." Our nation is today a legal partner in the business of selling intoxicating liquors as a drink. This fact defines the greatest, most immediate, most vital issue in National politics. Government of the people cannot successfully co-exist side by side with a traffic protected by law, whose result is to render the individual incapable of self-government. The homes of America are imperilled by the saloons whose patronage is constantly recruited from the fireside and the cradle. We therefore, mothers and sisters, wives and daughters, beseech all who believe in God, to join with us in solemn, earnest and importunate prayer that the hearts of the people may be so turned unto Him upon whose shoulder the government shall be, that by some party such principles may be declared, and such candidates chosen, that Christian men can conscientiously cast their ballots for the same, being assured that they have thus struck a blow for the National prohibition of the traffic in strong drink.

We name Tuesday, May, 27th, as this day of prayer and urge all our local unions to observe this date, enlisting all pastors and churches to co-operate, so far as possible, with us; and respectfully requesting pastors to preach on the subject of God in government, on the Sunday preceding or following this day of prayer.

We suggest the following program:

Tuesday, May 27th, 10 to 11 a. m. Subject: "For the Leaders of the W. C. T. U.;" That they may be wise as serpents and harmless as doves in this great controversy; that they may have the courage of their convictions and he true to the National motto, "For God and home and native land;" that a divine charity may pervade all their utterances, that they may meet argument with argument, misjudgment with patience, and all their difficulties and dangers with prayer.

11 to 12 m. "For Christian Pastors and Editors:" That their trumpet may give no uncertain sound; that they may demand the outlawing of the liquor traffic.

1 to 2 p. m. "For the Platforms of Parties:" That they may not seek to revive sectional issues, or glitter with old-time generalities, or conceal thought under subtleties of expression, but that they may pointedly declare that the saloon must go.

2 to 3 p. m. "For the Presidential Candidates:" That they may be men of such personal habits as the mothers of this Nation might safely hold up as models for their sons; men committed by character and public pledge to National prohibition; men who fear God and work righteousness.

3 to 4 p. m. "For the Christian Voters of the Republic, with whom rests the balance of power:" That their spiritual insight may be greatly quickened; that their consciences may be alarmed; that the cry from broken hearts, defenceless homes and ruined souls may stir their whole being to its noblest possibilities; that they may see that there is no postponement of duty which does not involve irremediable loss; that they may be convinced that the right is always expedient, and resolve to walk worthy of their high calling, and to make no compromise with wrong; that they may be inspired to see their duty to their home constituency, and to represent the women whom they love and honor by outlawing the saloon and protecting the home.

Let the leaders be—one for each hour—duly chosen and announced. Bible texts, illustrating and enforcing the five general topics here given, may be readily collated.

Yours for a Republic whose rulers shall be men of God.

Caroline B. Buell, Conn.,
Mary A. Woodbridge, Ohio,
Esther Pugh, Ohio,

STATE CONVENTION ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The annual convention of Michigan, will be held in Flint, June 3, 4, 5 and 6.

Miss Willard and Mrs. Hunt, with others of national reputation will be in attendance.

The Indiana W. C. T. U. will meet in annual convention at Seymour, May 28, 29 and 30.

Cincinnati is to entertain the Ohio annual meeting in June. The exact date has not yet been learned.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Missouri, will be held in Sedalia, commencing June 17th, and continuing until the 20th inclusive.

W. C. T. U.'s of sister states, members of other temperance societies, and friends of the cause are cordially invited.

Sedalia never does things by halves. In the future, as in the past, her guests will receive the largest-hearted hospitality.

Unions throughout the state should appoint their delegates, arrange for traveling expenses, and communicate at once, with Mrs. R. T. Miller, of Sedalia, that provision may be made for the their comfort and convenience. See circulars sent from Missouri headquarters.

Clara Hoffman, President.
Rose Phillips, Cor. Sec.

Pawtucket, R. I., voted "no license," 142 majority (2,368 votes cast.) The W. C. T. U. women were at the polls all day, It is a great victory for this town.

PLANS FOR FLOWER MISSION PRISON DAY.

I would say a few words relative to Flower Mission prison day. Our success in this department last year gives encouragement for the years to come; and you, who are practical workers, have now learned to know the needs of those under your care better than you could possibly have known them a year ago. You, who have taken part in this field, need perhaps no further instructions, the work has revealed itself to you as you entered upon it. But there are some states which were not organized in time, or not fully organized, for this department. To such I would make a few suggestions which will be after all only a reiteration of what has been said before. The plan is this: That each state should on the 9th of June visit all the state prisons, penitentiaries, and houses of refuge, within its borders, carrying tiny bouquets to which are attached cards, on which are printed, or written, carefully selected texts from God's Word. Secure beforehand the co-operation of all superintendents of prisons, asking them to have the prisoners assembled in their chapels at a fixed hour. Secure flowers enough to furnish each prisoner with a bouquet of "something white, something bright, and something sweet," having previously, by correspondence, learned the number necessary. Have members of the local unions assemble in their rooms to tie up these flowers tastefully, always adding the scripture text. Then go out with prayer and personal consecration to the nearest prison. Take with you, if possible, some gifted, holy woman, who could say a few wise, tender words to the assembled prisoners. Select a popular hymn in which ask all to join. There may be early associations connected with an old hymn which may be your most powerful ally. Have a word of prayer, and then give every one present a bouquet and a bit of good reading matter. Send into the prison hospitals your oldest, most truly pious women, and have them speak a word for Jesus at each bedside as they give the flowers. I would earnestly recommend for each of these hospitals the gift of a Bible roll with a select page for each day in the month, to be hung in some conspicuous place where all may see it. In the dreary hours of illness or the weary hours of convalesence, the truths and invitations of the gospel may find a tender lodgement.

Ask the local presidents to have prayer held in their unions during your visitation hours for God's blessing upon the sowers and the seed sown. Ask the prayers of all the pastors on the Sabbath preceding prison day.

June is at hand, and the time is short for all that remains to be done. Use the press freely. Get donations of flowers, text cards, good religious and temperance reading matter, and money. Designate the points nearest the prison to which the flowers may be sent. Stir up an interest, and be as wise as serpents while you are as harmless as doves.

I wish to add that prison day is not the only work of the Flowers Mission department. I understand there is such an impression abroad. Flower missions should be organized where there are sick ones to be comforted, needy ones to be helped, and sorrowing ones to be led to Him, who has "borne all our griefs, and carried all of our sorrows." They should be held weekly, or at least every fortnight. Our sole desire is to "let our light so shine that others may see our good works, and glorify our Father in Heaven."

JENNIE CASSEDAY.

THE FLOWER MISSION IN VERMONT.

A breath is wafted to me from Miss Casseday's room, which I wish to keep in motion.

She suggests that our flower mission superintendents give seeds to the school children and at the end of the season have a flower show.

This might easily be done in the larger towns of our state, or our organized counties might do this arranging for a "flower fair" in the largest town of the county.

Some of our artists might give us oil paintings to offer for premiums so that there should be an incentive for sending.

We would by doing this win our way and introduce a refining influence into many hearts and homes. Twice it has been my privilege to attend a "flower fair" in the "sunny south," the land of flowers.

The flowers were of every conceivable variety and arranged in every imaginable beautiful form in vases upon stands, tables, forms, wreaths, mounds, mottoes, etc. In one place was a tiny bed with pillow shams etc., made entirely of roses; in another a tea-pot made entirely of tea-roses, in still another we found potted plants and so on upon each side and down the centre of a large hall, making it well worth the small admission fee charged. Seats were placed about. At one end curtains were partitioned off for an ice-cream saloon.

In the evening the hall was brilliantly lighted and the band furnished music. I ask our county vice presidents or local superintendents of Flower Missions why we could not have something like this, adding temperance mottoes and literature, and while we benefit the world by their presence in hall, garden and the "shut ins," also bring in a little of the needful for our work?

CLARA EASTMAN,
Supt. Vt. Flower Mission.

AYER'S Hair Vigor cures baldness. Hair Vigor restores youthful freshness and color to faded and gray hair. It attains these results by the stimulation of the hair roots and color glands. It rejuvenates the HAIR and cleanses it. It restores to the HAIR that, either by reason of age or diseases of the scalp, has become dry, harsh and brittle, a pliancy and glossy silken softness of extreme beauty. There is no dye in Ayer's Hair and the good it does is by the VIGOR it imparts to the follicles, and the cleanliness and healthfulness of the condition in which it maintains the scalp.

AYER'S Hair Vigor renews the hair. Hair Vigor is the best cure known for Brashy Hair, Scald Head, Itching Humors, Tetter Sores, Torpid Follicles, and all other diseases of the scalp that cause the falling of the HAIR and its fading. Nothing cleanses HAIR of the nuisance of dandruff so perfectly, and so effectually prevents its return, as AYER'S HAIR VIGOR. In addition to the curative and restorative virtues peculiar to Ayer's Hair it is a toilet luxury. The Hair VIGOR is by far the cleanliest hair-dressing made. It causes the hair to grow thick and long, and keeps it always soft and glossy.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

Contains no deleterious ingredients. Its use prevents all scalp disease, secures against the hair growing thin or gray, and surely cures all baldness that is not organic.

BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

FROM THE NERVE-GIVING PRINCIPLES OF THE OX-BRAIN and WHEAT GERM.

VITALIZED PHOSPHITES.—Restores the energy lost by nervousness, weakness or indigestion; relieves lassitude and neuralgia; refreshes the nerves tired by worry, excitement or excessive sensitiveness, and strengthens a failing memory. It aids wonderfully in the mental and bodily growth of infants and children. Under its use the teeth come easier, the bones grow better, the skin smoother, the brain acquires more readily and rests and sleeps more sweetly. An ill fed brain learns no lessons, and is excusable if peevish. It gives a more intellectual and happier childhood. It does away with that feeling of weakness and exhaustion which impels to the use of alcoholic beverages, and directly counteracts a cause of depravity and suffering which has baffled the efforts of religion and morality. Not a secret remedy; formula on every label. For sale by Druggists, or mail, $1.

Miscellaneous Selections.

The drug stores of the city of Chenoa Ill., asked for a permit to sell liquors for medical purposes, and were refused, and their only resource is to take out a license at $1.000 per annum. Last year there were five saloons, and now we have only one legalized place where liquor can be obtained.

If you are seeking a good investment in real estate, it will pay you to consult Mr. James C. Young, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa. He is qualified to give the very best advice, is thoroughly reliable and has the endorsement of some of the most prominent business men in America. Our readers can rest assured that in any business they may transact with Mr. Young they will be honestly and fairly dealt with.

When a man takes hold of a hot poker we always notice that he has no inclination to hold on. It is different with hot whisky. Yet both burns, but mankind seems to think that the scars outside are worse than the scars inside. This is a want of judgment. The hot poker only burns the hand, the hot whisky burns the body, the brain, the head, the muscles, the manhood and the soul. The poker only makes a scar on the hand, hot whisky makes the whole man a scar, a blotch. The poker burn can be healed, the whisky burn is a living sore. If we are to take hold of either, give us the hot poker.

The use of light wines is advocated widely as the true cure for intemperance, and the countries of southern Europe have always been appealed to as evidence of its efficacy; but recent developments in the history of at least one nation held up as a proof of such logic has proven a veritable and disastrous boomerang. A few years ago, says the National Temperance Advocate, "the Chicago Tribune was very zealously advocating the use of light wines and beer as a remedy for intemperance. Total abstainers objected then as now, to the use of these lighter beverages as tending to develop an appetite for the stronger alcoholics. Switzerland is a wine producing country with the very best opportunity to test the efficacy of light wines as a safeguard against intemperance. But now comes the Chicago Tribune with a wail that Switzerland has become the most drunken country in Europe."

They tell us, said John B. Gough, that alcohol gives strength and nourishment. No, it does not, it gives stimulus. You sit down on a hornet's nest, and it may be quickening, but not nourishing. A man once said to a friend of mine: "You are fighting whisky, but it has done a great deal of good; has saved a great many lives." You remind me," said my friend, "of a boy who was to write an essay about a pin, and in his boyish way he said: "A pin is a very queer sort of thing. It has a round head and a sharp point, and if you stick them into you they hurt, and women use them for cuffs and collars, and men use them when their buttons are off. If you swallow them, they will kill you. For five cents you can get a packet of them, and they save thousands of lives." The teacher said, "What on earth do you mean? How have they saved thousands of lives?" "By not swallowing them," answered the boy.—Selected.

Signal Notes.

IN San Francisco, Cal., a firm doing business under the firm name of Lincoln & Co., advertise themselves as temperance grocers.

THE Journal of Education says: "The legislature of Vermont has wisely forbidden the use of tobacco by teachers and pupils in its public schools."

THE total amount that has been paid by the United States in pensions, on account of the late war is $644 944,917.58; or about two-thirds as much is paid out for pensions in twenty years, as is annually expended for intoxicating liquors. Think of this, ye who are in favor of the liquor traffic.

A NEWS despatch says that the Manitoba legislature has passed a resolution in favor of prohibition in Manitoba. If all the provincial legislatures were to do likewise it might not be without effect upon the Dominion parliament. The Ontario legislature endorsed the principle several years ago.

AMONG the regulations of a newly-formed church among the Zulus in South Africa was the following: "No member of this church shall be permitted to drink the white man's grog, or native beer, nor touch it with his lips." No need of prohibitory amendment to that church constitution.—Missionary Outlook.

AT Portland, Oregon, the grand jury which adjourned January 17, made the following recommendation: "It having been found impossible to suppress, we recommend the licensing of houses of ill-fame." This is the legitimate fruit of the "high license" liquor ordinance of the above named city. The arguments in favor of licensing the liquor crime are applicable to any other criminal act: the efforts of our "Christian statesmen" to legalize "the sum of all villainies" must rejoice the heart of every panderer to men's evil appetites and desires.—Toledo Good Templar.

A LAUGHABLE incident occurred at one of the school districts in Londonderry, N. H., at its recent school meeting. Two of the prominent candidates for the prudential committee were a husband and his wife. Some of the voters voted for the wife, supposing they were voting for the husband, not observing the Christian name. When the vote was declared it was much to the chagrin of some of those who voted as above stated. The wife came out victorious by six majority and has accepted the position and qualified. She has already hired the teacher for the summer term.

was the first preparation perfectly adapted to cure diseases of the scalp, and the first successful restorer of faded or gray hair to its natural color, growth, and youthful beauty. It has had many imitators, but none have so fully met all the requirements needful for the proper treatment of the hair and scalp.

HALL'S HAIR RENEWER has steadily grown in favor, and spread its fame and usefulness to every quarter of the globe.

Its unparalleled success can be attributed to but one cause; the entire fulfilment of its promises.

The proprietors have often been surprised at the receipt of orders from remote countries, where they had never made an effort for its introduction.

The use for a short time of HALL'S HAIR RENEWER wonderfully improves the personal appearance. It cleanses the scalp from all impurities, cures all humors, fever, and dryness, and thus prevents baldness. It stimulates the weakened glands, and enables them to push forward a new and vigorous growth. The effects of this [illegible] are not transient, like those of [illegible] preparations, but remain a long time, [illegible] its use a matter of economy.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 21. CHICAGO, MAY 22, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

THE W. C. T. U. of Iowa now proposes to go into the enforcement of law. An enforcement committee is to be a feature in every local union.

WE are glad to get a word of substantial encouragement concerning petitions. It appears that the latest legislature of Kentucky was so moved by these silent appeals that as one school house after another was fenced round with prohibition, a member of the senate arose and said: "I move this body adjourn, for if it remains in session two hours longer all the state will be under prohibition."

WHATEVER may be the outcome of this year's presidential contest let us be thankful that the scenes of Andrew Jackson's inauguration cannot be repeated at this day and age of the world. Then the drunken carousal at the executive mansion was so disgraceful that it was necessary to have the furniture upholstered anew and the carpets changed. Public sentiment grinds slowly but it grinds out no such grist as that to-day.

W. C. T. U. women are serving on juries in Washington territory. In Seattle both judges and attorneys publicly express their entire satisfaction concerning the fitness and ability of the new jurors. Said a deputy district attorney the other day "This new law is the grandest thing that has happened to Seattle. I tell you it looks nice to see these cloaks and bonnets hanging up there and there is only one spitoon in the court room, and that is seldom used."

THE graduating or commencement season is coming. Three-fourths of the high school graduates in some states already reported are young ladies. Boys, these girls are not going to be "free to serve" always. The very acquirements which you are neglecting and they are striving for, will oblige them to be your superiors in civil as well as social life. The heads that are full of ideas are not going to be occupied solely with "frizzes." Look out for them.

THE great Burton brewer, Mr. Bass, is dead. His great work in parliament was to prohibit hurdy gurdies, and it is now possible by the action of this renowned advocate of personal liberty, for any resident arbitrarily and without resort to local option to crush out and destroy the business, without a penny's compensation, of the unhappy organ grinder who chances to discourse of "Annie Laurie" under his windows. It seems that such great men as Charles Dickens, Alfred Tennyson, Wilkie Collins, Holman Hunt, and Thomas Carlyle united in a testimonial to the illustrious prohibitionist for his prompt and decisive measure. He paid the government nearly $4,000 per diem in malt tax and license duty.

THE Brandy King has decided that it is fusel oil and not pure ethyllic alcohol that does the harm. He has created for himself a monopoly of the latter in Stockholm by a system of steamer service by which he transports the drinkers to his own distillery free of charge, giving them pure spirits and a free ride into the bargain. It begins to look as if his announcements of reform are rather premature, and that the "boom" he has been working up for himself is only a shrewd advertising dodge.

WHY is it that the quivering flesh appeals so much more strongly to popular sympathy than the quivering spirit? Physical wounds gap wide and are ministered unto. Their makers are punished. But the wounded spirit looks out from tear-dimmed eyes, speaks brokenly over trembling lips, gasps out its misery only with a last breath and is forgotten in death as in life. There are thousands of these suffering souls all about us. They walk beside us on the street, they sit at our tables, they go with us to the house of God. Drink curses their lives. If it were physical injury, law would long ago have redressed the grievance. May God avenge their wrongs and take away their sorrows, and that speedily!

THE champion billiardists are recording testimony to the value of total abstinence. Says Slosson:

"A billiard player who wants to keep up to concert pitch, must be just as careful of himself as a pedestrian training for a race. I never touch liquor. Sometimes I take a whiff or two of a cigar and then throw it away again, because I know it has an effect upon my nerves. No matter how small the effect may be, it might be just enough to cause a break down in the middle of an all-important run in a game."

Certainly, when alcohol is proven the great unbalancer of the muscular mechanism.

MR. MURPHY'S work in Chicago is attaining grand proportions, and no wonder—"his heart of love would all mankind embrace." Up to Saturday night last, over 4,000 had taken the pledge and donned the blue ribbon, among them some of the most notorious drunkards of the city. One, a fallen clergyman of the Unitarian church, long-prayed-for and besought by his brethren and men and women outside his church, is now standing "clothed and in his right mind," in the might of Another's love and strength. Still another is a well known criminal lawyer whose excesses have been country-wide, and have driven his family from him. These are the trophies of this Christian conqueror and he lays them down with humility at the feet of his King.

The meetings have become central at Farwell Hall which is crowded night and day. Mr. Edward Murphy will join his father in a few days and it is easy to predict that the movement will sweep the city. The daily press is on Mr. Murphy's side most strongly, and that though he is a prohibitionist of the most radical sort. He believes, however, that "Love is the only good in the world." And who shall gainsay him?

CHICAGO grows more overtly wicked every year. Nearly thirty years ago, the performance of a sacred drama on a Sunday evening, threw the virtuous city into a fever which in its course worked off the virus of the miasma.

Ten years ago the low theaters and concert halls began to open slily, then to illuminate their entrances, then to entice by the music of orchestras, and now nearly every theater in the city, high toned and low toned, flaunts its Sunday performances in the newspapers and makes the street approaches brilliant with electric lights and alluring with music.

It goes without saying that every rum and beer shop is open, front door and back door standing wide. Grocery and provision stores drive a brisk trade on Sunday morning side by side with the barber, the newsdealer and the butcher, and for several weeks past the paving of an important thoroughfare has gone on seven days in the week unchecked by civil authority or Christian sentiment.

Now comes the proposition from prominent German citizens to give us Sunday races. It is the to-be-expected blossom of the tree that has been flourishing among us unhindered by pulpit ax, or civil pruning. Now the thunder of dulled and edgeless weapons makes little impression on its tough bark.

Good people, wake up!—or else for your long sleeping you will not even recognize, nor hear the voice of the angel who may in God's mercy be sent to warn you to depart from this Sodom.

THINE OWN WAY

Take Thine own way with me, dear Lord;
Thou canst not otherwise than bless;
I launch me forth upon a sea
Of boundless love and tenderness.

I could not choose a larger bliss
Than to be wholly Thine; and mine
A will whose highest joy is this,
To ceaselessly unclasp in Thine.

I will not fear Thee, O my God!
The days to come can only bring
Their perfect sequences of love,
Thy larger, deeper comforting.

Within the shadow of this love,
Loss doth transmute itself to gain;
Faith veils earth's sorrows in its light,
And straightway lives above her pain.

We are not losers thus: we share
The perfect gladness of the Son,—
Not conquered,—for behold, we reign,
Conquered and Conqueror are one.

Thy wonderful grand will, my God!
Triumphantly I make it mine;
And faith shall breathe her glad "Amen,"
To every dear command of Thine.

Beneath the splendor of Thy choice,
Thy perfect choice for me, I rest;
Outside it now I dare not live,
Within it I must needs be blest.

Meanwhile my spirit anchors calm
In grander regions still than this;
The fair, far-shining latitudes
Of that yet unexplored bliss.

Then may Thy perfect, glorious will
Be evermore fulfilled in me,
And make my life an answering chord
Of glad, responsive harmony.

Oh, it is life indeed to live
Within this kingdom strangely sweet!
And yet we fear to enter in,
And linger with unwilling feet.

We fear this wondrous rule of Thine,
Because we have not reached Thine heart;
Not venturing our all on Thee,
We may not know how good Thou art.

—Jean Sophia Pigott.

THE CHURCH OF GOD; THE WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION IN RELATION TO IT.

BY MRS. ROBERT WATTS.

The tender conscience of some excellent Christian people has been disturbed with an idea that the work of the W. C. T. U. was supplanting that of the church! It has been said that many women will labor for the different branches of the widely organized work of their "union" who were never willing to labor in the church at all.

It has also been said that some women are so engrossed in the success of the temperance work that they lose sight of any obligation on their part to go beyond temperance work.

What is the church of God? Who and what compose it? There is a visible church and there is an invisible church.

The visible church consists of Catholic and Protestant sects of various denominations having a common faith, founded upon the teachings of the Bible. The visible church is a house of worship. The visible church is a body of people banded together, governed by a common law for a mutual good. The visible church is a school where the members are trained in Sabbath school and taught the Word of God.

In order to appreciate the advantages of such an institution as a visible church we have only to withdraw it from among us and see what the result would be in a community.

Suppose that every house of worship was destroyed in any one of our large cities; darkness impenetrable comes over one at the mere mention of such a possibility. What demoralization would ensue. Hope itself ends in despair at such a contemplation.

How soon would the current of evil doing, like a surging billow, sweep away the work and severe labor of centuries of right doing. How noisy and restless the masses would become without this reminder, the sweet peals of the church bells, that call to holy prayer.

How monotonous the daily recurring of the same duties, the same order of things, the same rules and regulations of every day life, with no other aspiration than that of the hour.

The marriage bell, the funeral dirge and the baptismal font would no longer be associated with church ceremony. A dark picture indeed is that of a community without a visible church.

Now if the visible church is of such vast importance, and if its destruction would bring such desolation, the church invisible is of much greater consequence. Without the invisible church the visible could not exist. The invisible church of God is composed of every nation under the sun, and comprises the church militant and the church triumphant. It embraces all believers in Christ who have lived in the past ages, all who will live in the ages to come, and all believers who are living now.

This great invisible church, or Christianity, as one may call it, is the center from which goes out the electric spark that must pervade the world. This spiritual light, or pervading truth, or central power is to be blessed of God for the salvation of the world. This spark emanates from the Divine Being whom we worship. We gather in a place called the visible church to offer to the great Invisible, "though He is not far from any one of us," the homage of our hearts; to show men by visible means that we adore the invisible.

This life or spark in the soul gives vent to its consciousness by outward acts. It manifests itself by a desire to see that which is evil become good. Whenever a human soul is touched by this electric spark from the invisible it becomes a reformer. Reform, reform, is the echo from the awakened spirit.

It was this sentiment burning in the hearts of Christian women that laid the foundation of the W. C. T. U. The time had come when the women of the visible and invisible church felt that a gigantic evil was existing that would destroy all the agencies at work for good unless some power was brought to bear upon it to check the ever increasing current of iniquity.

This insidious enemy had stealthily crept into the church. The eyes of the people were blinded to its deceptive seductions. Many seemed to be sleeping while the Satanic work was accomplishing innumerable crimes that were daily perpetrated of every conceivable nature. Crimes that filled jails, work houses, prisons and orphans' homes with victims of its own cruel devices.

The W. C. T. U. in its origin started out to battle with "intemperance," so called. It gave the alarm to awaken the indifferent to arise and discuss and agitate the great question of intemperance. It besought people to think upon the destruction it was bringing upon the homes of our country. The blight it was shedding upon the youth of the land. How as a vampire it was sucking the vital spark of the soul of manhood and womanhood.

It was called the "Woman's Christian Temperance Union" because the inspiration came from Christ; because it went about the work before it in the spirit of Christ; because the arguments it took to sustain it were the words of Christ; and because it sought by earnest prayer the spirit of Christ to accomplish its end.

The W. C. T. U. planted deeper than it thought. It had not conceived in the beginning to what lengths its roots would spread. True the seed was sown in prayer and watered with sorrowful tears and aching hearts, and faith and trust in an almighty living power was the sentiment that pervaded all the minds of its members.

Yes, we planted deeper than we thought. With intemperance there came a whole troop of disturbances nearly related to intemperance. The work branched out to meet the exigencies of the hour. A whole progeny confronted us. The families of the intemperate were suffering in ignorance of the laws of heredity and hygiene. Children were born into these homes heirs of disease, suffering, deformity and degradation. The union established a department of temperance literature, giving valuable information of how we should live, what we should eat, and teaching the necessity of bodily cleanliness for bodily health. Some of the little tracts that have been published for this department are real gems and contain knowledge that would have been the means of giving health and vigor to many sickly bodies if the rules had been observed which they contain.

The families of the intemperate were cut off from the wages that were rightfully theirs. They must go hungry and cold, pinched and oppressed while the natural protector was spending his hard earned wages in a saloon or with companions who were destroying both soul and body. In order to meet this cruel injustice a department of the relation of intemperance to capital and labor was organized. We planted deeper than we thought.

It had become a hazardous thing for one to travel upon the railroads. Daily papers were filled with heart rending accounts of terrible destruction of life; human beings mangled and crushed were the victims of reckless drunken railroad employes; men falling asleep from the effects of intemperance while on duty, and permitting the iron horse to dash into destructive speed in darkness, into a precipice or into a river bed, and carry with it hundreds of women, little children and men utterly unconscious of what was before them, a department of work among railroad employes was organized, and wonderful has been the success of this department. There has been an appreciation on the part of the officials of railroads to co-operate in this work that is quite gratifying.

Intemperance begets idleness and idleness is the forerunner of thriftlessness and poverty. The outcome of these two traits is, in the modern acceptance of the word, a veritable tramp! Tramps are of both sexes and they generally fill the almshouses and police stations. Then we found the jails and prisons full of criminals incarcerated there for crimes committed in a state of temporary insanity from the effects of intemperance. An appeal came from them and a department was organized called the prison and police station work.

There comes every month thousands of emigrants from all parts of the old world. They come to our country to find permanent homes. They become a part of our body politic. Their habits and manners of life have been altogether different from ours. They cling with tenacity to the ways of the old world and are not inclined to adopt a new order of things. Their beer gardens and Sabbath day amusements are contaminating to the youth of our Republic. The imperative necessity of a department of work among foreigners has led to its organization and some of the most efficient workers in the union are laboring there.

In order to stem the tide of intemperance the current must be stopped that produces the tide. Moral suasion is a good expedient, and all efforts put forth are good in their several ways, but the law must prohibit the liquor traffic and sustain these efforts if permanent good is achieved. A department called legislative and petition covers the ground and we have at the head of it a rare woman who is gifted in oratory and persuasion in manner, and beautiful in Christian graces. When she appears before the representatives of the people with keen logic she proves the righteousness of our cause.

The five departments of work which I have mentioned are a few of the many that are organized to further the aim of our union. I have chosen these five because they are representative and cover such a vast field.

What our country needs today is an awakening of the masses of the people to the importance of the study of the Bible. This full tide of civilization will lead to excessive luxury of living which will enervate and destroy the nobler aims of life. We are in greater danger of being destroyed by luxury and idleness than any of the nations which have preceded us.

A knowledge of what the Bible teaches will bring us to see the temptations that are surrounding us and lead us to avoid that which has caused the downfall of other governments. We have a department of evangelistic work with one at the head of it who is a representative woman. Her writings have been read by thousands of people and have been translated into other languages. She gives a portion of every month to the preparation of leaflets for the study of the Bible and every woman who is an enrolled member of this union would be benefited by reading these leaflets.

What relation does the Woman's Christian Temperance Union bear to the church of God? What relation does the daughter bear to the family? What relation has music to sound? What relation has the branch of a tree to the roots? What relation has light and heat to the sun? What relation has oxygen to the atmosphere?

An old legend tells of one who labored with a noble purpose, but sometimes met with a taunting word and scornful smile, but who in the end was repaid for all he had ever done.

We are not laboring for this life only. We shall not be disappointed if we do not live to see such results as we pray for, but this we do know that we are doing the work that Christ teaches in His holy word must be done before He appears again in the clouds as He appeared when he left the earth.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THE CONTINUATION OF THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC?

BY MRS. R. A. THURSTON.

Who is responsible? The winds and the waves, the rocks and the caves, echo, Who?

Even the walls of our homes, our places of business, our polling places, our legislative halls and even our sanctuaries echo, Who?

The Society of Friends in their book of church discipline have a set of what they call "unanswered queries" which are intended for self-examination, as heart searchers; to which each individual is to give answer within his own heart to God. In some such spirit I am prompted to present a few queries to be answered truthfully by our own hearts to Him who is indeed the searcher of hearts, that if possible we may prove ourselves innocent from the great transgression.

We question this organization first, as judgment must begin at home.

1st. Are we, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, letting the light of temperance practice keep pace with that of our temperance precepts?

2nd. Do our loved ones at home, know by our consistent Christ-like lives, that we mean what we say? And do our efforts to make home pleasant, bright and pure, prove a sufficient attraction to them, so that they rather be there than elsewhere?

3rd. Do we so keep up with the times in our reading as to be able to discourse with them upon the important questions of the day, so that at eventide the family reunion may be one of mutual benefit? Do we cultivate tact in introducing at such times our vital principles of reform, with the beacon light of prohibition ahead, thus helping to develop in our voters and perhaps future law makers,an abhorrence of evil and a love for the good? And lastly, do we appreciate the power of woman's influence?

If we cannot answer these questions affirmatively, then in a measure we are responsible for the continuation of the liquor traffic.

Now I put the question to business men, who neither buy, sell, or use intoxicating liquors, Are you in any way responsible? We have known many such who when asked this question to reply emphatically, No!

Let us see. That young man in your employ, do you like him? Yes, with but one exception; he will go to the saloon occasionally which unfits him for the time for business. He is a minor, did you say? Does not the law forbid the selling of liquor to such? My friend if you do not help to enforce that law, you in part are responsible for the selling. And that poor woman who went from your shop with work just now, why does she seem so forlorn, she surely is not one who drinks? Oh, you reply, her husband is a sot, a regular drunkard, he is no longer her support; she has not only to support herself and children, but him also. But how is this I ask, does not our law forbid the liquor-licensed man to sell to such also? And is it not your privilege and your duty to go with this employe of yours and forbid the seller of this soul and body destroyer from going further in his distructive work with him who otherwise might have been the loved and cherished head of a happy comfortable home? If this is not done are you clear from the responsibility, not only of its effects but of the continuance of this nefarious business?

Again, are you men of means, are you owners of real estate? Was it you who sold to A. B. or C. as the case may be, the lot for the brewery which is now going up, or the stand where drunkards are made? Did you for the sake of a few dollars compromise principle? And still do you feel you are clean, that you have had nothing to do with the work of destruction in the past, and are free from doing ought which encourages its continuance? And are you doing your part in having the Sabbath laws obeyed in regard to this traffic? Search your own hearts gentlemen and see if you can say, "I am clean."

Now all ye who have the privilege, aye the right to say by your ballot, who shall make our laws, do you realize the mighty power you are, either for the continuation or the overthrow of this destructive business? You can if you will (according to the character or principle of the men you put in office), either shut down on the manufacturer, and close the door of the saloon, thus putting the terrible tempter where he belongs, out of existence, or else you can say, "Go on with your work of destruction; as one generation you lay low another will be ready to take its place, and those we put in office will make protective laws for you. They will not only give you leave to do this thing, but will protect you in it." Which shall it be? Do you know, you are the power behind the throne? Is that power exerted for good or ill? Are you saying to those you have sent to Albany or to our National capitol, "Gentlemen we want our homes protected, our wives and children clothed and fed; we want love, joy and peace to reign there, but if liquor comes in, these all go out, so we send you to headquarters to make such laws as shall give us safety, or what is better, open the way for the people to put such an article in the great law book of our state, the constitution, as shall forever prohibit its manufacture and sale, accompanied by such statute law as shall enforce the same."

Is this the commission given your legislators? Or do you say, "Gentlemen while we know what poverty, misery and sin follow in the train of the saloon, while we know what brutes we men sometimes become in consequence of their existence, wife-beating, children-starving brutes, yet we ask you to regulate this evil, not to abolish it, (because we do not believe it can be done), but make such laws for us as shall make the business respectable; add to the license fee so that the low one horse groggeries shall have an end. Your predecessors have already declared that none but men of good moral character shall engage in the business. Pass if you please the bill, that $500 or $1,000 be made the future license fee, then we think a much better condition of things will exist; less misery, less poverty and crime."

Which, my friends, is the echo of your voice? The former, leading to prohibition, or the latter, which means a high license law (or the continuation of the evil)? If the latter then you are the bearers of a heavy responsibility.

Had I time I might speak an effective word to the law makers as well as to the voters, but I hope you who are to follow in this discussion will not forget them. We want to hear the echo of their voice in this matter. They may be as pure as an infant as far as personal contact with intoxicating liquors is concerned, yet if they do not make and sustain laws forbidding its manufacture and sale for drinking purposes, there is a heavy responsibility resting upon them for its continuance.

Hon. Hiram Price, United States Indian commissioner, in his annual report, says an Indian, in speaking to him in reference to whisky among their people, said:

"We don't make whisky ourselves, and we tell our young men not to drink it, but we can't help it as long as white men sell it to them. We don't know how to make the white men take the whisky away, but the great men at Washington do. We hope they will help us."

It may be you, sometime in the future, may be among these great men. What would you do then, help to take the whisky away, or force more upon them, as the high license system does? The brewers favor high license. They now tell us enforcement of the high license tax has not injured the sale of beer, and it is plain that the saloon business is now in the hands of a better class, and that the brewer is doing a better business. It involves no limitation of the personal rights of the public. The workingman suffers nothing, for he gets just as good a glass of beer for five cents as he used to, and the saloon keeper does a better business, for he sells more.

There is yet one more class to whom or of whom I would say a few words and from whom I would hear an echoing voice. The church of Christ on earth, professing to be followers of the meek and lowly Savior; endeavoring, professedly, to walk by the light of His spirit, do you know of that light growing brighter and brighter on your heavenward way? As it is written "The path of the just is as a shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." If so you cannot be helping to prolong this great soul destroyer. You must rather be helping to eradicate this giant evil. Some of the advocates of high license say, "prohibition laws can not be enforced because there is no power behind them to enforce them," and in the same breath declare that behind the high license system there will be the church and that it has power to enforce any law.

Just here dear friend is the secret of it all. The church can, if it will, arise in its might and enforce any law, and make it too, for you have the great Lawgiver on your side, and today you are a mighty army, having for your Captain one who has never failed in battle.

Then how is it that the rum party, or rather the high license party, lays claim to you?

How can you be in league with the license advocates whether high or low, without being responsible for this wonderful power that defies the righteous laws of the land, and tramples them under foot, increasing meanwhile the awful tide of death and misery, all for their own selfish greed of gain?

Perhaps you are no more aware of the fact that in so doing you are giving encouragement to the rum power than the clergyman of England, who it is said, in his anxiety to check the evils connected with drinking, took a public house in his parish in hand, put in his coachman to manage it, to look after the quality of the beer, etc.

Are we fellow Christians in league with such a system as this?

"A crisis is upon us, face to face with us it stands,
With lips of solmen question like the Sphinx on Egypt's sands.
By the future that awaits us, by all the hopes that cast
Their faint and glimmering beams across the blackness of the past;
By the blessed thought of Him who for earth's freedom died,
My people, O my countrymen! choose ye the righteous side."

SHORT TEMPERANCE TALKS.

BY MISS C. S. BURNETT.

No. 9. "Why our cause should succeed."

The temperance cause should succeed because it is the cause of the people. No other question so nearly concerns us as individuals or as a nation. In its issue is wrapped the hopes and happiness of a large portion of our youth. Temperance to them means a good name, a good home, financial prosperity and a prospect of happiness here and hereafter. Intemperance means infamy and disgrace, great physical suffering, poverty and misery with no ray of light beyond the grave. "No drunkard can inherit the kingdom of God." In our republic the grandest possibilities open before every young man. An education free from cost; a home for the asking, fame and fortune for the seeking. Yet what avail, are these to him who has fastened upon him the habit of drink? Ambition dies; the mind is uncultivated, the farm is unsought, fame and fortune give place to infamy and poverty. The "form divine" loses the image of its Maker. The countenance that tells of inward peace gives place to the haggard look, that says all peace is gone and in its stead is hatred, remorse, and all the vile passions that demons are heir to. Yes, the happiness of our people pleads loudly for the success of our cause. Then, think of the thousands of innocent sufferers, women to whom existence is a burden. Love and hope are dead. All the sweets of life are turned to gall. Death only can bring relief; and over the unmarked graves we might place a slab bearing the words, "Rum killed them." The eye that never sleeps watches these unknown graves, and in the hereafter the blood of these innocent victims will cry for vengeance on their destroyers.

Then the children, helpless innocents, for whom the father has provided no inheritance save one of poverty and shame, how dare you face them and say this traffic is a righteous one?

The health and happiness of the individual, the success of our schools, the prosperity of the church, the very existence of our nation as a free republic whose everlasting foundation shall be virtue and intelligence, all demand that this traffic shall cease. The rum power has always ruled this land and it is now time it stepped down and out. The power has become insolent as did the slave power, and like it, will soon feel the power of awakened Christian conscience.

Our cause will succeed for it is the cause of humanity, the cause of right.

"And right the day shall win,
To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would sin."

Correspondence.

MRS. CHAPIN IN GEORGIA.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL.—Upon reaching home from the Florida and Louisiana conventions, I found letters awaiting me from the Potomac to the Gulf, and each writer feeling that their particular case, was most in need of immediate attention.

It was my rest week however, and as the dear women of my own state, despite my most earnest protest, insisted on electing me president, (although I have but little time to give them from my other duties), I always, if I have strength enough left, devote my rest time to South Carolina, so without a day's delay I started for Laurens, a flourishing town in the upper part of the state.

The call to this town, was evidently an inspiration of the Holy Spirit. Without any especial appeal, it was "borne in" upon the hearts of two of the most prominent ladies in the town, that "The Master had come, and called for them" and in answer to prayer for direction, as to the especial work required of them, the need of workers in the temperance cause was made so manifest, that without any communication with each other, they both wrote by the same mail, urging me to come and help them. Is it any wonder we had such glorious success? Ministers of all demominations, entered most heartily into the work, and large unions were formed, both among the white, and colored, also a Band of Hope.

A pleasing incident took place while we were organizing. The president of the high school, at the head of his corps of students, marched in, and each and every one signed the pledged and put on the white ribbon. I was honored by having a colt and a lovely baby named for me in Laurens.

At Newberry, the next town visited, I took five hundred names for temperance, and the mayor and council, in a body, honored me by occupying seats on the platform.

Edgefield, (regarded the Sebastopol of our state against temperance) came next. The election for license or no license, was to come off in a few days and the liquor men were making a desperate fight. Our congressman took time from his arduous duties, to help them with tongue and pen, but He, who was for us, was greater than those who were against us.

On the day of the election the ladies went into the church at six o'clock and remained praying all day, until at evening one of the ministers came in and announced a victory "for God and home and native land," and amid tears and rejoicings, the bells which had been tolling all day, pealed forth glad notes of praise to Him who had given us the victory. The colored people kept the pledge they had given me to "stand up for God at the polls." The Rev. Dr. Walker, the venerable rector of the Episcopal church, and Dr. Wightman, son of the bishop, did valiant service. The night after their defeat, the brave whisky men broke into the seminary, and destroyed everything. The young lady principal is superintendent of juvenile work. She found her Bible in the creek, and her treasures all scattered, but took joyfully the spoiling of her goods, because of the great victory God had vouchsafed to us. Does not this vandalism prove the liquor traffic in every sense a war against women and children?

In the other towns, Lexington, Greenwood and Hodges, I formed large unions, in all, adding to our temperance roll in ten days, one thousand one hundred and eighty names. If we only had the means to do one tenth of the work that grand general, Mrs. Mary Woodbridge, plans and carries on in Ohio, South Carolina, would in a few months take her place with Maine, Kansas and Iowa. I am very hopeful of my state however, for God is with us.

Having promised to attend the Georgia Sunday school convention, I went with Mrs. Sibley to Columbus. The convention gave to the W. C. T. U. exclusively, their principal evening, passed resolutions endorsing us and our work and recommended that the 13th Sunday be devoted to temperance instruction. Temperance night was a great success; Miss Mobley gave us a fine recitation, Mrs. Sibley, one of her charming talks, and I did the best I could. The majority of the delegates had never seen women on the platform before, but I think from the way they applauded us, and waved their handkerchiefs at us, and wept and laughed and resoluted, that they won't ever say we "shall not do that way some more."

The convention was composed of the representative men of Georgia from all denominations. Mr. Wm. C. Sibley was there to report his Sunday school. As he gave them the church. Our Georgia president does not have to get on her knees to a narrow minded superintendent before she can teach the boys that "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and he that is deceived thereby is not wise." Some of the other temperance women can't do it.

From Columbus I went to Hamilton, Georgia, where the young ladies started the work. I spoke in the morning at eleven to the whites. Had a large audience. Took a great many names, among them the cadets of the Military Academy. How it gladdened my heart to see these noble young men wearing the pure symbol of a glorious manhood.

In the afternoon at two, I spoke to the colored people, and all the whites who could find room. This meeting, it is impossible to describe. The Holy Spirit came down in great power upon both whites and colored, and unless you were familiar with the excitable nature of the colored race you can form no idea of the scene. A delegation had been sent to take me ten miles over the mountain to Chipley to speak that evening, but my colored friends insisted my hands should be shaken by each one of them, to the chorus,

"Yes we will meet you in heaven,
Hallelu, Hallelu,
We will meet you in heaven Hallelujah."

The state of my poor crushed hands, after the shaking you can imagine. I have been told since, that if I will do the grasping myself, the result will be less painful. I must try it. The drive over the mountain, in private conveyance was a rough one, and we did not reach our destination until dark. We had a fine audience, and I think every soul in the house joined. Some of the young ladies from Hamilton, went over with me, and went round with the pledge, arguing as "they had (before they learned better) offered wine to young men, they would embrace every opportunity of undoing the harm of their having done so by offering the pledge in future."

The saloon keepers were furious, and went round the next morning threatening the men who were trying to escape from them by signing the pledge, with vengeance. Is it not time for Christians to wake up?

On my way to Columbus, in the cars, a few days afterwards, the conductor informed me, that the cars would stop over a few minutes, to allow the Hamilton folks to bid me good bye, before I left Georgia. I was invited to the platform. Drawn up in double line were the cadets; conspicuous upon their uniform was our white badge. The ladies were out in full force, and the glistening white teeth of my colored friends, gave me an idea of what they would do if I stepped off that platform. In front of all, stood Col. Mobley and a young lady holding a basket of exquisite flowers, which in the name of the people of Hamilton, the Colonel presented in a beautiful speech to me.

On my way home, I was halted in Atlanta, and spoke to several thousand children assembled at Ponce de Leon, for the county pic nic.

The liquor men leave no stone unturned to get the colored vote and whenever I am around, they redouble their diligence. At a meeting the other night, Old Uncle Simon, who had been crammed for the occasion, called out, "Missis, there aint one bit of harm if you don't get drunk.

I asked him if he could tell exactly when a pig becomes a hog? He could not. But Uncle Bacchus made an answer which I think good enough to tell even THE UNION SIGNAL.

"Missis, he is hog all the time, only you call him a pig when he's little."

But for fear you will put my letter in the waste basket I will stop although not half through.

S. F. CHAPIN.

STANDING BY THE SPEAKERS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I am glad to see the attention of the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL called to the question, "Who shall introduce the speakers employed by the W. C. T. Unions?" and I was not a little comforted to know that so capable a worker as Mrs. Carse expressed some of the reasons why we should do it ourselves. It is a small matter, but straws indicate which way the current runs, and I believe in the importance of "little things".

Last fall I was one of a committee appointed by our local union, that canvassed our village for the purpose of raising money to furnish a course of free temperance lectures. We called at the homes and also at all places of business—shops, stores, factories, etc. So little was thought of the publicity of this part of the work that it was not once mentioned by any of us; but when the "heat and burden of the day" had been borne, when the money had been gathered, the lecturers secured and "all things" were "now ready," the question arose, Who shall introduce the speakers?

Then followed such a conference as you described "in a certain nameless locality," with the decided difference that she who occupied the position taken by Mrs. Carse, was defeated utterly, not "on the merits of the case" but on the ground that we "do not want to make ourselves prominent nor get ourselves before the public." In vain it was urged that at this day and in this land where men and women jostle one another in every avenue of life, when a woman can appear as a public speaker without exciting any comment on account of her sex, it was surely a right and proper thing for us to perform a slight official duty of this kind.

Is it sisterly, is it Christian, to thus continually cast even unintentional reproach upon those noble women who by their public work make our great National Union possible? Rather let us say with the loving Ruth, "Where thou goest, I will go." If the earnest host of our W. C. T. U. women, whose duty it is to stand in public places have honor and praise, shall not we "the rank and file" be content to shine with reflected light? And if they must endure humiliation and unmerited censure, then surely every loyal and generous soul should hasten to take a share and "rejoice in the affliction."

Yours faithfully, MRS. EMMA CAIM.

THE WORK SHOP.---NO. VII.

Home again—"Saloon Literature"—Alcohol Superceded in Medicine—A Dakota Postal—Model Letter from Atlanta—How to Take the Collection—How to Last—Dr. McDonald, of California.

DEAR SISTERS OF THE LOCAL UNIONS:—Home again after two months' absence in thirty-seven different towns. There is good cheer and growing zeal all along the line. My table is heaped with correspondence; Anna G., the perpetual penholder, is busy; Mrs. Zimmerman helps with "excerpts" from letters; Mrs. Calder, a stenographer, has a table downstairs; mother looks after assorting the papers and keeping her huge "scrap book" "up to date," so you may imagine ours is a busy, and I assure you a happy household. From the other of our "twin cottages" (both under the same roof) my nephews and niece come with the mails—of which there are four each day—and our editor is the busy woman of the establishment. So you may picture the humming temperance hive at Evanston as not all unworthy the ceaseless toils of the 150,000 who are "at it, all at it, and always at it" in the work of home protection and saloon destruction.

So many choice items have accumulated in these flying weeks that my time, preoccupied by constant engagements, is inadequate to the needful assorting. The following I give as nearest at hand:

A young gentleman in Evansville, Ind., found that for every twenty-five copies of Harper's Weekly sold at the news stands two hundred copies of the Police Gazette are called for. Will not the women of Indiana and other states emulate Mrs. Kepley of Illinois in securing the aid of the state's attorney to banish the disgraceful traffic in this saloon literature by the enforcement of law?

If our women would read in the local unions Anthony Comstock's "Traps for the Young," they would become aroused on this subject. Forty per cent. discount is offered our members on all copies ordered. Send to the author 150 Nassau street, New York.

Here is a note from one of our finest chemists and is good news indeed. It should be passed along the line by collating from it a paragraph for all the papers that will publish the same:

DEAR MISS WILLARD:—Can the doctors get along without alcohol in medicine? is doubtless asked you often. I send you the catalogue of the Wheeler Chemical Works with the leaf turned down at saccharated extracts from which you will see that about all the more valuable vegetable drugs can be had in a palatable and reliable form, entirely non-alcoholic. You may thus be better helped to answer objections.

God bless you and your work says the son of her who, now above, always gave you her warmest sympathies and prayers. Respectfully yours,

C. GILBERT WHEELER.

A query from Dakota, received this morning, is worthy more than a passing thought. Let our local unions follow out this idea and let us know results:

Should not the rocks, stones and fences cry for temperance as well as for beer and tobacco. If texts, facts, statistics, etc., could be painted on high board fences, on farm fences, in picturesque spots and unsightly places, what a blessed rest it would be to eyes pained by the advertisements of saloons and tobacco shops. I long to see our W. C. T. Unions use the brush in their localities and invest in a bulletin board near the railroad to catch the eye of the traveller. It seems to me these things must pay or our clothing houses would not advertise so largely in suburban towns out from C.

MARY F. DOBSON.

One of the model letters received "at this office" is from an Atlanta lady. It sums up at the close in five numbered questions the points of four pages, thus saving the time of re-perusal. Let us help each other all we can by brief, comprehensive letters, or, if necessarily long, give a "syllabus" at the close.

The largest collections taken by our societies result from a thoroughly "worked up" meeting, the collection following the address, introduced by a brief, bright explanation, and with no intervening hymn, ladies acting as collectors. Some of these come provided with pretty baskets adorned by white ribbons, the society providing said receptacles as a part of their regular outfit.

Our Mrs. Prather, of Cleveland, a marvelous success in raising money, usually chooses a rainy day for her exploits, as a less busy time, and one the selection of which shows courage and persistence in the solicitor and touches the purse strings of the solicited through sympathy.

On being invited to represent us at Chautauqua August 15, Mrs. Livermore returned a message which for pith and point is worthy to be put up as a motto before the eyes of our weary and overtaxed workers. Who else will manifest so much of well-reasoned discretion? After this year I solemnly propose to rise to a similar level of common sense. Dear sister workers why not "So say we all of us"?

I cannot promise to attend any summer meetings. The summer months I reserve for rest and study, and to give those up to talk would be to impoverish me, mentally and physically, for the rest of the year.

M. A. LIVERMORE.

I close with a letter from this morning's mail, written by that California temperance millionaire, Dr. R. M. McDonald. As he is likely to come prominently before the prohibition home protection party convention at Pittsburgh, Pa., July 23, I must preface his letter by a brief personal sketch:

A tall Kentuckian of the best type; "much every way; big heart, big head; fine, clear-cut countenance; blue, scrutinizing eyes; large form, wrapped in an ample overcoat, its pockets full of scientific temperance documents," this is Dr. R. H. McDonald, president of the Pacific Bank, prohibition candidate for governor, and temperance leader "on the coast." Go with me to his elegant home; see his mother, fair and beaming at eighty-four; and his talented sons, who, though educated largely abroad, have never tarnished their fine physiques with the alcoholic or nicotine poisons. Go to the "Star Band of Hope Hall" on Sunday afternoon and hear his accomplished daughter sing to the little street Arabs of the society, while the doctor presides over the meeting and introduces the eastern temperance workers, your correspondent and her secretary, Miss Gordon, after whose speeches he presents each dear little child to us, patting them on the head, whispering words of praise for each, and emptying his great pockets of goodies and children's literature. Remember that he has a heart and hand open for every good work; know that he has a fortune of seven millions, and pray heaven to send us more wealthy men with wealthy hearts.

NEW YORK CITY, May 14, 1884.

DEAR FRIEND:—I left California on March 24th, and arrived here on the 5th inst., stopping by the way in Missouri, Kentucky, Virginia, Pennsylvania, Washington, D. C., Norfolk, Va., and other places. Altogether my trip has been pleasant, and I hope profitable.

It gives me great pleasure to see that wherever I have been the people are alive to the importance of the cause of temperance; and I mean by this in most cases the twin evils ardent spirits and tobacco in all their injurious forms. There seems a powerful undertone like a ground swell making its presence known in every part of our country. The masses are rapidly preparing for the revolution soon to be started by them, and which sooner than most people suppose will sweep like a cyclonic whirlwind over and down on those who stand in its way. I feel this change in every nerve and muscle of my body, and with me it is but the sympathy with what I see on all sides depicted in the faces, actions and expressions of the masses around me. All they seem to lack is trustworthy guidance; they need instruction and zealous leaders of experience and efficiency. These I believe must soon rise up, for this is God's work, and He will not long suffer His children to keep crying out against this giant evil that is menacing destruction for all, without showing them a way out of Egypt. I feel more and more every day that God is with us in this work, and with His aid victory is sure to reward us in the end.

In my own wine and brandy cursed state I can assure you temperance is gaining ground rapidly, and all the papers deign to notice and criticise our movements, some of them in contempt it is true, like the jaded horse wincing when the saddle rubs the tender spot. I firmly believe that in spite of its exceptional obstacles, California will be one of the early states to wheel into line and petition for a prohibition amendment to the National Constitution. The Independent Order of Good Templars have about four hundred lodges in the state and are doing a grand work. Its glorious sister, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, forms the reserve, united, energetic, trustworthy and ready in all emergencies. They would really vote as they pray, and how much longer must they be denied this right? With woman's vote and our moral atmosphere reformed as it would thereby surely be, we should almost imagine we were in a new world. Let us not be found growing weary in this important hour. Our continued labors, prayers and trust will surely lead us to victory in God's own time.

With most heartfelt wishes for your success, good health and happiness, I am yours very sincerely,

R. H. MCDONALD.

Is not this a breezy outlook—and does it not show that the author knows the electric current of the people's thought as professional politicians cannot?

NEW BOOKS.

It is gratifying to note the increasing supply of temperance stories for Sunday school libraries. Whether a new demand creates the supply so promptly met by leading publishers, or the new disposition to inculcate temperance truth on the part of publishers, leads to the ready furnishing of the same in palatable shape, is not material, now that the books are here and there is "more to follow."

The American Tract Society has just sent out a new series of cheap and attractive books suitable for Sunday school or Band of Hope libraries. The books are bound in stiff paper, and are printed in large readable type, on clear paper, for ten cents each, or twelve volumes in box for $1.25. They comprise stories like "The Little Captain" and other reprints, together with entirely new tales written for the occasion. A series of the latter sort, by Lucius M. Sargent, including "Groggy Harbor," "Kitty Grafton," "As a Medicine," and nine more is before us and merits all we have said of any series.

Dr. Richardson's new book, entitled "Brief Notes for Temperance Teachers," is also on our table, and is a timely aid to the instructors in public schools in those states under the new law. The book is dedicated to John B. Gough, with fine appreciation of his splendid gifts to the temperance cause. Coming as its teachings do from an acknowledged master, every conscientious teacher will regard them as of invaluable assistance in the new field of instruction. The hints are as the title promises, brief, but have to do with every feature of the alcohol question. With this book in the hands of the teacher and Prof. Steel's "Hygienic Physiology" the scholar's "gift," the coming men and women are sure to be well taught concerning the nature and effects of this dire enemy to physical and national life.

We are pleased to note also the publication of two books treating of the still vexed "Wine Question," from a Swedenborgian point of view. These are treatises embodying the spirit of Swedenborg's teachings and the philosophy of the New Church concerning the character of the wine that is approved in Bible teachings. By the light of the science of correspondences, familiar only to students and professors of this faith, the author and publisher, Dr. John Ellis of New York, shows that there is nothing in the sacred writings that will justify the use of fermented wine as a beverage. The second of the two books was written as a critique of the review of The Academy (a New Jerusalem church paper) on the first. The author publishes them at his own expense for free distribution in the families of Swedenborgians, and gives the use of his stereotyped plates to any person desiring to extend the mission of his work.

Another new book of purely literary character is the "Life of Oliver Wendell Holmes," by E. E. Brown, and published by D. Lothrop & Co. It is rarely wise to give a man's biography during his lifetime, but in this case the effort to present one of the most genial men of letters and of science is vastly entertaining. The biographer is discreet in allowing the brilliant subject to tell so much his own story—not that the book is in any sense an autobiography, but Dr. Holmes has given so many glimpses into his real nature in the pages of the Autocrat and the Professor that these are happily made use of in the attempt to portray his character and to narrate the facts of his history.

We are indebted to the same publishers for some little paper-bound editions of Pansy's stories—among them the ever charming story of "Tip Lewis and His Lamp," only twenty-five cents in durable paper covers. Also her pretty sketch entitled "An Hour with Miss Streator."

We have before noticed Rev. D. P. Livermore's able examination of, and answer to the arguments against woman suffrage of the "Remonstrants" of Boston. It is multum in parvo, full of direct refutation of these and unequivocal testimony to the value of this extension of suffrage wherever exploited.

The National Temperance Society's Publishing House send out Number Five of Miss Penny's excellent collection of Temperance Readings and Recitations. It is just the thing for Band of Hope superintendents.

CHARLIE'S STORY.

BY A. H. HUTCHINSON.

The family pledge hung on the wall,
And on it you could see
The names of mamma, Mary Jane,
And Charlie—that is me.

We didn't dare to ask papa
To write upon it too,
So left a space for him to fill;
'Twas all we dared to do.

He saw the pledge as soon as he Came in the door that night;
And when we saw him reading it
It put us in a fright.

He didn't say a word to us
About the pledge at all,
But oft I saw him look at it,
While hanging on the wall.

And every night when he came home,
He stopped and read it through.
We all kept still about those words,
Although we knew them true.

Four weeks had passed, and then one night
When pa came home to tea,
He took the pledge down from its nail,
And then he turned to me:

"Go get the pen and ink, my boy,
And let me fill that space,
It looks so bare," he slowly said,
A queer look on his face.

And then mamma sat down and cried,
(She said it was for joy),
And Mary Jane she cried some too,
I didn't—I'm a boy.

But papa says he did not drink
Since that first night when we
Had hung that pledge upon the wall
Where he our names could see.

And ever since that space was filled,
Mamma just said tonight,
Though dark may be our little room,
One corner now is light.

WHO IS THE COWARD?

BY META E. B. THORNE.

"Ho, ho! I knew you wouldn't dare to do it! You haven't any courage! Girls are always cowards anyway!" and Tom shouted with laughter at little Bessie's trepidation, for having followed him in "Follow my leader," out upon a long branch of the great old apple tree, whence he had easily dropped, but she dared not follow, and found great difficulty in returning to the trunk and then by the ladder.

"Tom," called a voice from the window overlooking the scene, "help Bessie down, and then come here."

With a red face Tom obeyed, and was soon standing by his mother's chair.

"What do you wish, mamma?"

"Tom, how old are you?"

"Eleven, mamma."

"And Bessie?"

"She is nine."

"Which is the taller and stronger?"

"Why I, of course, mamma."

"And is it probable that Bessie can do all that you can?"

"N-n-no,— I-spose-not."

"Then is it manly to taunt her with her weakness? And you said she had 'no courage.' But who went to the dentist without any demur to have a sound tooth extracted because I told her it was necessary, while you had to be hired to have yours attended to, although badly decayed. Who was it, too, who confessed about the breaking of that beautiful statuette, although, as I since discovered, her brother was the most to blame?"

"Indeed, mamma," and Tom cast down his blushing face, "I didn't think of all those things, and I guess Bessie has as much courage as I. But she did run in and stuff up her ears when papa had to shoot poor Carlo. And she hates for me to have fire crackers, and she screams when she sees a snake. Then every one calls girls and women cowards, and I thought it must be so."

"Bessie is very nervous, my boy, and the sudden snap of the exploding cracker sets her little heart palpitating; then that terrible fright with a snake, when she was only five or six years old, nearly caused her a brain fever, haunted her dreams for weeks; and she was very fond of Carlo, you know; so that it was a great grief to her that he had to be shot. But as for girls and women being cowards, I am not sure that they do not evince quite as much courage as men and boys, moral courage especially. History records many examples of this.

"Were you not studying in your lesson recently, the account of those brave women, of Bryan Station, Kentucky, who, more than a hundred years ago, to supply their husbands and children with water, ventured boldly out to the spring, all about which they knew the savages were lurking in large numbers?

"There is a somewhat similar story of some Holland milkmaids, during the Spanish wars. They lived on a farm near the city of Dort, which the Spaniards were about to besiege, and about which a large force had been placed in ambush, waiting to attack the unsuspecting city.

"One morning the milkmaids going out to milk saw some of these soldiers hiding under the trees and hedges. They made no sign of their discovery, however, going on with their work, chatting and singing merrily, but on their return told their master, who went at once to give warning. Spies were sent out who found the report to be true. Then an order was sent for troops to be brought in, and for the sluices to be opened, by which means all the land surrounding Dort was flooded, and many of the enemy were drowned; the rest fled and the city was saved. Of course the farmer and his brave servants were generously rewarded, and to commemorate their heroism coins were struck off bearing the image of a milkmaid milking her cow.

"Not long ago you were reading a series of sketches of various famous women, Boadicea, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Maria Theresa, and others, many of whom were even more valorous than the men of their time.

"So now, Tom, I trust you will be, not only too manly, but too careful of the truth, to ever taunt any one with cowardice. Remember that each one shows his strength in his own way, and many who avoid needless danger, and so are considered cowardly, are morally brave and strong."

"Yes, mamma. I see it is so, now I think of it, and I myself, know of some such cases. Frank Jones, who likes to drive wild colts, and is always daring some one to fight, or to try some dangerous thing, was so mean, such a coward, he let little Willie Gray be blamed for breaking the school house window, and Willie would not tell of him, though he knew, and though Frank had often called him coward, because he is so quiet and cautious."

"Well, Tom, I am sure after such an illustration from your own observation, I need say nothing more. You can see for yourself that true heroism dwells in the soul, and inspires the whole character. Remember too, that rashness is not a sign of courage, and that one should only venture into real danger, for some worthy object."

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S TALK.

Dear Children of the Prevention Army:—You are likely to have work enough to keep you busy out of school hours. There is the Creche that I hope you won't forget to work for, for those babies are dreadfully hungry little creatures and have to be fed and cared for, and that of course has to be paid for, and so every little money-making device that is honest, and that your parents approve, I trust will engage your best efforts. And now comes a request from the Commander of the Prevention Army saying that away out in Utah, where some good ladies are teaching the Mormon children, there is a Band of Hope that greatly needs some temperance papers, full of pictures and stories.

Now don't you think you could save up your own papers, those that are distributed every week in your Band of Hope, and after reading, fold them carefully and make them up into little packages of six, then join all your packages together and mail them to Miss Annie Baker, care of Professor Benner, Salt Lake City, Utah territory, who will distribute them among the Band of Hope children of that city and of the territory? Who'll send first and gladden the heart of this brave Captain of our Army with a great bundle of nice story papers? Now as a reward for listening to all of this talk from Captain Deborah, here is a beautiful story from one who signs herself "Aunt Bethiale:"

Last spring I went to teach in one of our mountain counties, and on my arrival in the neighborhood was of course told of some of the troubles I should encounter. The profanity among the scholars had been the trouble, I was told. "But," added my informant "the Band of Hope may make it easier for you."

"Band of Hope!" I exclaimed, "if you have a flourishing Band of Hope I am not afraid."

"Oh, yes; they have a new Band and the little fellows are powerfully pleased. They have eighty members I think."

And will you believe it, though I had over sixty pupils there were but two instances when anything like swearing ever came to my ears.

One day some little ones came running in quite excited. "Oh, Miss—, Tommy's been swearing!" "Where is Tommy?" I asked, but through the window I saw the little fellow, scarcely six years old, sitting on a stone and crying bitterly. The sight rather softened my heart, and I do not think I hastened to the scene of action. My scolding words all left me, anyhow, before I reached him. I asked him kindly to tell me all about it, and he sobbed out, "Oh, Miss ——, I sweared, but I won't do it again. Will they take away my badge? The girls said they would."

The little fellow wears his badge yet, and more, he did not get scolded that day."

FLOWERS FOR THE SALOON.

BY H. M. G.

To-morrow would be a holiday,
And crowds would throng the street;
So the town itself must look its best,
Arrangements all complete.
Not only the people must be attired
In fitting holiday dress,
But places of business attractive made
To welcome the coming guest.

So a dear little boy of tender years
Came in the evening hours
To a friend of mine, and made request
For a gift of beautiful flowers.
"Papa wants them for his saloon,
For to-morrow," said the child;
But the hand outstretched to pluck the flowers
Paused, and to this replied:

"If they were for your home, my child,
I'd gladly give you flowers,
But never shall a saloon be decked
By any gift of ours."
Flowers for the home, for the little child,
For the maiden in her bloom,
But the place that blights and darkens the home
Should be shrouded in funeral gloom.

THE F. I. T. F.

BY ZELOTA MATHER GARNER.

"How could he have known my needs? I never saw the gentleman," he exclaimed glancing down at his well worn garments! He could not have meant it in charity! This is what mother would call a special providence. Why should not I? Fifty dollars! I can scarcely believe it," glancing at the order again. "This certainly does place me under obligation to Mr. Raymond. I cannot well refuse to accept his proffered hospitality since he has put it so strongly on his son's account. I must not be selfish."

"I am sure Mr. Pulsifer is dressed well," said Florence, when Dick called her attention to him as they were returning from church the following Sabbath. "Is there not some mistake about his poverty?"

"I hope there is," replied Dick. "I do hope he will go with us to Aunt G's."

Charles Pulsifer did not offer any excuse. A merry party arrived in good time at the home of that estimable lady.

We would like to give the reader the details of the day, the warm reception which made the guests feel perfectly at home, the bright, cheery parlor with its festoons of green, the dinner, the Christmas tree, but better than all that, there was no wine that day and no brandy in the pudding sauce, although it took some argument on her brother's part to persuade Aunt G. to forego her customary habit.

"Now, my boy, what are your plans for the future?" asked Richard Raymond of Charles Pulsifer a few days later as the two were comfortably seated in the library. "Confide in me as you would in a brother. What profession do you intend to follow?"

"I like teaching better than anything else, but there is no eminence to be attained in that profession. The wisdom which age and experience brings has its value in law or medicine. There are rounds in the ladder of success to be reached in the ministry; but the teacher is reckoned superannuated at the age when in other professions he would have just reached his prime. Such dotage has but a poor place in the economy of nature."

"Then, sir, like the great master of common sense 'you can write no more ballads because verse makers are generally beggars.' You have an eye to solid results. Well, taking the expression of the masses, the most difficult problem is to understand what to do in life. To what other calling have you an assurance you are adapted?"

"None. I feel assured that I should succeed as a teacher."

At this point they are interrupted by a vigorous ringing of the door bell.

"Tonight is the meeting of the H. J. G. K." said Richard Raymond.

"You mean the F. I. T. F."

"Oh, yes; the F. I. T. F. You see I've promised the vagabonds to join their nonsense. I wonder what they expect of me. Money, I presume; they said something about a library or museum. Well, I shall not mind the money if it will encourage them to make men of themselves."

Presently the boys are assembled in the back parlor and the F. I. T. F. is called to order by Billy Metcalf, its president. Dick Raymond reads the minutes of the last meeting. After a few preliminaries Mr. Raymond is admitted and asked if he is ready to subscribe to the requirements of the society.

"Ready, your honor," says Mr. Raymond, rising in the presence of the august assembly and crossing his hands with mock solemnity. The secretary reads the first obligation, which requires of the candidate frugality.

"Frugality! Most certainly I can subscribe my name to that. Frugality has been the corner stone of my success," said the candidate signing his name to a bit of paper.

The next resolution requires industry in the pursuit of knowledge, and in honest labor.

"Better and better," writing his name with a flourish.

"Now your pluck, sir," said the president. "Give the candidate a little time to screw up his courage."

This resolution requires of the candidate total abstinence from the use of alcohol in any form as a beverage, and from tobacco in all its forms; he pledges himself, also, to be pure in his language and conduct and not to indulge in profanity.

There is a momentary hesitancy on the part of the candidate, while every eye brimfull of mischief, is intently fastened upon him.

The boys know Richard Raymond's weak points. They know that he is fond of a glass of choice liquor, and that he knows the flavor of a choice cigar. It is rumored that once upon a time he became so enraged at a span of vicious mules, which he was driving, that he uttered an oath. Billy Metcalf chanced to be with him at the time and the committee who had in charge the consideration of the candidate's eligibility felt obliged to make this fact known to the F. I. T. F.

Ah, reader, if you are a parent, please consider. Richard Raymond is not the only father who has been weighed in the balance by his own and by his neighbors' sons and found wanting.

"Well, boys, you've rather got me there, but here goes," writing his name in large capitals. "I'd be ashamed not to have as much courage as any of you," glancing at Dick. "Here is my fee, tossing a ten dollar gold piece at the secretary. That is about the price of my indulgence. I've never wasted much money in those things, but it is more than I should have wasted even if I'd not joined your nonsense. My eyes were opened by reading the lectures upon the nature of alcohol and tobacco, which you gave me a few days ago, Mr. Pulsifer."

Three lusty cheers are given for the new member, then the secretary advanced and pinned a neat badge upon the lapel of Richard Raymond's coat. It contained the initials F. I. T. F., meaning Frugal, Industrious, Temperate Fellows.

Richard Raymond catches the enthusiasm of the occasion.

"We'll make a success of this enterprise boys. I will deposit a hundred dollars to the credit of the F. I. T. F. tomorrow morning. I'll see a few more of the fathers, and in time we'll have one of the finest libraries and museums connected with the schools of H———, there is in our state. We will have scientific lectures upon the effects of alcohol and other narcotics. We will have enough of those lectures which you gave me Mr. Pulsifer, to supply every family in our town. If the people will persist in poisoning themselves they shall do it with their eyes open, that is if my money and influence will help accomplish it."

After the adjournment and the last boy has gone, the two men sat for some minutes in the extreme silence which follows without speaking.

"I see, I see!" exclaimed Richard Raymond at last, "how the great change has been wrought in Dick. You are eminently fitted for your place. You must consent to fill it. I've a proposition to make, sir. Give me your word that you will follow teaching as a profession, and I will see you through college without so much hard work. You must promise to do as you have here, teach morals, as well as language, mathematics and science. Give up study this year, put your best energies upon your work, and as I said I will see you through college."

"I can not become a mendicant, Mr. Raymond."

"I understand your feelings my boy. When you leave H———, I propose to put my son Richard at school under your supervision, I shall put sufficient money at your disposal to pay the expenses of both.

"Whatever indebtedness you incur you may take time to refund. Do you understand?"

"I do. You are very generous."

A few years later and Charles Pulsifer is installed as superintendent of one of the finest schools in the state.

He stands before Richard Raymond ready to refund the money loaned him. After receipts are passed, he says:

"I have one more favor to ask of you sir. Can you entrust the happiness of your daughter in the hands of a poor school master? She has given me permission to ask you."

"In the hands of a frugal, industrious, temperate fellow? Most certainly, if he is her choice. And with her I will give a dowry, which, if rightly invested, will preserve one teacher from a 'beggarly old age.' By zeal in your profession I expect you to acquire a competency of unmeasured value, though it be not represented by silver and gold."

In time Florence Raymond will be Mrs. Pulsifer. The F. I. T. F. has become an institution. Richard Raymond is very proud of his son Dick who takes the honors of his class this year. Miss Virginia who is almost a young lady is anticipating the wedding which she says must be in keeping with papa's wealth and position, but which she says never would have come about but for that Christmas at Aunt Ginger's.

The Sunday School Lesson.

June 1.] Third Quarter, No. IX. [1884.

TOPIC: CHRISTIAN LIBERTY.

LESSON TEXT.—Gal. 4: 1-16.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free: Gal. 5:1.

TIME.—A. D. 57.

PLACE.—Greece.

1. The Judaistic church at Jerusalem had sent its apostles into Galatia, troubling the church there with its legality and formal rules, averring that Paul's teaching was lax and unscriptural, and that the churches he had founded were no churches in fact, because of the absence in their worship of Jewish rites and ritual. Paul writes very considerately of these apostles, and the church behind them, saying no evil of them and in no no wise discounting their beliefs, save to say that this child of God, the Jewish race and church, was in its childhood subject to the bondage of authority that includes the heir in his minority as well as the slave. Now he would have these Galatian churches know the liberty which is in Christ Jesus. It was a bold stand to make, this superseding of law by the new liberty. Two men even of the apostles were equal to pressing this innovation. The hardest to urge of all reforms is that which cuts off and takes away old customs and traditions. This is emphatically true of the temperance reform. It cuts off and takes away what has been considered an innocent enjoyment. It says that which has been called the gift of God is the "cup of devils." Let the steadfast heroism of the first century characterize every apostle of this reform of the nineteenth.

2. Liberty cannot be bestowed all at once, nor until the training of obedience has wrought in the spirit that submission to the law of love that must ever govern even our freedom. Everybody's right to be free is larger than anybody's liberty, and no large liberty is possible where the liberty of one restricts that of the many. Christ's law is the only one under which everybody may be truly free. When it is the dominant purpose of all souls to do unto others as they would have others do unto them, then and not till then is human freedom assured. This state of the soul is reached by the schooling of law,—by the discipline of obedience,—the alchemy which transmutes selfhood into "otherhood."

George Macdonald says, "When God's will is our law, we are but a kind of noble slaves; when God's will is our will then we are His free children." This is the liberty wherewith Christ makes free—the lifting of the yoke of our self will—the work of grace by which God's will becomes ours.

3. Christian liberty is not consistent with any form of personal slavery. Slavery to opinion or to any habit is not possible to Christ's freeman. If one is bound by prejudice Christ waits to make him free. He who is the Way to the Truth in the Life is not to blame if men and women shut their eyes to the truth and so remain in error. He would gladly knock all shackles from the mind as well as the body. If one is fettered by a questionable habit Christ longs to strike those fetters off. If tobacco or liquor or any other evil has enchained the Christian soldier, there is freedom from all the long forged bonds of appetite to be found in Christ. He takes away appetite or He holds it in thrall. According to your faith be it unto you.

4. The "rudiments of the world" are indeed beggarly. Who that has ever been free would willingly walk back into the servitude of bondage? And yet there are those who have "tasted the heavenly gift" and yet fall back, entangled by some filmy threads of this world's devising, into the slavery from which they were at great cost redeemed. Even for these Christ stands holding out the emancipation of His gospel—pressing them to a return to His joyful, willing service. May all such hear His voice and know His liberty once more!

THE third meeting of the executive committee of the W. C. T. U. for Western Washington was held in Tacoma, Tuesday 22nd. The time and place of meeting of the annual convention was appointed for Wednesday and Thursday, June 18th and 19th. Preparations are being made for a series of open temperance meetings to be held in Seattle, and it is the intention of the temperance people to have a grand rally at Olympia, prior to the territorial election.

THE TRUE REVIVAL.

Many times during the past few weeks has Deborah's song of triumph been sung by the women who have gone forth to battle in the strength of Israel's God against the foe that more than all others has caused such desolation in their homes, and returned victorious. Many times, too, has the refrain been borne upon the air, "Now if we can only enforce the law, make it a success and so ensure victory another year." Why is it that this fear rises in hearts otherwise so glad and joyous?

Is it not because it has so often been found easier to do some grand, heroic deed in time of excitement, than to do the unheroic every day deeds that make up the sum of an average life? It is one thing to cast the vote necessary to carry an election. It is quite another thing to sustain that vote three hundred and sixty-five days of the year by a consistent life and an unswerving loyalty to the principles upon which the law is based, even though at the risk of boycotting.

If one were to ask, What is the great need of our temperance reformation today? must we not say, conviction of its necessity on the part of Christians, a clear cut apprehension of the evil of intemperance and pungent conviction of individual duty and responsibility in regard to it.

Till such conviction takes deep hold of heart and conscience, our temperance work will be superficial, its life without stamina and force.

We need not so much a revival of temperance, as a revival of conscience. All the artificial and conventional notions men have of the sin of intemperance, as against social order and the rights of men, must be put away, and this sin as the curse of the race and destroyer of souls, as the fountain-head of iniquity, sending its streams of waste and ruin in all directions, as a sin against God—as He sees and abhors it—must be brought home to the conscience, and become a reality most personal.

"Times of deep and strong religious movements, which have left their track on the ages and their mark on the church, have always been times of deep and pungent conviction of sin."

Equally true is this of any great moral reform. Give to us one and all the courage of our convictions, has been the prayer on the lips of our "Rock of Ages women" ever since the dawning of this wondrous crusade. Gloriously has their prayer been answered. Nobly have they stood by the convictions inwrought in life itself by sad experience.

Now the prayer upon their lips is that they may have strength to hold on where victory has been won, wisdom to match the enemy's cunning in winning and holding new points, and that their brothers may stand shoulder to shoulder with them, ready for any and every emergency, strong in the strength of an honest, straightforward manhood which heeds "the wise man's" injunction:

"Let thine eyes look right on, and let thine eyelids look straight before thee."

"Wherefore lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees, and make straight paths for your feet lest that which is lame be turned out of the way, but let it rather be healed," is the message coming to every man and woman with the love of God or of humanity in their hearts.

Shall we heed it?

MORE ABOUT PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES

THEIR TEMPERANCE RECORDS.

Samuel J. Randall, of Pennsylvania, is a total abstainer, so is Senator William Frye, of Maine, and John G. Carlisle, of Kentucky, all for the same reason—excesses of the past. They have made a noble fight for their manhood which should encourage every reformed man and insure them the respect of all good people. Senator Jos. McDonald, of Indiana, is a moderate drinker and open opponent of prohibition. Senator Ben Harrison, of Indiana, is a member of the Presbyterian church, and what is better, a practical Christian and total abstainer. He and Senator Joseph Hawley, of Connecticut, are considered the best candidates of the Republicans. Senator Alison, of Iowa, is a social drinker and a man who follows, but is not brave enough to help make, public opinion. Senator James Wilson, of Iowa, has the courage of his convictions and is a prohibitionist and total abstainer. Senator Colquitt, of Georgia, is a total abstainer. Senator H. W. Blair, of New Hampshire, is thoroughly sound on all the great questions of the day; a civil service reformer, a prohibitionist who has the courage of a martyr, and is author of the educational bill which devotes seventy millions of dollars to our public schools—the greatest measure adopted by the senate in our day.

Gov. St. John, of Kansas, is a favorite candidate with temperance people. His record is written in the hearts of American home-keepers.

Samuel J. Tilden and Thomas A. Hendricks are opponents of prohibition and would furnish wine at the White House. Choose you this day who shall serve you, Americans, and remember the homes of the nation as you choose.

In making arrangements for Mrs. Foster's work in Southern California, it was necessary, for want of time, to pass by a number of towns where the people were ready and eager to hear her. Of one of these towns it was said by the workers in a a larger neighboring town: "You will not need Mrs. Foster, you have no saloons."

A dear woman replied: "Is it because we have no saloons that we cannot have Mrs. Foster? O, then I wish we had saloons."

The words came with that wonderful fulness of meaning that always pierces to the heart's core, and that can never be mistaken by those who have seen the shadow, and felt the chill of rum's awful eclipse. Two days after this sudden death called the heart-crushed sufferer away; and the son whose ruined life gave such sharp emphasis to her cry of distress, had to be hunted up out of the saloons of a neighboring city cursed with the legalized liquor saloon, in order that he might receive the telegram sent him to tell of his loss. Mere local option seems such a small safeguard, when "the accursed thing" is everywhere within reach. When shall mothers' hearts prevail against greed in the struggle for prohibition?

A master stroke for scientific temperance education has been made in congress this spring by the Hon. H. W. Blair, the champion of temperance and education in the United States Senate. In February, Senator Blair introduced the bill given below. It was read twice and referred to the committee on education and labor. On April 25 it was reported favorably to the senate without amendment, and is now on the calendar:

A Bill to provide for the study of physiology, and the effect of intoxicating, narcotic, and poisonous substances upon life, health, and welfare, by the pupils in the public schools of the territories and the district of Columbia.

Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the subject of physiology and the simple rules for the preservation of life and health shall be a branch of education in the public schools within all the territories of the United States and the district of Columbia; and in the prosecution of that study special instruction shall be given to the pupils in regard to the nature of alcohol and of intoxicating, narcotic, and poisonous substances in common use by the people, and the effect of that use upon life and health and the welfare of individuals and communities addicted thereto.

Sec. 2 That teachers in the public schools shall be qualified to teach accordingly, and suitable text books shall be used to facilitate the study and instruction provided for in the first section of this act; and such text books shall be subject to rejection from use if found to be objectionable by the Commissioner of Education.

Now let all the friends and well wishers pour in their "insistences" upon congress—write letters to your representatives and senators and get men and women of influence to do likewise. At one vote we may get temperance instruction for nearly one million children in nine territories.

The Illinois Sunday school convention, in its session at Springfield last week, unanimously adopted the following resolution offered by B. F. Jacobs, of Chicago.

Whereas, The sin of intemperance is in this day the great hindrance to the progress of Christ's kingdom in this world; and

Whereas, Not only is the Sunday school the most efficient agency for raising up a generation whose God is the Lord, but among our Sunday school workers are a host of women, upon whose hearts the Holy Ghost has laid in an especial manner this burden of souls;

Resolved, That this convention endorses heartily the work of the W. C. T. U., and recommend that one or more of the four extra Sundays in the year be set apart for special lessons on the Christian duty of temperance, remembering that "for this purpose the Lord God was manifested that He might destroy the works of the devil."

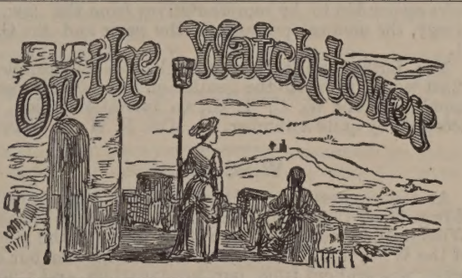
When, in response to the call for this twenty-fifth anniversary of the Illinois Sunday school association, Mrs. Lucia B. Tyng, our efficient state superintendent of Sunday school work, gave twenty-five dollars in the name of the W. C. T. U. of Illinois, there was a hearty applause all over the house. Our W. C. T. U. can but enjoy the graceful gift of this noble woman, since we all know her joy in giving. Mr. William Reynolds, in his directions to delegates to the international meeting at Louisville, gave a very emphatic charge in behalf of the W. C. T. U. The Sunday school and its mission in temperance reform have no truer friends than the Tyngs and Reynolds of Peoria.

Miss Willard writes thus of one who enlists the love and prayers of all:

Chicago, May 19, 1884.

Dear Union Signal:—Our lovely Miss Duty, of Cleveland, for many years the leader of W. C. T. U. movements in that city, has been for three months very ill as the result of too much care and too hard work. All who have the happiness to know Jennie Duty will agree with me that her richly endowed life is of priceless value to our cause. Let me ask our white ribbon army to pray earnestly for her restoration to health, home and the work she loves so well.

Frances E. Willard.



The Promise League of the world, don't you want to belong to it? Just the easiest thing in the world. Send to Helen Hood, 161 LaSalle St., for Alfred L. Sewell's little promise book, sign the promise on the first page, carry the book in your pocket, and as you have time select from God's promises those that have been proved and tried and have helped you, copying them into the little book which you can study at odd minntes till you know them all by heart. These little books in stout manilla envelopes can be had for ten cents.

Isn't this an experience? One of tired the W. C. T. U. workers gives it as hers on a recent journey:

I am sitting and writing in the car, and I wont look at anybody for fear they'll speak to me. I tried to avoid everybody day before yesterday but a baby cried so for milk to put in the bottle, they could not get any, that I gave it a banana, and then looked sternly out of the window, but they, the grand parents, parents and six children looked and squinted and nodded. "That there woman 's the one," by and by the grandfather came over, "Be you goin' fur?" "No, Burlingame." "Oh not goin' beyond thar?" "No." "How long ye lived in B.?" "Don't live there," "No live East?" Yes, Chicago, "Oh, goin' to stop in Bur—quite a spell?" No. "Got relations there?" No. "Married?" "Yes." "Children?" "Yes." "Then I spose you won't mind the little creeter's pulling and a haulin' the boxes?" "No!!" "Your man farm it?" (in Chicago!) "No civil engineer." (don't think he knew what that meant.) "He own property out here?" "No." "Goin' west any further?" (Now thinks I you've got to take it) "Yes to Texas after awhile." "Laws du tell, ever been there?" "No." "Well that there woman over yender, 's going little west of here. Her man sent her jist money 'nuff fur to git here, and she's fell short a bit. Wat she'll do, Lord knows. That there man in that seat's, from Illinois too, me and my old woman's lived onto one place in Illinois, nigh onto fifty years and neither of us has ever had the agy (ague) and I tell ye its pretty hard a pullin up stakes at my time of life." Just then cry, "Burlingame," I jumped up and ran, and he did look so sorry to have to part company. Oh dear, I've not exaggerated that one bit, nor set down aught in malice. Why can't I be let alone.

"Why can't I be let alone?" Why just for the same reason that the Southern Confederacy couldn't. You're wanted in the union."

Speaking of that dear old lady in The Union Signal that couldn't find the word "tact" in her Bible, one lady says, "Read Matthew 10:16."

And apropos of old ladies here is a story of one that delighted my heart as it was told by good Mr. Walker, our English visitor who so kindly takes "out for an airing," behind "spanking bays" the national W. C. T. U. president and her mother. He told the other day of a good woman on whose lips praise was constant. Somebody said to her, "Why Granny, how you do love to praise the Lord." "Aye, that be so," she answered "an' if He do bring me to heaven, He shall never hear the last of it.

A new wonder I spy in the field! It is Mrs. Maria Upham Drake, of Brooklyn, N. Y. She has been accepted with great enthusiasm at Hartford, and I doubt not will be wherever she goes.

Here is a fine thought from one of Mrs. Leavitt's speeches:

"Let us remember that as our Lord sat over against the treasury and saw what was put therein, so today he sits over against the ballot box, and sees whether his children deposit ballots that tend to build up truth and righteousness and purity, or whether they are in the interest of Satan, and his continued usurpation of the government of this world."

Mrs. Esther T. Housh is, if ever there was one, a "woman at work." She edits her magazine, prepares monthly press bulletins for the National W. C. T. U., and lectures all about New England, and what is more she does all these things excellently well.

* * *

Hon. E. L. Dohoney, of Texas, delivered a stirring address before the Texas prohibition convention last month. While in the legislature of his state he successfully engineered the Six Shooter act—a prohibitory law in regard to deadly weapons which has been well enforced. He now seeks to get another, prohibition of that which so often inspires the shooting.

I don't like to hear this sort of talk. Somebody, let us hope not a W. C. T. U. woman, complained the other day at a W. C. T. U. meeting, of the amount of money given to foreign missions, drew applause by applying to the friends of missions the proverb, "The fool's eyes are in the ends of the earth." It is true that charity begins at home, but as somebody else says, "it doesn't end there.

Miss Lucia Kimball, who has been conducting a Sunday school temperance campaign of two months in Chicago has been so overworked that for a time she is compelled to rest. She has spoken seventy times in these two months, often five and six times on a Sunday and the physician enjoins a rest as absolute as her work has been extravagant.

* * *

Mrs. Foster, after a delightful and hardworking sojourn in Southern California is now in the northern part of the state. Last Sunday she spoke in San Francisco, after a reception in Oakland on Saturday, and is this week in the Yo Semite Valley. She speaks of the California women as "grand." I hear from them of her and her work, that in some instances as large an audience was turned away from the crowded hall as sat inside.

On Duty.

News From the Field.

MICHIGAN.

NOTICE TO MICHIGAN UNIONS.

Mrs. M. H. Hunt, superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, is to be present at the state convention held in Flint, June 3-6. It is very desirable that Mrs. Hunt should address audiences in other parts of Michigan, immediately after this state meeting. Those desiring her services should address Miss S. A. Rulison, State Cor. Sec.

FLORIDA.

Officers elected at the convention of the W. C. T. U. Jacksonville, Fla., Feb. 28 and 29, 1884:

President, Mrs. J. J. Lyons, Waldo, Fla.; vice presidents, Mrs. Walter Gwynn, Sanford; Mrs. H. Reed, Jacksonville, Fla.; vice president at large, Mrs. Gen. J. J. Finley, Ocala; recording secretary, Mrs. Hannah H. Liping, Archer; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Dr. T. P. Gary, Ocala; treasurer, Mrs. L. Alexander, St. Augustine. E. O. Browne Gary, Cor. Sec.

OHIO.

Columbus seems to be given over to the whisky element. Sunday base ball, slugging matches or fights and cock fighting seems to be the order of the day. Our city council, mayor and police make no effort to abate it and the religious and moral element of the city is not strong enough to elect men that will.

The Methodist and Catholic churches take the strongest stand for temperance. Last Sunday one hundred and fifteen persons signed the total abstinence pledge at the Catholic Cathedral, swelling the number to two hundred This is a new temperance society, and there are a number more in that church. Bishop Watterson and Father Fitzgerald delivered eloquent addresses before this society. Mrs. E. B. Sargent.

KENTUCKY.

Louisville.—In June at the International Sunday school convention, to be held in our city, a petition will be presented from the W. C. T. U. asking for the insertion of quarterly temperance lessons in the regular series. This petition has been circulated in this city, and, as far as possible, inevery town in the state. Only ministers and superintendents of Sunday schools are asked to sign.

The youngest member of our Y. W. C. T. U., a little girl nine years old, has been working for money enough to purchase Sewall's stomach charts for headquarters. The necessary $8.00 has just been secured, and a lecture on the subject will be given the second Friday in May, to which the public is invited.

Through the instrumentality of the Y. W. C. T. U. unfermented wine has been introduced into one of the largest churches in our city.

A Y. W. C. T. U. has been organized in Murray, Ky., which bids fair to rival that of our older cities. Within two or three months this union has planned for three public meetings, which were very enthusiastic and of a practical character; has enlisted the three ministers of the town and committed them; has secured space in the county paper; has obtained signatures to the petition for Sunday school temperance lessons; has had a bill passed by the legislature prohibiting the sale or gift of any kind of liquor within their school district; has very interesting meetings, and succeeded in arousing the whole community. We are praying for many more such.

WYOMING TERRITORY.

Laramie City.—Six months ago the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was organized with but ten members. At our recent election our forces, under the leadership of inexperienced commanders, met the enemy of veterans, under the command of the skilled leaders of a hundred battles and victories.

We were defeated, but a review of the situation and of what has been accomplished is far from disheartening.

In six months our muster roll has grown from ten to more than two hundred and fifty soldiers.

On election day we polled 465 temperance votes out of 1,100 cast in the whole city. A change of less than 100 votes would have given us the victory on our whole ticket. And more than a hundred of our voters—principally ladies, were deprived of the privilege of voting upon a legal technicality.

We have rallied to our standard and enrolled under our banner nearly every one of the leaders of one of the great political parties, and a number of prominent leaders of the other great political party have openly and boldly arrayed themselves upon the side of temperance.

We have enlisted under our banner a large number of young men—lawyers, railroad officials, operators, business men, etc., men who are just entering upon public life, with long years of usefulness before them.

We have aroused, and strengthened the hands of pastors and churches in our city and interested them in our good work.

We have enlisted in our cause the active co-operation of both the papers of our city.

We brought enough influence to bear upon our legislature to secure much wholesome advanced legislation upon temperance and moral issues.

We compelled our opponents in the city election to select for their standard bearers the very best men who could be found and to let them go into the contest entirely unpledged and free to rule in righteousness and to legislate for the suppression of intemperance.

We have given a new impetus, and infused new life into our sister temperance organizations in the city.

And last, but by no means least, we have gained experience and developed workers. The indefatigable labor performed by scores of our women will qualify them to play the part of giants in our coming struggles.

With such a record as this for six months' work are we defeated?

Mrs. J. H. Hayford, Pres. W. C. T. U.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Attleboro.—The eighth anniversary and annual meeting of the Attleboro W. C. T. U., was an occasion of unusual interest. The secretary and treasurer gave reports which were very satisfactory. The society has now a membership of 76, an increase of 31 members during the year. Until last year we have had discouraging, up-hill work. Last May we had a convention which was a "red letter day" for our union. The observance of the crusade anniversary was another advance, and Miss Willard's coming was a great blessing.

At the conclusion of the business meeting G. A. R. hall was thrown open to invited guests who, to the number of about 100, accepted the courtesies of the organization. For their entertainment a bountiful collation had been prepared, to which ample justice was done. After the party had satisfied its appetite it was called to order by Mrs. N. C. Luther as toast mistress, and an essay was read by Mrs. N. M. Daggett upon the "Needs of the Hour," considered with regard to the cause of temperance.

Mrs. E. M. Gustin read an article upon the "Importance of the Temperance Education of the Young," showing the absolute necessity of attending to it, if it is ever hoped to establish temperance as the standard of public sentiment.

Mrs. L. B. Sweet read an original poem, and toasts were responded to by representatives from the law, the clergy, the medical professions, the press and the G. A. R.

Mrs. Luthur availed herself of the woman's privileged "last word" to invite the gentlemen to become honorary members of the W. C. T. U., an invitation which was accepted by quite a number. Mrs. N. M. Daggett.

WISCONSIN.

At the suggestion of Miss Willard, Miss Anna M. Edwards, of Cleveland, Ohio, was invited to come to Wisconsin, to work for two or three weeks in the interest of the W. C. T. U. A little circular printed on our own press, was sent out from our headquarters, and a notice of Miss Edwards' coming, and of the terms on which lectures could be obtained was published in the Prohibitionist. As the result forty appointments were made before she had even entered the state, and new applications are coming in almost daily.

Miss Edwards began work at Jefferson and Fort Atkinson, coming to Madison to attend and make the address at an entertainment for the benefit of the state union. From Madison she went directly north carrying with her the good wishes of hosts of new friends, and bearing the firm conviction that she would do good work wherever she should go. Letters from places she has visited are full of thanksgiving for her coming and we are convinced that she is doing a noble work for "God and home and native land."

Through her influence new unions have been organized at Wautowa, Deerfield, (Waushara county), and Plainfied and the good work is just begun. The Deerfield union has eight honorary members.

Some weeks ago, by an unaccountable slip of the pen, we gave the Augusta union credit for an entertainment which netted $57.50. It should have read Evansville union.

Our beloved president, Mrs. I. H. Irish, has been visiting some of the unions in the northeastern part of the state. She found the women at Oconto and Green Bay very much interested and doing excellent work.

Mrs. Irish sails for Europe May 31, two weeks later than we feared, but we are thankful for every day she remains with us. Sarah P. Bradish, Cor. Sec.

Green Bay.—On the 3d of May the W. C. T. U. of this city had the pleasure of receiving Mrs. J. E. Irish, the president of the state W. C. T. U.

A large number of ladies, including many not engaged in the work as well as members of the union, met in Klaus' Hall. After the opening exercises several ladies spoke briefly of what the union had done and wished to do in this city, quoting its children's meetings, sewing school, and boys' reading room as among its most efficient work. Mrs. Irish spoke most earnestly and instructively on the great subject of women's work in temperance. The audience was so interested that the afternoon had almost gone before any one realized it. It is hoped that this meeting will bring many into our union.

On Sunday afternoon a meeting was held for children, when Mrs. Irish held the attention of both children and grown people. Her experiments with alcohol were very interesting, and other than little folks went home with added knowledge of the evils of strong drink.

On Sunday evening the Presbyterian church was kindly offered for a mass temperance meeting, and notwithstanding the rain, was well filled. Mrs. Irish's address was a plain, unvarnished statement of facts, so supported by statistics as to prove that she knew of what she spoke, her earnest, unaffected manner, and her quiet dignified bearing gave no room for the usual caviller to quote "cant" or "fanatical." Her visit was an impetus to the union for farther and extended work.

Mrs. D. C. Ayres, Vice Pres.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Greenville.—We celebrated our anniversary, March 31, in a manner which we consider wonderfully improved and advanced. We actually held for our anniversary a public meeting in the Methodist church, and such a thing has never been done before. A report was given which contained the three years' history of our union, disappointments, defeat, and all. The occasion was most interesting and we united all our forces. The Girl's Union, of the college, was represented by two very beautiful selections, recited by two girls in a charming manner, and two little pieces from two of our little boys, just formed into a juvenile union. At the close, the gentlemen spoke in behalf of our reading room, and $50. was raised by use of the financial blanks recommended in "Hints and Helps."

The church was filled, and I believe the people were not worn out, to say the least.

The battle progresses slowly, but we think surely and securely for our cause. The change and advance in public sentiment since Miss Willard was here can scarcely be imagined. Though our membership roll is not as large (many were students who soon went away) it is a much better educated one, and we have three good workers now where we had one up to the first of last Dec. Though defeated in the election for license or no license that day, Dec. 1st, by only 80 votes, (the result of fraud on the part of the liquor men, and ignorance and love of liquor on the part of the poor negroes), we were not dismayed and found good friends and strong workers, who, in our adversity, came forward and pledged future work, and it is the opinion of every one here that our next battle will be a decisive victory for temperance.

I am glad to say we have regular prayer meetings semi-monthly on Sunday afternoons, which steadily increase in numbers. I fear we have not yet reached the drinking men, who will not come to any of our meetings, but the workers who come, have their faith strengthened and the average number of young people is about 130. Surely the seed sown in these young hearts and minds will bear "much fruit" to the honor and glory of God.

About two months ago we organized a Juvenile Union of sixty members, and I trust this promising branch of our work will go on to complete and beautiful success. For one year I had only a class of boys (about 20,) but after the first holiday, I could not rally them again. This time we have boys and girls under different teachers, and use Miss Colman's catechism.

We have secured the promise of our various Sunday school superintendents to introduce temperance lesson leaves and papers. We have a good committee on that branch, and though only organized two months ago they work.

Scientific instruction in the public schools, and our colleges is receiving the consideration of their principals and officers, teachers etc. Our union sent Dr. Richardson's lesson book and Miss Colman's catechism to each school superintendent, and asked their attention. They replied with promise to find a place for them at the next session.

We have kept up a regular half column in our newspapers twice a week for eighteen months, and we believe it to be one of the best methods to create true temperance sentiment and practice. We request occasional sermons from the pastors, and have a public meeting now and then, with dime readings every month through the summer to raise money. We have had three very handsome entertainments, one each year, to raise money to meet our expenses of reading room, which has been our chief work requiring any money. We tried a coffee room, but the difficulty of finding a proper person to run it compelled us to give it up.

After our election on the 1st of December when our forces rallied and increased in strength, if not in numbers, we divided all our best members into the following committees:

On Editing Local Column.
On Affairs of our Reading Room.
On Jail and Poor House Work.
On Prayer Meetings Sunday Afternoon.
On Public Meetings, Providing Music, Halls, etc.
On Juvenile Work, (advising and controling).
On Organization.
On Special Visitation to Poor and Drunkards.
On Sunday Schools, Lesson Leaves, etc.
On Public School Instruction in Hygiene.
On Finance and Card Collectors, etc.
On Attention to Visitors at our Meetings.

Committees to canvass wards for members and subscriptions to library and union. These committees have all entered this, our fourth year, with unusual vigor and interest.

We have not all that we would wish to offer you, but we have done our cause no dishonor. We have been simply learning how to begin, and we have only just now begun our real work. This is a hard place to conquer. But we are to have our state convention here next October. This is the third town in the state and the only one where a W. C. T. U. effort has failed.

HARLEY K. WALTER.

SOUTHERN GLEANNGS.

BY MRS. GEORGIA HULSE MCLEOD.

Never has a clan call seemed so urgent, so sorely needed as that of the N. W. C. T. U. (in view of the presidential campaign), a call to prayer addressed to he "Christian people of America." It is to be hoped that the 27th of May, which is the date fixed, will be observed by every local union in the south. If ever southern women should appeal to God to rouse the hearts and consciences of the voters whose ballot for prohibition of the liquor traffic will save their boys and protect their homes, it is now, for

"Faith can not be unanswered,
Her feet were firmly planted on the rock;
Amid the wildest storms she stands undaunted,
Nor quails before the loudest thunder shock,
She knows Omnipotence has heard her prayer,
And cries, 'It shall be done,' sometime, somewhere."

MARYLAND.—Dr. Elizabeth I. French of Philadelphia, gives today the closing lecture of the course, all of which have been largely attended. The subject for this afternoon is "The Reproductive System, Functions and Diseases."

Mrs. Frances E. Harper, has been working for a week past in the colored churches. The presiding bishop of the general conference of A. M. E. church now in session, has written (through Mrs. Harper,) an invitation to the ladies of the W. C. T. U. to address them.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The increasing effort, and indomitable energy of the W. C. T. U. workers at our nation's capital, challenges admiration, and should inspire their neighbors to follow in their footsteps. No open door of opportunity is ever unnoticed by them. Their last record is the holding of "A Normal Institute of Hygiene and Heredity," May 5, 6 and 7. Addresses were delivered by distinguished men and women. Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith gave a Bible reading, and to me, the most interesting item on the program is this, "Address, a Girl who wants to speak to Girls, Mary Whitall Smith," for, I say to myself, so thankfully, The brave tender girlish hands stretched out to rescue, are as worthy of honor as a Grace Darling. When the hearts of the crusaders beat slowly, as life ebbs, when the white haired matrons of the W. C. T. U., nearing the land beyond the sunset drop from their fingers the thread of the work so much loved, the girls will take it up, and the record of their deeds shall be golden.

SOUTH CAROLINA.—Mrs. Chapin, is still on the warpath. I am glad to copy here, (for southern women watch eagerly for our national organ,) an item of correspondence from a northern journal.

"Any one who fancies there is nothing good, that is thoroughly aggressive, here, makes a bad mistake."

* * * * * * *

"A large gathering of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is attracting the masses. The 'moderator of the meeting,' she could moderate a whirlwind if need be, or raise a tempest when that is the right thing to be done, is Mrs. Chapin, of Charleston, South Carolina. She is a woman of prodigious force, and in every fiber of her nature a lady still."

The late victory in Edgefield, is owing under God to her unwearied efforts, tact and power to win as allies for prohibition, the impulsive, and impressible people of the colored race, who in the south, hold the balance of power. Mrs. Chapin says, the victory "was in answer to prayer," and the press comments are in more than one instance, headed, "Woman's Faith."

Several prominent men were in the field for the anti-prohibitionists. The temperance women, were in the church from six in the morning, until six in the evening praying, and every hour a bell was tolled that the people might know it. A man on his way to the polls said, "he could not vote for whisky, while these women were praying, and a funeral bell a tolling." It was a glorious victory, pray God add to it many, many more.

Mrs. Chapin and Mrs. Sibley were in attendance at the state Sunday school convention, held in Columbus, Georgia. Neglecting no open door, and trying to open closed ones, they are aiming to have the thirteenth lesson leaf introduced, and they are sure to succeed.

TEXAS.—Miss Henrietta G. Moore has closed her effective work in this state, commended gratefully by the advocates of temperance, and lauded by the press. Her address at the prohibition convention, held in Paris, was convincing, and as an appeal to hearts and consciences, most effective. Her womanly, dignified manner at once impresses her audience, and her arguments, illustrations, and leaves from sad life records, hold them attentive, as long as she speaks. She is now in North Carolina.

"Two representative women," is the subject of a very beautiful sketch in The Caldwell Temperance Banner. It is from the pen of a ready writer, and well known worker of Texas.

I wish I had space to give the pen portraits as she has done of Frances E. Willard and Sallie F. Chapin. As I clip it for distribution in southern states I quote for this column one paragraph.

"These two women have clasped hands across the sectional chasm which too long divided our American people, and for humanity's sake they are devoting time, rare talents, and personal means, to the great question of the day, the temperance reform. Daily their footsteps press new soil, and north and south, is their appeal answered in recruits for the heaven ordained work of the W. C. T. U."

"Our girls" everywhere are busy with their winning ways and helpful work. I have cause to be glad of my mention in "Gleaning column" of the "The Russian Tea Party." It has brought me from east, west and south letters that are like flowers springing up, to cheer the traveler, by the dusty wayside. I prize them all, and until they can have my more tardy written replies, I ask leave to say, that I have ordered some plans printed, but as the dresses are heavily trimmed with fur, I think the autumn and winter will be a better time to ensure success. Now is the season for Flora's festivals.

MISSOURI.

THIRTEENTH DISTRICT CONVENTION.

This convention met in Carthage April 22 and 23, MRS. Clara Hoffman, state president, presiding. A large number of delegates and visitors were in attendance. The reports from local unions were inspiring. Thirteen unions were reported, ten of that number having a membership of 361. One union of seven members takes five copies of THE UNION SIGNAL. The number of UNION SIGNALS reported taken in the district was very encouraging. There are eleven Bands of Hope in the district with a membership of 1,860.

Nevada reported a Y. W. C. T. U. of 48 members, with a reading room containing a library of 200 volumes, and $54 in the treasury; Springfield a Y. W. C. T. U. of 50 members, and Pierce City a Y. M. C. T. U. of 15 members.

Mrs. Hoffman gave an interesting account of the work in Kansas City among the newsboys; also the work among the girls in the industrial school.

"Reading Rooms and Libraries," was ably handled by Mrs. Bowman, of Nevada. The subject of games introduced into reading rooms, was one of interest. It was thought best to leave the matter with each society, to act as they considered to be right.

Remarks on "Press Work" were made by Mrs. H. C. Shoemaker and Mrs. Lou Marker. Mrs. Marker says, "No press, no prohibition." Mrs. Dr. Fannie Williams, read an essay entitled "The Relation of Temperance to the Medical Profession." She affirmed its use necessary, stating that alcohol had no substitute. Mrs. Hoffman and others answered in the negative, giving the opinion of eminent physicians. Decision: "No place in the human system for alcohol."

An essay by Mrs. Lashmet, of Richey, subject, "How to make home attractive to boys," brought out valuable suggestions from a number of ladies and gentlemen. The most necessary qualities in a mother were patience and love. "Love your boys if you would keep them under your influence."

Wednesday evening an address of welcome in behalf of the W. C. T. U. was given by Mrs. Riley, of Carthage; in behalf of the churches and citizens, by Rev. W. S. Knight. Response to the W. C. T. U. by Mrs. Baker, of Springfield, and remarks by Rev. Mr. Turner, of Lamar, in behalf of the fraternal delegates.

The address of the evening was given by Rev. Mr. Campbell, of Carthage.

Thursday evening Mrs. Mary B. Willard spoke upon "The Faith and Aims of the W. C. T. U."

Thursday morning Mrs. Hoffman, Mrs. Clardy and Mrs. Willard held a special meeting in the reading-room to give instruction to members of the local unions. "Order is heaven's first law," therefore each union should be governed by the rules of parliament, if carried on successfully.

Many beautiful passages were recited by the sisters, and our hearts were cheered and our spirits blest by the words of Holy Writ. MRS. BELLE JONES.

RICH HILL.—Under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. of this city Mr. J. C. Holt has been laboring among us during the past ten or twelve days, holding the most delightful and profitable afternoon meetings, and delivering, at night, an eminently successful series of lectures, doing a grand work in this grand cause. It is and has been a glorious time—no $10 and costs by "his honor" to report—and nobody investigates the "cooler."

And what are the tangible results of these meetings? The union has been built up upon a solid foundation, a reading room established, headquarters secured, and a Band of Hope, and the National Cadets, numbering about three hundred children been organized. Many friends have been won to our cause, and many valuable donations, and the end is not yet. L. B. R.

BETHANY.—The W. C. T. U. of Bethany has moved steadily onward, increasing in interest and importance since the convention held here last fall. There have been twenty additions. The union now numbers fifty-eight. Number of honorary members fifteen. The literary exercises which have been introduced into the meetings add much to the interest. Temperance meetings have been held regularly Friday evening of each week, and have been attended by large and appreciative audiences, which augurs well for the interest in the temperance work here, and is very encouraging to those engaged in the labor. The program of these meetings has been provided by the W. C. T. U. the C. T. U. and the reform club alternately.

The ladies have furnished the temperance hall quite attractively with carpet, pictures, etc.

Our Band of Hope numbers 124. Meetings are held every Saturday afternoon, and they have had two public meetings. The weekly meetings are attended by a large and interested number, and are growing in numbers and interest.

CAINSVILLE.—Our union was organized Oct. 19, 1883, with 26 members and 14 have been added since. Our meetings are well attended and good interest is maintained. We have given quite a number of entertainments that have been well attended and the proceeds used in defraying expenses, leaving us with funds in the treasury. We hope by the liberality of our business men and the friends of temperance to build us a reading room, hall and library building the coming summer. Public sentiment has been greatly awakened and strengthened as to the evils of intemperance.

The law is reasonably well respected concerning the sale of intoxicants. A wholesome and expensive lesson was taught those who recently attempted to violate the spirit of the law by selling by the gallon. We are much encouraged and are pleased with the outlook.

MRS. J. H. BURROWS.

HARRISONVILLE.—Organized last July, we now number forty-five or forty-six members. Our state president, Mrs. Clara Hoffman, gave us a very excellent lecture last fall, and Mrs. L. G. Fixen was with us in March, and will be here again the 15th of this month. I think our union has exerted a salutary influence, in our town. Temperance is not as unpopular as a year ago.

We have had a drunken county court to issue licenses to our five saloon keepers, irrespective of our remonstrance, or the legal number of tax payers names upon their petitions.

At our late grand jury setting bills of indictment were found against all of them. One of them was made a test case in our circuit court, but the case was then appealed to supreme court. Now we hear they have set the hearing off until next October. They are still selling in defiance of law.

We take THE UNION SIGNAL, a club of ten yearly, with some for shorter periods.

MRS. A. H. DEANE, Pres. W. C. T. U.

RHODE ISLAND.

PAWTUCKET.—"It has been my fortune to be present at many temperance meetings, but this is the best one I ever attended," said the Hon. Henry B. Metcalf, of the closing exercises of the Broad street school.

The program aside from music and an exercise in calisthenics, was made up of the questions and answers found at the close of Mrs. J. Ellen Foster's "Constitutional Amendment Manual," and declamations upon the "Right and Necessity of Legislation," the "Injustice and Futility of License," "Prohibitory Laws," and "No Substitute for Prohibition."

At the conclusion of the program addresses were made by Rev. Preston Gurney, pastor of Broad street Baptist church, by the Hon. Henry B. Metcalf, of Pawtucket, and by Mrs. H. D. Walker and Miss Cassie Smith, of the Rhode Island W. C. T. U.

At our election for town officers the whole issue was rum or no rum. The result was a great temperance victory. Last year the majority in favor of license was 231 and this year license was voted down by 137 majority. Forty-four of the ladies belonging to the W. C. T. U., tended the tables and distributed ballots. They worked hard all day, and their influence for good was felt. There was less rowdyism at the voting places and smoking of cigars and "T. D." pipes prohibited. It is hoped the ladies will come again.

OREGON.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF STATE CONVENTION.

The second annual meeting of the W. C. T. U. of Oregon will be held at Albany, June 4 and 5. No union can afford to be without representatives to this yearly gathering. Matters of great importance will come up for our consideration, and we need to lay plans for a concert of action during the coming year. All temperance workers throughout the state are cordially invited to be present. MRS. H. K. HINES, Pres.

ILLINOIS.

PROHIBITION TOWNS IN ILLINOIS.

We have been asked to give a list of the towns in Illinois voting no license at the recent elections. The following is a list of all reported to us. We shall be greatly obliged if our friends throughout the state will aid us in obtaining a complete list:

Metamora, Meriden, Mt. Vernon, Casey, Earl, Jonesboro, Martinsville, Monticello, Taylorville, Woodstock, Mt. Morris, Leaf River, Byron, Oregon, Sandwich, Shabbona, Chebanse, Dwight, Moaweaqua, Sheldon, Plano, Eureka, Decatur, Lexington, Lanark, Macomb, Monmouth, Lena, Carthage, Delavan, Mason City, Lewiston, Forreston, Creston, Shannon, Washburn, Barry, Leland, Polo, Davis, Pecatonica, Warren, Franklin Grove, Girard, Rushville, Mount Sterling, Kane, Elmwood, Geneva, Aledo, Keithsburg, Cable, all the towns in Lee county save Dixon, Amboy, and Compton, all in Ogle county save two, and all in Mercer county save one.

OFFICIAL COMMUNICATION FROM THE SUPERINTENDENT OF EVANGELISTIC WORK.

It is with great pleasure that we announce the return into our state of that earnest, consecrated, efficient, temperance worker, Mrs. Louise S. Rounds. Mrs. Rounds formerly resided in Chicago, and was associated with the labors of the W. C. T. U. of the city, and is well known and will long be remembered for her devoted and successful labors in gospel temperance meetings, in the city and various places in the state. During the past year, she has been sorely afflicted in the death of her husband and in this bereavement her heart fondly turns to her old home in Illinois. At a recent meeting of the executive committee of the W. C. T. U. of Illinois, a most hearty and cordial invitation was sent to Mrs. Rounds to return to our state and labor with us as organizer, and in the Evangelistic department of our work. Her glad assent to this proposal brings joy to all those who know and love her and appreciate her consecrated gifts. As superintendent of the evangelistic work, I do especially rejoice in the coming of Mrs. Rounds, as other duties have prevented me from meeting many of our unions and stimulating them to renewed efforts in this most important branch of our work, and as we have at present but few workers in the field. I am thankful for her inspiring presence among us. Engagements for her services will be made by Miss Hood at headquarters.

☐Trusting that a new awakening may come to all our workers and a fresh outpouring of the Holy Spirit may fit us all for nobler service, I remain yours cordially,

ELIZABETH G. HIBBEN,
Supt. of Evangelistic Dept. W. C. T. U. of Ill.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

The wide awake financial secretary of one district requests that especial attention be called to Leaflet No. 10 of the Illinois series. This Leaflet, as has before been stated, is a practical presentation of the subject of Finance, prepared by Mrs. F. C. Hathaway, and should be carefully and prayerfully read by every W. C. T. U. woman in the state. Orders for any quantity desired will be promptly filled at headquarters.

This devoted secretary writes, "The year is nearing its close and so much is yet to be accomplished. The fault today, in many instances, is not because there is not money for the work, but because it is not fully understood that money is needed, or for what it is needed." Dear women of Illinois, think for a moment of the blind eyes to be opened, the deaf ears to be unstopped, the unorganized forces to be put in training. Cannot you see that money is needed to sow the state "knee deep" with literature, to send workers into the yet unorganized portions of the state, that we may be able to go in and possess this good land which the Lord our God has promised us? It is "the long pull, the strong pull, the pull all together" we need and must have. The districts have taken hold of our financial plan most heartily. All that is needed now is prompt action.

Let the hearts of our leaders be gladdened by generous free will offerings for this great and glorious work.

Attention has already been called to the very generous offer made to Illinois unions by the Rev. C. C. Harrah, of Galva, but it is desired to give it especial emphasis. The offer was made with the understanding that the proceeds of these lectures should be used in the interest of our suffrage work. As that is one branch of our legislative work let unions avail themselves of this opportunity to raise funds for our state work.

Let us show our hearty appreciation of Mr. Harrah's interest in our work by at once arranging to secure his services for local unions, also for county and district conventions.

Remember that Mr. Harrah only asks that his expenses be paid. The topics of lectures already prepared are: "Blood Will Tell," physiological; "The Advance Line of Temperance Reform," an anti-license plea; "Jesus the Emancipator of Woman," a gospel argument for woman's political enfranchisement.

A most enjoyable entertainment is reported by the North Side W. C. T. U., Chicago.

Delightful music by the Joy Quartette was interspersed with more delightful readings by that talented young elocutionist, Miss Belle Rouse, of Iowa, who is said to be a reader of unusual versatility.

Unions have been organized in the ninth district at Lannemin and Reddick, Livingston county, by Miss Emily Shedd, district president.

CALIFORNIA.

LOS ANGELES RECEPTION TO MRS. FOSTER.—During Mrs. Foster's stay in Los Angeles a reception was given her at the home of Mrs. Joshua Bixby, sister of the noble lady at the head of the South California W. C. T. U. and daughter of a genuine Yankee abolition and Maine law minister of the last generation, herself a pioneer total abstinence woman in the midst of California social wine drinking life twenty years ago. Like all Los Angeles gatherings the company was drawn from regions many and remote; and all the professions and all divisions of social and business life were represented. To name any one as from Iowa was to arouse instant interest, both for the sake of the honored guest whom all associate with that state, and because every eye turns to Iowa as the battle field of prohibition. Ex-governor Merrill and his excellent wife were among the representatives from that state, as they also represented our republican government officials. The world of business was there in the person of Mr. Rockefeller, the president of the Standard Oil Company, one of the greatest monopolies in this country, who controls millions of dollars and is himself wealthy. Yet he appears equally at home as the active church member and Sunday school and temperance worker. But no wider circle of interest was centered in one person than in Rev. Edward Judson, youngest son of Dr. Adoniram and Sarah B. Judson. Born in heathen Burmah, and the child of a family upon whom the eyes of the Christian world have rested for over seventy years, this gentleman's presence could not fail to awaken the deepest interest on this very pleasant social occasion, as also in two of Mrs. Foster's public meetings where he was present and took part. Those who were the possessers of that excellent old work, Wayland's "Life of Judson," read it with new pleasure, and almost saw life start in the portrait of the old warrior for Jesus, after seeing its vivid counterpart in the face of his son.

A very delightful rest from hard work came to him by the favor of Mr. Rockefeller, who counted him in with his own family and a number of other guests, on a transcontinental tour in his own private parlor and dining cars, passing westward by way of the most southern route through New Orleans and Texas, and up our sunset coast in leisurely meanderings, and purposing to return by one of the northern routes. And here let all the "We'll see to you" women rise and give a Chautauqua salute to this noble Christian representative of the ranks so commonly called Mammon, because he has so gracefully seen to it that our Judith, and her aid-de-camp, Elijah, shall have place in this unique pleasure trip all through grand Yosemite, and as much longer as they can take the time for from their very pressing work.

The recent very severe illness of Mrs. Foster at Santa Barbara made the physician of the party, Dr. Biggar of Cleveland, declare that she must take a lengthy vacation; but the calls were so numerous and urgent that she arose and went to battle again at the rate of one lecture a day for a little while as a slack-up, to be followed next week by—Yosemite. ### BOSTON BOYS' TEMPERANCE UNION.

Of all the interesting meetings which have been held in Tremont Temple on Sunday afternoons during the past months none is more worthy of special mention than the first public meeting of the Boston Boys' Temperance Union yesterday. The size of the audience was limited only by the capacity of the Temple. At 3 o'clock, as the organ prelude began, the members of the union, all of whom are between the ages of fifteen and nineteen, filed in and took the central seats upon the platform. After them came boys of various ages in long procession, until every seat upon the platform was filled. Seats had been reserved in the first balcony for the ladies of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, under whose auspices the meeting was held, and the white ribbon was prominent there also. The Ruggles Street Quartette opened the services by rendering "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth," and Dr. A. J. Gordon offered an earnest prayer. A musical selection was given by the boys, led by the quartette. Master Edmund Billings, the president of the union, was then introduced, and read a report prepared by the secretary. This was a resume of the work of the union from its birth, some five years ago, in the heart and in the prayers of a Christian woman, to the present time; during these five years the small beginning, which was like a grain of mustard-seed, has grown into a tree, whose spreading branches are bearing fruit, not only in various parts of our city, but in the regions beyond.

The first address was by Hon. Alpheus Hardy, who exhorted the boys to be pure in their own lives, to have faith in their work, and to be thoroughly in earnest. A second selection was beautifully rendered by the quartette. Master William E. Putnam then read an essay upon tobacco, in which he gave a history of its introduction into this country, an analysis of its poisonous properties, and its effects upon those addicted to its use. Rev. O. P. Gifford followed with one of his characteristic addresses, packed with illustrations, closing with an appeal to the audience to give the boys substantial aid in an effort which they are making to erect an ice water fountain, in the South Cove district. After the collection had been taken, a temperance essay was read by Master George C. Thomas, secretary of the union, in which the point that "formation is better than reformation" was forcibly brought out. The last address, by Hon. Eustace C. Fitz, was replete with good and true thoughts, earnestly expressed. The meeting closed with singing by by the boys and the benediction. Great credit is due to the youthful president who presided with so much dignity and to the boys who prepared the admirable report and essays with so much care, and read them in such an enjoyable manner. Many left the hall with a new hope in their hearts for the future of this land.

INDIANA.

THIRTEENTH DISTRICT CONVENTION.

The 13th district held its 3d annual convention in Bourbon, May 7 and 8. All the unions of this district were well represented, and the Bourbon union, numbering 44 members, were in attendance en masse.

A good attendance of the citizens gave inspiration to the workers, and it was certainly an interesting and beneficial occasion.

Mrs. Jennie Erwin, welcomed the delegates in brief and well chosen words, to which the president, Mrs. Julia Work, of Mishawaka responded.

Thirteen of the national and state departments of work are duplicated in our district work, each of which was reported by superintendents which with reports from local unions, showed a good degree of activity in the work throughout the district.

Michigan City union rather took the lead, work being carried on there in six different departments. Prizes are offered in the high school for the best essay on "Alcohol and Hygiene," a free reading room is maintained, and Sunday afternoon gospel meetings held. Bourbon union has also offered a prize for best essay on "Alcohol and Tobacco."

Many advanced steps were reported, that were full of good cheer to the workers, and whether a result of W. C. T. U. work directly or indirectly they showed the growth of temperance sentiment and gave tangible evidence of progress in our 13th district. Slowly though it may seem, yet surely the cause is gaining adherents and efficient supporters in several important localities. Among them may be mentioned South Bend where the churches, and all Christian and temperance organizations have steadily and unfalteringly worked with the republican party until at their late city election they have seen the whisky ring broken and trampled under foot, the laws vindicated, and the sacredness of the Sabbath restored by the election of five prohibition officers pledged to see the laws impartially enforced.

And in La Porte the German Lutheran church, with a membership of over 1,500 has recently by a church ordinance prohibited saloon keepers from being members of that church, and the subject of excluding the sale of liquors on the grounds, at their church picnics on the Sabbath is being strongly agitated by them.

Several excellent papers were read. Among them a paper on "How shall we work for the children," by Mrs. Mary Smith of Union Mills, and one on "The relation of the church to temperance work," by Mrs. Dr. J. A. Mc Gill, of South Bend. Mrs. H. M. Simkins, of Mishawaka, read a paper on "The relation of intemperance to pauperism," which showed a careful and thorough acquaintance with her subject, gained by her work in the Orphan's Home. An interesting report was given of preparing bouquets for each of the 600 prisoners at the northern penitentiary on flower mission day, and thanks extended to Attica, Brazil, Monticello, Crown Point and Logansport for beautiful flowers sent. All unions pledged to help again in the flower mission work on the 9th of June.

The usual resolutions were passed, including one recommending THE UNION SIGNAL to all the workers as a strong reliable paper of excellent literary merits. Specimen copies were distributed, subscriptions strongly solicited and the Bourbon union promised to secure a club. The following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, The strength of the rum power is in the law upholding it, therefore,

Resolved, That we will use our utmost endeavors to defeat the election of any man to any office of trust or power who will not openly avow himself an uncompromising friend of prohibition.

Resolved, That the sentiment of woman has a right to be recorded in the law under which she must live; therefore we demand the ballot for women to the end of protecting the home and the state from the encroachment of enemies.

The report of the Orphan's Home work was exceedingly interesting, and, being most emphatically a legitimate W. C. T. U. work, solicited the earnest attention of the workers and opened to many an avenue of work. The "Home" has lately been opened to Northern Indiana and three counties of our district send their pauper children to it for support, by order of the county commissioners and another county has the matter under consideration. While we rejoice that the work of the Home has reached such proportions as to require the undivided attention of its officers, yet we are saddened by the fact of being obliged to release our worthy district president, Mrs. Work, from this office in order that she may devote her time and strength to the now arduous duties of caring for the li tle ones who are worse than orphans, which work we recognize as a prominent temperance work of the district.

We are fortunate however in securing the services of Mrs. Mary E. Hume, of Plymouth, who was elected president of the district for the ensuing year, she having the ability and more time to devote to the district work.

The convention adjourned to meet at Michigan City in October. The house was crowded on Thursday evening to hear Mrs. Helen Gougar's eloquent address on high license, which was full of persuasive and convincing truths that must have carried conviction to many hearts.

Friday morning a pleasant and enjoyable reunion of the delegates, visitors, and members of the local union, was held at the beautiful home of Mrs. Jennie Erwin. En route for home the delegates from the northern part of the district had several hours to spend at Plymouth on account of change of cars, and on arriving there they were invited to spend the time at the lovely home of Mrs. E. were H. Blaine, where they were unexpectedly greeted by a large number of sister workers, and the clergymen of that place.

A nice supper was served, after which the delegates were accompanied to the depot by the kind sisters, who had so agreeably surprised and entertained them, also by the clergymen and other gentlemen forming quite a long procession of zealous workers. Men stood at the store doors, and on the corners apparently wondering what was to be done now, by a procession that was so suggestive of old crusade days.

NEWS N A NUTSHELL.

A W. C. T. U. was organized April 8, at Pueblo, Col., with a membership of twenty-one.

NEARLY one hundred children are under the wise and faithful guidance of the W. C. T. U. in East Haddam, Conn.

IN addition to keeping a free reading room in connection with their dining room the Adrian (Mich.) W. C. T. U. maintains a temperance school with an enrollment of 146 boys and girls, who are taught the evil effects of alcohol physiologically, socially, and politically.

MRS. M. B. REESE is having very gratifying success in her work of organization; has organized twenty unions recently in Western Pennsylvania. Mrs. Reese makes it a point to see that each union has a copy of THE UNION SIGNAL from the very start.

A CALL has been issued for a state convention of the second amendment voters of Ohio to be held at Columbus, Wednesday, June 25, 1884, for the purpose of taking counsel together and of discussing and adopting plans for securing the legitimate fruits of the immense vote polled for prohibition last fall.

THE Asheville (N. C.) W. C. T. U. has a temperance school of sixty pupils. In accordance with the usual tactics of politicians, the local option law was a year ago rendered worthless by the omission of the amendment which prohibited the sale of fermented and malt liquors. Thus the temperance people have their work all to do over.

SEVENTEEN applications for liquor licenses were ignored by the Decatur, (Ill.) city council by a vote of 6 to 4, and this action makes Decatur prohibition for a year. Local druggists were refused permission to sell liquor for medical and sacramental purposes by the vote of 8 to 2. The saloons closed Friday night the 9th inst. The temperance people are jubilant.

THE second annual convention of the State Christian Temperance Union of Missouri, will be held at Nevada, Vernon county, Mo., on Thursday and Friday, May 29th and 30th, 1884, and will open at 10 o'clock a. m., Thursday the 29th.

Eminent speakers will be present to address the convention.

OUR friends over the border rather reverse the order of things as they exist with us. A resolution has just passed the house of commons of Canada, pledging the house to a prohibitory law as soon as the people are ready to act! The people with us seem a great deal more ready to act than the law makers. The president of the Ontario W. C. T. U. reports between fifty and sixty papers as being regularly supplied with news.

THE Corvallis (Ore.) W. C. T. U. is full of activity, having twelve departments of work in operation. Press work and Sunday school temperance lessons are faithfully looked after, and scientific temperance instruction is petitioned for. A Band of Hope is to be turned over to the care of this wide awake W. C. T. U., which will prove a most faithful sponsor. Perhaps the most promising work of this union is that of their Reading and Coffee rooms, opened three or four months ago, after much hard work. The building in which these rooms were situated being sold, the ladies, unable to find suitable quarters, are taking steps to put up a building of their own. Already nearly enough has been subscribed to pay for it. This union modestly calls itself one of the "small twigs of the great temperance tree." Judging from its fruit we should call it a pretty large branch.

The nineteenth anniversary of the National Temperance Society and Publication House was held in New York city May 13, Mark Hopkins, D.D., president of the society, presiding. This society has issued 139 new books, pamphlets and tracts the last year, making 1,251 different publications now on its catalogue.

From Pole to Pole

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA has demonstrated its power of cure for all diseases of the blood.

The Harpooner's Story.

New Bedford, June 1, 1883.

DR. J. C. AYER & Co.—Twenty years ago I was a harpooner in the North Pacific, when five others of the crew and myself were laid up with Scurvy. Our bodies were bloated, gums swollen and bleeding, teeth loose, purple blotches all over us, and our breath seemed rotten. Take it by and large we were pretty badly off. All our lime-juice was accidentally destroyed, but the captain had a couple dozen bottles of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA and gave us that. We recovered on it quicker than I have ever seen men brought about by any other treatment for scurvy, and I've seen a good deal of it. Seeing no mention in your Almanac of your Sarsaparilla being good for scurvy, I thought you ought to know of this, and so send you the facts.

Respectfully yours, RALPH Y. WINGATE.

The Trooper's Experience.

Mavsen, Basutoland, S. Africa, March 7, 1883.

DR. J. C. AYER & Co.—Gentlemen: I have much pleasure to testify to the great value of your Sarsaparilla. We have been stationed here for over two years, during which time we had to live in tents. Being under canvas for such a time brought out what is called in this country "veldt-sores." I had those for some time I was advised to take your Sarsaparilla, two bottles of which made my sores disappear rapidly, and I am now quite well. Yours truly, T. K. BODEN,

BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

FROM THE NERVE-GIVING PRINCIPLES OF THE OX-BRAIN and WHEAT GERM. VITALIZED PHOSPHITES.—Restores the energy lost by nervousness, weakness or indigestion; relieves lassitude and neuralgia; refreshes the nerves tired by worry, excitement or excessive sensitiveness, and strengthens a failing memory. It aids wonderfully in the mental and bodily growth of infants and children. Under its use the teeth come easier, the bones grow better, the skin smoother, the brain acquires more readily and rests and sleeps more sweetly. An ill fed brain learns no lessons, and is excusable if peevish. It gives a more intellectual and happier childhood. It does away with that feeling of weakness and exhaustion which impels to the use of alcoholic beverages, and directly counteracts a cause of depravity and suffering which has baffled the efforts of religion and morality. Not a secret remedy; formula on every label. For sale by Druggists, or mail, $1.

Signal Notes.

Sunday evening May 4th, the Catholic Total Abstinence societies of Lowell, Mass., held a rousing meeting, at which over 800 pledges were secured.

Olympia, W. T., has a temperance mayor and a no-license city council. This is said to be the first fruit of woman's ballot in that territory.

The Queen of Madagascar is said to have organized a police force to prevent the manufacture, importation or sale of intoxicants in her dominions.

The Duke of Westminister, an immense property owner of London, allows no intoxicating liquor to be sold in any building on any land rented from him.

Woman scores another victory. The Convocation at Oxford University has, by a vote of 464 against 321, approved of her admission to honorary examinations.

There are fifteen times as many saloons in Chicago as there are in the entire state of Kansas, yet prohibition is a failure and high license works satisfactorily.

The St. Thomas whisky sellers are raising $4,000 to oppose the adoption of the Act in that city. They evidently do not believe that there is more liquor sold under the Scott act than under license.—Canada Citizen.

Prohibition in New York. The bill prohibiting the manufacture of oleomargarine passed the New York Senate on Tuesday. The penalties range from $100 to $500. What foolishness to prohibit oleomargarine. Why not regulate it under a high license law?

The London Free Press is very anxious to prove that "the Scott Act does not work well." Distiller Gooderham puts $10,000 after his name in the "anti's" subscription list to prove that it does work well; and if our information is correct Brewer Carling says something after the same fashion that it works well Which should know best?—Canada Citizen.

Whisky for foreign export is pouring into Baltimore. As the time is approaching when distillers must either pay taxes and take it out of bond or send it out of the country, they are rushing it to the seaborad. There is too much whisky in the country for the demand, and distillers prefer to export it temporarily. Most of it is going out on the German steamships, and most of it will be sent back when there is an improved demand, and then the tax will be paid.

The United States Senate is trying to "regulate" pleuro-pneumonia among cattle by prohibition. Why does not our distinguished senator suggest high license, or local option which he says regulates the rum traffic so well in Clay county? Why prohibit men from driving or shipping diseased cattle into neighboring states when a large revenue might be derived from licensing them? Why license men to spread crime, poverty, disease, ruin and death among the people, and prohibit them from spreading pleuro-pneumonia among the cattle? Is it more important to keep our cattle free from disease than to keep our men free from drunkenness and crime, and our women and children from poverty and shame? Our law-makers seem to think it is. The dram shops of New York may fill 20,000 drunkards' graves every year, they may corrupt the people, but let somebody attempt to take a sick Texas steer into the state, and the entire state militia will be called out if necessary to save the cattle of the state from pleuro-pneumonia.—National American.

HOW HE CAME TO "SWEAR OFF."

"No, I won't drink with you to-day, boys," said a drummer to several companions, as they settled down in the smoking car and passed the bottle. The fact is, boys, I have quit drinking—I've sworn off." He was greeted with shouts of laughter by the jolly crowd around him; they put the bottle under his nose and indulged in many jokes at his expense, but he refused to drink, and was rather serious about it. "What's the matter with you, old boy?" sang out one. "If you've quit drinking, something's up; tell us what it is." "Well, boys, I will, though I know you will laugh at me. But I'll tell you all the same. I have been a drinking man all my life, ever since I was married; as you all know, I love whisky—i'ts as sweet in my mouth as sugar—and God only knows how I'll quit it. For seven years not a day has passed over my head that I didn't have at least one drink. But I am done. Yesterday I was in Chicago. Down on South Clark street a customer of mine keeps a pawn shop in connection with his other business. I called on him, and while I was there a young man of not more than 25, wearing threadbare clothes and looking as hard as if he hadn't seen a sober day for a month, came in with a little package in his hand. Tremblingly he unwrapped it, and handed the article to the pawnbroker, saying, 'give me ten cents.' And, boys, what do you suppose it was? A pair of baby shoes, little things with the buttons only a trifle soiled, as if they had been worn only once or twice. 'Where did you get these?' asked the pawnbroker. 'Got 'em at home,' replied the man, who had an intelligent face and the manner of a gentleman despite his sad condition. 'My—my wife bought them for our baby. Give me ten cents for 'em—I want a drink.' 'You had better take the shoes back to your wife; the baby will need them,' said the pawnbroker. 'No s—she won't, because—because she's dead. She's lying at home now—died last night.' As he said this the poor fellow broke down, bowed his head on the show case and cried like a child. Boys," said the drummer, "you can laugh if you please, but I—I have a baby of my own at home, and I swear I'll never drink another drop." Then he got up and went into another car. His companions glanced at each other in silence; no one laughed; the bottle disappeared, and soon each was sitting in a seat by himself reading a newspaper.—Chicago Herald.

THE BY ALL ODDS BEST EQUIPPED RAILROAD IN THE WORLD.

Let it be forever remembered that the

Chicago & North-Western RAILWAY

is the best and shortest route to and from Chicago and Council Bluffs (Omaha), and that it is preferred by all well posted travelers when passing to or from

CALIFORNIA and COLORADO.

It also operates the best route and the short line between

Chicago and St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Milwaukee, LaCrosse, Sparta, Madison, Fort Howard (Green Bay), Wis., Winona, Owatonna, Mankato, Minn., Cedar Rapids, DesMoines, Webster City, Algona, Clinton, Marshalltown, Iowa, Freeport, Elgin, Rockford, Ill., are amongst its 800 local stations on its lines.

Among a few of the numerous points of superiority enjoyed by the patrons of this road are its DAY COACHES, which are the finest that human art and ingenuity can create; its PALATIAL SLEEPING CARS, which are models of comfort and elegance; its PALACE DRAWING ROOM CARS, which are unsurpassed by any; and its widely celebrated

North-Western Dining Cars,

the like of which are not run by any other road anywhere. In short, it is asserted that IT IS THE BEST EQUIPPED ROAD IN THE WORLD.

All points of interest North, Northwest and West of Chicago, business centers, summer resorts and noted hunting and fishing grounds are accessible by the various branches of this road.

It owns and controls over 5,000 miles of road, and has over four hundred passenger conductors constantly caring for its millions of patrons.

Ask your ticket agent for tickets via this route AND TAKE NONE OTHER. All leading ticket agents sell them. It costs no more to travel on this route, that gives first-class accommodations, than it does to go by the poorly equipped roads.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 22. CHICAGO, MAY 29, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

A TEMPERANCE revival at the Zulu mission, South Africa, has resulted in 900 pledges, secured in one week.

THE American minister at Siam, Gen. Haldeman, has persistently refused to license a single American liquor dealer in that country. A noble exception to the action of the representatives of other nations.

THE advocates of personal liberty in Kansas having made a kind of fortress of Dodge City wherein they have set up a government at variance with the law of the state, recently notified Governor St. John and the president of the Kansas temperance union not to visit that city in the interests of prohibition as they had been announced to do, as the visit and its mission would "not be tolerated" by these liberty loving citizens. The intolerance of the tolerant—the oppression of personal liberty was never more signally manifested.

WE are always glad to believe the best of politicians and political candidates, and so rejoiced in copying the statement of the New York Witness regarding Gen. Joseph A. Hawley's total abstinence and prohibition proclivities. But a trusty worker writes from New York on this wise:

I called on an intimate friend of Gen. Hawley this afternoon. He says, "Hawley is not a total abstainer, and is not in favor of prohibition."

She further says that the gentleman in question added:

"Do not say that I think he drinks, for I do not think so."

Now taking the two statements together the matter seems more "hazy" than ever. If he is not a total abstainer and yet does not drink, what sort of a specimen is he? An amphibious politician?

THAT able exponent of physiological research, Dr. Carpenter, has given us in the Nineteenth Century for February, a matter of fact that has its lesson no less than if founded on total abstinence premises.

There were, he says, two regiments in India, one a remarkably temperate regiment, the 84th, and in it the normal death rate was 12.1. There was another regiment that was not so temperate though not altogether intemperate, the 63d, the death rate of which was something like 78.2. Now, these regiments had to march from the same place to another place, but in different directions, in a very unhealthy season. It was very wet, and there was a good deal of cholera prevailing at the time. The temperate regiment, the 84th, got to the end of its march without suffering any sickness, whereas the sickness which attacked the 63d, or intemperate one, was so great that it filled all its own transports and was obliged to borrow the sick palanquins belonging to the 84th. This account ought to be put up in every soldiers' barrack in the country and in every hospital.

WHEN our southern sisters go to the polls they have a remarkably "winning way with them." Last week in a Louisiana parish—Rapides—on an election day when license was the issue, the women of the parish, white and black went to the polls at seven o'clock in the morning and stayed till the polls closed at night encouraging the willing and laboring with the doubtful voters, and supplying hot coffee and cold lemonade to all who would partake. This was done under the direction of a member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union specially detailed to manage the affair, and she did her part in a way to out-general the liquor-dealers for the first time in the history of Louisiana. Nearly every woman, black and white wore a badge with the words "Education and Prohibition." They would not let a man vote until they had labored with him. At the Alexandria poll 330 votes were cast against license and 62 for. Pineville Ward gave 89 against and 23 for license. Cheneyville gave about 200 majority against license. It is thought that the whole parish has gone the same way.

WE do not know that it is true that Gen. Oglesby, the republican candidate for governor in this state is claiming a temperance record, but rumor has something to that effect. A German landlady, however, in one of the towns of Northern Illinois, where Governor Oglesby spoke a few weeks ago, says: "Governor Oglesby is no temperance man. He brought a basket of wine to the hotel here the other night, and I drank with him till midnight."

It is pitiful, or would be, if it were not worse, that temperance voters are called upon year after year, campaign after campaign, to come at the beck of party and elect men who flaunt their unwisdom and disgrace in the voters' faces. Gen. Oglesby's magnificent services as a soldier, and his magnetic and noble qualities as a man are eclipsed by the record of today. He is no conqueror who does not conquer himself. He who is endowed with power to attract and hold the masses, is a more dangerous ruler than any other if his example be a dangerous one. Christian voter, watch your boy's enthusiasm for these so-called "splendid heroes." Do not let him see you support the man whose practice you warn him to shun.

THE question to be asked of candidates this year, is not, Were you a good soldier in the war of twenty years ago? but, Are you loyal to the true interests of the country today?

The National W. C. T. U. will ask the party conventions to formulate platforms in which the evil that now afflicts the land, and causes more ruin than "the combined evils of war, pestilence and famine," shall be properly denounced, and the train laid for its overthrow. They will ask that total abstainers be nominated for office, as only such men can consistently advocate and lead in such a movement.

The National Temperance Society will also make appeal to these conventions, asking that the right of the people to control the alcoholic liquor traffic be recognized in the several platforms, and that they contain also a recommendation of National constitutional prohibition. No equivocal utterances will be accepted by the temperance people this year.

MANY articles have of late contained a statement of figures from Vermont, true as far do they go, regarding prohibition there, yet but half the truth. In the state of Vermont where a prohibitory law constantly increasing in stringency, has existed for twenty years, yet last year according to returns of internal revenue collectors, there were 446 places where intoxicating liquors were sold, paying taxes of $14,000. This is the explanation given by a unquestioned authority. The prohibition law in Vermont provides for the establishment of a liquor agency in each town, to sell for medicinal and mechanical purposes, and the United States official collects a fee from each of these, also from each of the one hundred druggists of the state. Subtract the number of these town agencies and druggists from 446 and we venture the guess that there will be left a very small remainder. We are also content with the favorable comparison of the special tax ($14,000) of Vermont, with that of Massachusetts $(248,-979.87,) a license state.

Multiply $14,000 by five, since Massachusetts has about five times the population of Vermont, and we then have but seventy thousand dollars in an equal population, under prohibitory law, against more than three times that amount, actual returns in the Massachusetts of today, ruled by the liquor traffic. A good show for prohibition.

MEMORIAL FLOWERS.

BY ESTHER T. HOUSH.

Unnumbered graves have hidden lain,
'Neath the frost and dew of years;
Unnumbered graves of heroes slain,
Once mourned by a Nation's tears.

Forgotten, now, in the noise of life,
In the peace securely won;
Forgotten, now, there's no din of strife,
From rise to setting of sun.

Forgotten? Oh, they were strong and brave,
Their friends were many and true!
And they loved the land they died to save,
They died for me and you!

Forgotten? Each was a mother's boy;
Each was the pride of a woman's heart.
Can mothers forget? Is true love a toy
That breaks when the moorings of life do part?

In rounded grave by ivy mantled green,
Nature, the pitying mother seeks to hide
The scars her bosom bears. In silvery sheen
O'er the forgotten droops night's curtain wide.

Lo! when in morning lost the shadows deep,
A thousand banners flutter to the breeze;
And living hands do hold for those who sleep,
The dear old flag they love o'er land and seas.

List! to the tread of the coming throng,
As they bear the garlands gay!
List! to the murmurs of requiem song,
As they kneel by the graves to pray!

Forgotten no more! from sea to lake,
Crowned with flowers our heroes rest!
And earth smiles peace; for the soldier's sake,
Heaven lends her benediction blest!

Oh, in the hush of this solemn thought,
Banish all trace of the past away!
And for the boon their dying bought,
Garland alike the Blue and the Grey!

Forgotton? No, never! while o'er our loved land,
Flowers springing to beauty, up from the sod,
Image their sleeping, till by His command,
Glorious they mount to the bosom of God!

ST. PAUL AND THE WOMEN.

BY REV. DANIEL L. COLLIE, PASTOR M. E. CHURCH SOUTH, LEBANON, KY.

"Let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law. And if they will learn any thing, let them ask their husbands at home: for it is a shame for women to speak in the church." I Cor. 14: 34, 35.

Aware of the fact that this is the passage of scripture usually quoted by those who maintain that women have no right to become public teachers, and being fully persuaded in my own mind that such a use of the passage is wholly a perversion of the Apostle's meaning, a sense of duty impels me to place before the public what I understand to be its true meaning.

I am willing to admit in the outset that taking this language just as it stands, without any reference to other passages, or to the customs of society when Paul wrote, it seems to be a perpetual injunction served upon the feminine portion of our race. Are we to take this language as we find it without any modification of words or phrases? If so, we must insist that the moment a woman enters a church she must place a seal upon her lips, and never utter a word till she finds herself again upon the street. She must not sing, she must not even repeat the Lord's Prayer; she dare not teach a class in Sunday school, for then she would have to talk in the church, and St. Paul says emphatically, "Let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak," and we know that to keep silence is not to say a word.

I suppose that no one will dare affirm that Paul means all this. Then we can unanimously agree that we must look for a modified meaning. In trying to find that meaning we should be guided by reason and other passages of scripture, and not grope our way in darkness, blinded by prejudices that are a reproach to Christian men and women. Before proceeding further, I wish to quote the language of Dr. Adam Clarke, the eminent scholar and commentator:

Let your women keep silence in the churches. "This was a Jewish ordinance; and women were not permitted to teach in the assemblies, or even to ask questions. The rabbins taught that 'a woman should know nothing but the use of her distaff!' And the sayings of Rabbi Eliezer are both worthy of remark and execration. They are these: 'Let the words of the law be burned, rather than that they should be delivered to a woman.'

"This was their condition till the time of the gospel, when, according to the prediction of Joel, the Spirit of God was to be poured out on the women as well as on the men, that they might prophesy, i. e. teach. And that they did prophesy or teach is evident from what the apostle says chapter xi. 5, where he lays down rules to regulate this part of their conduct while ministering in the church. It is evident from the context that the apostle refers here to asking questions, and what we call dictating in the assemblies. It was permitted to any man to ask questions, to object, altercate, attempt to refute, etc., in the synagogue; but this liberty was not allowed to a woman. St. Paul confirms this in reference also to the Christian church; he orders them to keep silence; and, if they wished to learn any thing, let them inquire of their husbands at home, because it was perfectly indecorous for women to be contending with men in public assemblies on points of doctrine, cases of conscience, etc. But this by no means intimated that when a woman received any particular influence from God to enable her to teach, that she was not to obey that influence; on the contrary, she was to obey it, and the apostle lays down directions in chapter xi. for regulating her personal appearance when thus employed. All that the apostle opposes here is their questioning, finding fault, disputing, etc., in the Christian church, as the Jewish men were permitted to do in their synagogues."

This is decidedly the most sensible and satisfactory explanation of this passage that I have seen, and I heartily endorse it. But Dr. Clarke, with all his learning, was fallible, and of course liable to be mistaken; and, I wish to say distinctly that I do not take this view of the subject simply because he does, but there are several other reasons why I believe that the apostle does not refer to ordinary public teaching when he says, "Let your women keep silence in the churches." A few of these reasons I now proceed to give:

1. My first argument is based upon the meaning of the word prophesy as used by the prophet Joel and the apostle Peter. Joel 2: 28. "And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy." What does the prophet mean by prophesy?* Whatever he means by your sons shall prophesy, he evidently means by your daughters shall prophesy. The Hebrew word used by Joel, which is translated by our English word prophesy, is naba; and literally means to "flow forth;" and is doubtless used with reference to the idea that under the influence of the Holy Spirit words of divine truth would flow forth from the mouth as a stream flows from its fountain. But there is no intimation as to whether this prophesying should be done in public or private. We will get Peter to explain that. When he arose to address the people on the day of Pentecost, after answering the charge that "these men are full of new wine," he says, "But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel: And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and daughters shall prophesy." Acts 2: 16, 17. In regard to this quotation made by Peter from the prophet, I have three observations to make.

(1) We must admit that Peter knew what Joel meant when he said, "Your sons and your daughters shall prophesy." To say that he did not would be to question his inspiration and doubt his ability to properly quote scripture.

(2) Knowing the meaning of the prophet he would not use a word that would mislead his hearers.

(3) If we can ascertain the meaning of the word Peter uses in making the quotation, then we will know how he understood the prediction of Joel.

Fortunately we can do this. Turn again to Acts 2: 17. "Your sons and your daughters shall (Gr. propheteno) prophesy." The literal meaning of the Greek word propheteno used by Peter and translated prophesy, is to "publicly expound." (See Young's Analytical Concordance, p. 779.) Keep in mind the fact that the daughters were to propheteno "publicly expound" as well as the sons.

2. My second argument is based on I. Cor. 11:5. "But every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered dishonoreth her head." In the fourth verse of the same chapter we read, "Every man praying or prophesying having his head covered dishonoreth his head."

I note two facts here. (1) The unavoidable conclusion is that at that time women were in the habit of praying and prophesying. The language of Paul implies a statement of the fact. (2) Whatever the word prophesying means in the fourth verse when reference is made to a "man" it certainly has the same meaning in the fifth verse where a "woman" is mentioned. The second proposition will be strengthened if it turns out that the same word is used in the original in both places. Now for the facts. We find that St. Paul here uses the same Greek word propheteno, that St. Peter uses in Acts 2:17, and also he employes the same word in the fifth verse where he speaks of "a woman prophesying" that he does in the fourth verse where he refers to "a man prophesying." Let us substitute the meaning of this word, and see how it reads. "Every woman that prayeth or propheteno, expounds publicly, with her head uncovered, dishonoreth her head," etc. This rendering will doubtless grate very harshly upon the ears of some people who cannot bear the idea of a woman appearing in public but it is unquestionably the true meaning of the passage.

Nearly every Bible student is acquainted with Conybeare and Howson's Life and Epistles of St. Paul. Their version of Paul's Epistles is probable the most literal translation that has ever been made. I give their version of I. Cor. 11: 4 5. "If a man were to stand up in the congregation to pray or prophesy with a veil over his head, he would bring shame on his head (by wearing the token of subjection). But if a woman stands forth to pray or prophesy, with her head unveiled, she brings shame upon her own head, as much as if she were shaven."

But why does St. Paul give advice upon this point? I reply; In that age of the world custom demanded that every woman who appeared in any public place should be veiled. The apostle recognizes this custom without a word of approval or disapproval, but simply directs that when a woman did appear as a public teacher she should conform to this usage of society, that she might not bring suspicion upon herself.

3. My third argument is founded on Acts 21:89. "And the next day we that were of Paul's company departed, and came unto Cesarea; and we entered into the house of Philip, the evangelist; which was one of the seven, and we abode with him. And the same man had four daughters, virgins, which did prophesy."

Observe, (1) It is here stated that the four daughters of Philip "prophesied." What does that mean? Again we must refer to the Greek, and in so doing we learn that St. Luke here uses the same word that Peter uses in Acts 2:17, and that Paul uses in 1. Cor. 11: 4, 5. "And the same man had four daughters, virgins, which did (propheteno) publicly expound." Observe, (2.) There is no condemnation of their conduct, If St. Paul had been so much opposed to women teaching in public as some would represent him to be, I imagine he would not have "tarried there many days," (as we learn in verse 10,) unless this irregularity had been discontinued. But on the contrary, I will venture the opinion that Paul listened with interest and edification to some one, or perhaps all of these sisters. For after all, St. Paul was not a crusty old bachelor and woman hater as many have been led to believe.

4. My fourth argument is founded on reason.

If woman had any moral or intellectual defect that disqualified her as a teacher we might admit that there is some foundation for the theory that I oppose. But we know that there is no such defect. God is the author of intellect wherever it may be found, either in man or woman. Wherever proper tests have been made woman has shown herself man's equal in almost every department of literature and science. Christianity is the only system of religion that lifts woman to her true position, and for those who claim to be its teachers to be continually harping about woman getting out of her sphere, if the presumes to become a public teacher, is to my mind inconsistent. Christians generally believe that God calls people to special work. Those who deny woman's right to become a public teacher, must either say that God never calls her to any special work; or if He does He takes care not to call her to any work that would necessitate public speaking. Let us imagine ourselves for a moment on the platform of those who would keep woman from appearing in public to advocate any measure. One step in the descending scale will bring us to the old rabbinical idea that "the words of the law had better be burned than that they should be delivered to a woman." One step still lower will bring us to a level with most heathen nations where woman is generally looked upon to be fit only for a servant of man. Much of the talk that we hear about woman "being" and "not doing," that she is to be as the rose to remain in "her place" and delight the passer by with the fragrance of her undying love is pure sentimentalism, unworthy of the light and progress of our day. Yes, woman has work to do; and she is doing it, notwithstanding the croaking of all the Rip Van Winkles, who on account of their excessive long "nap" have gotten twenty-five years behind the times. The insinuation we sometimes hear that because a woman, impelled by a sense of duty, leaves her home to plead the cause of down-trodden humanity, although to do so she must become a traveling woman, that she therefore loses her right to be treated kindly and courteously by a Christian community, is a reproach that ought to be resented by every true woman.

There are some people who would go to hear an African, or an Indian, or a Hindoo, or a Chinaman, or almost anything else, if you will only call him a "man," that respectfully decline to hear the most intelligent and cultured women this country can produce, simply because—I almost blush to pen the reason—because they are women. Oh consistency, surely thou art a stranger to some of the children of men! Let me briefly recapitulate:

1. I have produced the language of Dr. Adam Clarke, a distinguished scholar and critic, who says that when St. Paul says, "Let your women keep silence in the churches," he does not refer to ordinary public teaching, but to their "questioning, finding fault, disputing, etc., in the Christian church, as the Jewish men were permitted to do in their synagogues."

2. I have shown that when Peter quotes the prediction of Joel, "Your sons and your daughters shall prophesy," on the day of Pentecost, he uses a word which means to "publicly expound."

3. I have shown that St. Paul, I Cor. 11:5, refers to the fact of women praying and prophesying, and that he does not condemn their conduct, but simply gives directions as to their personal appearance while so engaged.

4. I have shown from Acts 21:9 that the four daughters of Philip prophesied, and that St. Luke in stating the fact uses the Greek word propheteno which means to "publicly expound."

5. I have shown from reason that as woman has no moral or intellectual defect to disqualify her as a teacher, in the absence of any positive command restraining her therefrom, she has an inalienable right to become a public teacher, if circumstances demand it.

AN APPEAL.

BY MISS LUCIA E. F. KIMBALL.

The following letter written by Rev. Dr. F. A. Noble, of Union Park Congregational church, Chicago, to a member of the International Sunday School Lesson Committee before the presentation of the petition asking for quarterly temperance lessons in the regular course, in 1881, we wish might be read carefully be every one who doubts concerning the fitness of such a request which will again be made to the new committee appointed at Louisville, in June.

CHICAGO, July 7, 1881,

REV. DR.——, My Dear Brother.—On my own account and in behalf of a very large and intelligent and earnest class of Christian men and women, I want to urge upon you, and through you, upon the committee having the matter in charge the desirableness of making provision for quarterly temperance lessons in the regular course of the international series.

This matter has doubtless been before you many times and in many forms. What the specific objection to such a provision may be I do not know, nor can I even conjecture. Recently I have seen a paragraph floating in the newspapers to the effect that the committee think it better to give just so much prominence, and no more, to the subject as is given in the successive passages of scripture brought up for consideration. If this be the ground taken, with all due deference to the superior ability and devotedness of the distinguished brethren who constitute the committee, I beg leave to dissent. I do it for two reasons. First, there are times when the public opinion is sensitive to the enormity of some one particular evil, and men and women are aroused to vigorous opposition. At such times it is duty to organize and concentrate all forms of force which promise to be effective in removing the evil and helping the world forward.

This as you well know, is the history of the growth of civilization, and of the kingdom.

One by one iniquities are stamped out. One by one great moral victories are gained.

Intemperance is the evil which now looms largest and most threatening in the minds of the Christian nations. There is a sound of going in the tops of the Mulberry trees. It is an hour for vigorous and united and general effort against drunkenness and the liquor traffic.

When the eyes of the people are open to see, ought not all the light of God's Word to be gathered up and brought to bear on this measureless evil of the intoxicating cup?

So it seems to me. Both for the sake of humanity and the honor of the Holy Scriptures I would have this done.

Second, the committee is in a position of influence in view not only of their eminence as men, but also of their relation to all our Sabbath schools, to make their outline of teaching and suggestion most effective.

Temperance lessons will be arranged by somebody and taught. There should be unity of plan and the best ends would be gained were you to give quarterly, such clear and sound and vigorous lessons as your committee might easily prepare. It would help immensely in every way, and the moral effect of temperance instruction coming from this source would be much greater than from any other.

With profound respect and brotherly love, I am very truly yours, F. A. NOBLE.

God has wonderfully blessed this department of our Woman's Christian Temperance Union and we give to Him most grateful thanks that in the seventh year of National Sunday school work a superintendent of the same has been secured for every state and territory and that in each there is organized effort having for its object the religious education of the children and young people upon the subject.

May I not ask that all who long for the "hastening of the coming of Christ's kingdom" will pray earnestly that the convicting and enlightening power of the Holy Spirit may descend upon the 84,730 Sunday schools of our land with their 6,820,835 scholars and their 932,283 teachers. Who can measure the influence of this army of 7,753,118 united under Immanuel's banner for the overthrow of this great evil.

Pray for the meeting at Louisville that heavenly wisdom may be given in all our planning and that God's will may be done.

Let us ever remember that we are followers of Him of whom it was said ages before he was manifest in the flesh, He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till He have set judgment in the earth.

According to our faith and works will that day be hindered or hastened.

THE NORMAL INSTITUTE OF HYGIENE AND HEREDITY.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Mrs. Dr. J. H. Kellogg, National Superintendent of Hygiene, is doing a great work in connection with the W. C. T. U.

In accordance with her suggestion, a very successful institute in the interests of the departments of hygiene and heredity has just closed its sessions in Calvary Baptist church in this city.

At the opening session Mrs. Kellogg gave an address on "The Relation of Hygiene to Temperance" which, for construction and adaptation, could not be surpassed.

Elliott Coues, M. D., Prof. of Anatomy, medical department of Columbia University, delivered the opening lecture, on "The Human Mechanism," delighting the audience with his beautiful description of the temple in which we dwell, clothing his extensive knowledge in such simple words that even a child could understand.

The program presented the names of many leading physicians. "Household Hygiene," Albert L. Gibon, M. D., Medical Director U. S. Navy and president American Public Health Association; "Some of the Causes of Ill Health of the Present Generation," Joseph Tabor Johnson, M. D., Prof. of Obstetrics, medical department University of Georgetown; "Muscle Hygiene," William Lee, M. D., Prof. of Physiology, medical department Columbia University.

Mrs. Lucinda Corr, M. D., superintendent of hygiene for Illinois, gave a very instructive lecture on "The Problem of Dress."

J. H. Kellogg, M. D., member of the Michigan state board of health, is a great helper to his wife, and one of the finest of lecturers, illustrating his subjects by means of the blackboard. He spoke on "Hygiene of Respiration and Ventilation," "The Wonderful Problem of Digestion," "The Use and Value of Fluids," and "The Nervous System."

Dr. Sarah H. Stevenson, of Chicago, was a delightful helper. Mrs. Dr. Kemp, of Harrisburg, Pa., read an able paper on "What is Life?" Mrs. Lake, superintendent of hygiene for Maryland, spoke in the interests of the departments, and our district superintendents, Mrs. Mayse, heredity, and Mrs. McPherson, hygiene, read papers bearing on their work here.

To crown our institute, we had with us our dear Hannah Whitall Smith. Who can give such Bible readings?

The closing afternoon session was given to the young ladies. Miss Laura Towner conducted the devotional exercises. Miss Belle Fitzgerald presided and introduced Miss Mary Whitall Smith, secretary of our heredity department, in a most graceful manner, bringing forth the applause of the meeting. Miss Smith's subject was "A Girl who wants to speak to Girls." What shall I say of her? Well, she is her mother's own child, and bids fair to surpass her in directness of manner and charms of enunciation. We listened with joy to home truths clothed in choicest language and were thankful in our hearts for such a "girl." She conducted a question social in a most charming manner, evincing in her answers a store of information in reference to the laws of health and the duties of the coming woman.

The institute has started many new lines of thought and added to our number some valuable workers. We were so delighted in having secured the promise from Dr. and Mrs. Kellogg that they will stop here on their way to the Bahama Islands in December.

THE PIE QUESTION.

DEAR "GRANDMA WORKANDTHINK":—You will "think" perhaps that I have taken a lesson from a crab if I attack your letter from the last question; "and why not"? There are several why nots. The "dark, rich mass" described cannot be healthful, must always be hurtful in a hygienic sense, and if it contain cider either boiled or unboiled it may do much harm in another sense. "Dark, rich masses" highly spiced and used as food not only create but foster unhealthy appetites. Truly "men have sought out many inventions," and so have women and one of the worst is mince pie.

Since we cannot all be autocrats in our households; since some of us believe that it is our duty to provide mince pie for those who have a right to say what shall be set before them, we may, nay we ought, to study the pie question if there be a point in it that touches anywhere the duty we owe to God before the duty we owe to our fellow. There may be a way to modify what we have not full power to set right.

The point in this matter seems to me to be the question of cider or no cider, boiled or not boiled. If you have the cider, you must either buy it or make it, and it is countenancing and maintaining a great wrong to do either. We all know that the devil creeps into the cider at some time very soon after it is made and we have no right to make or meddle with what is given or held under his hand and seal. Sour fruit juices, if canned in glass, will not ferment, and will supply not only the acid but also the moisture needed for making the "dark, rich mass," and will prove just as acceptable to the vitiated appetite which craves a very hurtful thing. I do not think the difference would be known unless explained. I suppose it would be an evidence of the "tact" we see so often recommended by our W. C. T. U. writers of late to allow it to pass without explanation, but I am more than a little doubtful if "tact," or "finesse" as the French people call it, is well enough understood to be a really safe substitute for honesty which has its spring in a heart full of love. I would by all means let the pie recommend itself and then claim the triumph, if only a small one, for "our side."

I am often accused of being "radical" because I will not use, or allow to be used, either cider or the extracts and essences prepared with alcohol for household purposes. I always answer that I do not seek to adjust questions of duty for others, I only seek to answer to God for my own conscience. We are required not only to act conscientiously but to have educated consciences, and a careful study of the pie question will show you, dear grandma, that it is not the truest hospitality to set cider mince pies before the daughters who come to the home nest at Christmas tide to go out to other home nests to teach the home songs. Oh, set them singing pure songs through the world without a false note all through. We must remember that all the sands of the seashore are numbered, and that nothing seems small to Him who sees the perfect rounded whole for the perfecting of which He has created you and me and set us where we are.

GRANDMA THINKANDWORK.

CHALK TALKING THROUGH KANSAS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—On the wing in Kansas, where we have had some splendid meetings. If any one is discouraged at the temperance outlook they want to "go west," to Kansas. Have filled engagements in Elkridge, Emporia, Burlingame, Hutchinson and Nickerson. The work is progressing finely, and meetings well attended, notwithstanding the inclement weather and other entertainments on hand.

The prohibitionists held a convention in Burlingame and the Scranton people came over, some in big wagons, some in carriages, and the "Cold Water Army" carried banners on which were inscribed "Tremble King Alcohol, we shall grow up," (I think he is already trembling in Kansas), and "Prohibition does prohibit," etc., and they, together with the B. children, formed into line and marched keeping perfect time to the beating of two drums. When they began to beat I grew enthusiastic and fell into line, and they marched right into the convention and occupied the reserved seats. I wish, dear UNION SIGNAL, you could have seen their happy and eager faces.

I am booked for Leavenworth for tomorrow, Sunday, thence to Atchison, Lamar, Joplin and Springfield, and a few more places in Missouri, then to Manistee, Mich., and Joliet, Ill. I meant that these should close my engagements for this season, for I am very tired indeed, but northern Kansas wants some dates in June, so I may come to them, but cannot take a date after July 1.

I was in western Pennsylvania three weeks ago and we had a good time there, and I found a good solid sister with pluck and perseverance, who is going to take up chalk talking. She will try her hand at a convention soon. Came from there to New Albany, Ind. The young ladies there as well as in Oil City, are doing fine work, and beside their other work have organized a Band of Hope at the Orphan's Home. I went up and made a picture for them on the blackboard, and a happier, sweeter lot of little folk one seldom sees. There are two ladies there who will go to illustrating, and in Burlingame I met another of the Rosa Reiniger style, a teacher in the primary school, which to my mind is the highest grade, who has much artistic talent, who is going to begin. Dear me, we shall have to hold a Chalk Talkers' convention by and by and compare our methods, and so help and inspire each other. But, dear UNION SIGNAL, I've been three months nearly trying to get time to tell you of the glorious meeting we had in Aurora, Ill., the way the "Cold Water Army" was divided into companies instead of classes. The boys would come in in no other way. Then the little ones didn't want to be called the infant department, so they called them the Infantry, and the way each company recited a temperance sentiment and flourished their banners and shouldered arms would have delighted your loyal heart I tell you. There were tears in my eyes. The townspeople looked on in wonder, for it was all done in military style and order. If any one wants to know how to get in the boys (and there were girls too) and keep them in, and through them their parents and friends, address the president of the W. C. T. U., Aurora, Ill., for I haven't time to tell you. NELLY BAYLEY.

RURAL WORK.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I was greatly interested in reading the leaflet on the above subject prepared by Mrs. Campbell, and feel moved to send you a few words out of my own experience, for in my judgment we make a great mistake in neglecting the "hidden neighborhoods" of our land.

I like the term "school districts," and the school districts of this country are mighty centers of power. "All Illinois for Christ and temperance," has a ring that sends a thrill of joy through our hearts, but how are we going to secure all Illinois? The prospect of capturing her cities is not flattering, but we can take her rural population if we will. How? In several ways perhaps, but no one way is more sure of success than the way that leads by every school house in the country. And that means hard work, but it is work that will pay a hundred fold.

And here let me give a bit of my own experience. Last winter in Ontario county, N. Y., I was asked to take a certain township and work it up for no-license. About six weeks before election I secured a map of the township, and with the school commissioner planned a campaign which took in every school house in the township, and then began a personal visitation. There were about fifteen districts to be visited and it meant storms to be braved, deep snows to go through, and piercing winds to face. But it has been proved that a temperance woman can stand all these and many other hardships and not only survive but thrive. From school house to school house I went armed and equipped with a letter of introduction from the commissioner to the teachers and an abundant supply of temperance literature selected for the specific object of securing votes for no-license. The teachers everywhere gave me cordial welcome, and opened the way for me to talk to the children. After a short speech of ten or fifteen minutes to the school, and getting them pledged to help in the work, I then gave the tracts into their keeping, putting the responsibility upon them of seeing that they were not only read but distributed and preserved. Oh how enthusiastic the boys became, even those who had come a long way up in their teens, when I made them feel that they were necessary to the success of our cause.

And here let me drop a word to those who would enlist the children, don't talk all around a thing. Nothing wins a bright, wide awake boy so quickly as a short, sharp, cut-across-the-corner talk, in which he is made to feel that he is necessary to the subject in hand, and a factor which cannot be left out of the problem. Appeal to the manliness of boys, to the womanliness of girls and you have nearly accomplished your object, for it is a delight to children to have confidence bestowed upon them.

In the evenings, whenever practicable, I held a meeting for voters and here is another point worthy of notice. These meetings being held in the school house, the hard worked farmers and laboring men of all kinds could come without being to the trouble of "fixing up." Many men in the country would attend temperance and religious meetings, if they could wear their everyday clothes, but to feel obliged to wash and dress up in order to be fit for some church or hall is to them a task so great that often they will stay at home rather than pass through the ordeal. Meetings in the district school houses do away with that objection. Place before these men as they come to the meetings, plain, common sense facts. Be to some pains in securing accurate knowledge in regard to their taxes, and such other personal items of interest. In short, be practical, talk common sense, saying nothing for effect that cannot be proved, and appeal to the conscience of your hearers.

This I tried to do in the work assigned me, and when election day came the result of this school house work, this plunging through snow drifts, and braving of storms, was one hundred and thirty votes for no-license in the place of only fifty-six the year before; a victory at the polls in that one township of one hundred and thirty majority for no-license! One thought more. Is it not possible that we temperance workers try to cover too much ground at once? We see so much to be done, that we grow impatient, and in haste to fly here and there, and so fail to be felt anywhere?

I remember when a little girl and had some weeding to do in the garden, my mother used to say, "I would rather you would weed one yard square well, than to weed this whole bed of many feet in length, in a slovenly manner." I have tried to carry that principle into my temperance work, and to do well, whatever came for me to do. "Cursed be he who doeth the work of the Lord deceitfully," (Jer. 48:10.) the margin reads, negligently, cursed be he who doeth the work of the Lord "negligently," carelessly, slovenly! Dear workers, this carefulness may not permit of great brilliancy, but in the end it will afford great satisfaction to our souls, and great results for the Master. LOUISE S. ROUNDS.

SUNDAY SCHOOL TEMPERANCE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The messages from the dear workers all over the continent sent through our UNION SIGNAL whether telling of victory or defeat, have all been very interesting to me, therefere I venture to contribute a chapter of my experience.

As superintendent of Sunday school department in our state W. C. T. U., I have been trying to devise some plan whereby Christian people indifferent to active temperance work might be reached, knowing that if work be done in the Sunday school it must be in connection with the church in order to be most successful.

In November I sent out eight hundred circulars to every pastor, every superintendent of Sunday school, every superintendent of Sunday school work in our unions. These circulars were accompanied by questions with blanks for answers and the request that they be filled and returned. As a result I received a large number of reports, showing that little special work was being done for temperance in our Sunday schools. Thereupon I determined to go forth after the manner of temperance women and speak unto the people, especially Christian people, of the things that were in my heart as to this matter, and as these reports in many cases opened the way for communication I had no difficulty in arranging a long series of appointments. I have been out in this work several weeks, not only endeavoring to present the claims of the Sunday school department but endeavoring to create an interest in the W. C. T. U. in general.

My plan is to have every Sunday school organized with constitution setting apart a certain number of Sundays as special temperance Sundays, when by sermon in morning, lesson and concert or address in the evening, with the passing of the pledge the people may be thoroughly instructed. This plan has been heartily endorsed by Christians of all denominations and I hope that the wherewithal to push this important work may be forthcoming so that many of our churches may stand upon a higher plain in regard to this reform ere long.

I have been enabled to reach eight towns where there were no unions, organizing in five of them. At Clarendon a Y. W. C. T. U. was formed with Mrs. H. A. Spencer as president. We expect to hear that they are growing in influence and power because they have a mind to work. Springfield union, with Mrs. Cooper as president, was organized under very favorable circumstances, with the members of the Sons of Temperance very cordial and helpful, some of them promising to become honorary members.

From Springfield I went to Ludlow where I foued the ladies quite ready to fall into line. We organized in the afternoon, Mrs. Coolidge president, and in the evening, after my address, an invitation was given to all to help in the good work, whereupon ten gentlemen came forward and became honorary members. This union has bravely voted to arrange for, and entertain a county convention, also to have Mrs. Barney address them, she being now in the state to attend the institutes. They with the Springfield ladies also subscribed for two copies of THE UNION SIGNAL to be circulated among their members. (Every union ought to do this.)

Cavendish was the next stopping place. Here we found Rev. Foster Henry and Mrs. Henry, holding the fort, with a small band of helpers for temperance and righteousness.

Owing to the darkness and rain not many were out in the evening, but we organized, not leaving things on a satisfactory basis, even though our strong friend Gen. Davis assured us that the union would not die out.

Following on down to Brattleboro, I found at the depot waiting me, one of the strongest and best friends of temperance in the state, Mr. C. W. Wyman. A man who has endured persecution for the cause, and yet goes grandly on doing all he can without fear, and without compromise with the enemy.

Brattleboro is also the home of Mrs. Mary E. Tucker, president of Windham county W. C. T. U. a woman who is doing wise and thorough work in her domain. And as you all know here is the abiding place of our National superintendent of department of influencing the press, Mrs. E. T. Housh.

The following day being Sunday, we gave an address in the Congregational church in the evening at West Brattleboro, where we found interested ones and expect a flourishing union will be established ere long by Mrs. Tucker. From Brattleboro we crossed the mountains to Wilmington, a distance of twenty miles, by stage, where Mrs. Forrest, Miss Spencer, and a few other ladies are making our cause to prosper. On our way northward we stopped to talk with the ladies at Bellows Falls, promising to return shortly and complete the good work begun. The next place we visited was Windsor, where we succeeded in arousing interest sufficient to warrant a flourishing union at no distant day.

Another short ride by rail and long one by stage took us to Tunbridge and Chelsea. At Tunbridge the ladies are doing effective service. Their bright, energetic little president, Mrs. Gay, had circulated a petition to send to county commissioner, protesting against the illegal sale of liquor at the agency. I had the pleasure of attending the regular business meeting and found that they were business women. Everything was done decently and in order.

From Chelsea back over the dusty road thirteen miles, then home for a few days, until May 11, I found myself at Wells River, where I gave an address in the evening, and afterward organized a union with twenty regular and seven honorary members. For the benefit of those who may think of taking up the work in this way, I would say that my compensation is God's blessing and peace in my heart, and a collection, and I am glad to confess that the collection is the least part of it.

CONSTITUTION FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL ORGANIZATION.

ART. I. This society shall be known as the ——— S. S. Temperance society.

ART. II. It shall be the object of this society to educate public sentiment up to the standard of total abstinence, train the young, save the inebriate, and to devise and execute measures which with the blessing of God will result in the suppression of intemperance.

ART. III. The officers of this society shall be a president, one or more vice presidents, a secretary and treasurer, who shall constitute an executive committee.

ART. IV. The duties of the officers shall be those usual to such offices.

ART. V. Any person may become a member of this organization by signing the following pledge: I do solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from the use, manufacture, and sale of all distilled, fermented and malt liquors including wine, beer and cider as a beverage, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same.

ART. VI. The annual meeting shall be held at such time and place as the executive committee may decide, when the officers shall be elected.

ART. VII. The —— Sundays of the month shall be set apart as temperance Sundays, when the subject may be presented by sermon, lesson in Sunday school and concert or address in the evening.

ART. VIII. This constitution may be altered or amended at any annual meeting by a majority vote of the members present.

W. C T. U. JOURNEYINGS IN LOUISIANA.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—A week ago we left Baton Rouge on the steamer H. Hanna Blanks. That genial, whole-souled man, Capt. L. P. Delahaussaye, in command of the boat, is well known on the river as a gallant and courteous gentleman and as a strict temperance man, a total abstainer from all intoxicants and from that noxious weed, tobacco. He told me that he had never tasted liquor.

Our party were bound for Bastrop, La., in Morehouse parish. The journey up the Mississippi to Red River, up Red to Black River to the town of Trinity, (so named from the confluence here of the Black, Tensas and Little Rivers) and thence into the beautiful, poetic Ouachita, is at most times a delightful one, but now the journey is a sad one. Water is over all the land. People are in the houses with water all around. The stock are protected from drowning by being placed on rafts near the houses, but the gnats are so dreadful that they are dying by the hundreds. Do you wonder that our people in this part of our state are discouraged, disheartened and despondent? A few weeks ago the prospects were bright—crops were planted, and fostered by balmy air and vivifying sunlight were becoming a thing of beauty, and gave good promise of future pecuniary benefit. Now, water, desolation, destruction are all that can be seen. You have no idea of the loneliness pictured everywhere. We stop at post-offices on the river and a man, or sometimes a woman will come out in a risky-looking dugout or pirogue and take the mail bag and get a barrel of meal. God help our people, or else give them strength and courage to bear up under the afflictions He sends to them. Some of the unions in this part of the country are greatly depressed, but they have brave hearts and I know will keep above the storm.

At one place I could name for miles around there is but one merchant to supply the wants of the colored people, and the president of our W. C. T. U. in that place writes me that he absolutely refused to supply the wants of any colored person who would even attend a temperance meeting, much less one who belonged to a temperance union. Of course the colored union which started out so well is about broken up.

We arrived at Monroe on Tuesday evening. On Wednesday we attended a Baptist Sunday school picnic on the Vicksburg, Shreveport & Pacific railroad, where we met many of our temperance workers of Monroe and Trenton, and gave and received encouragement to go on in the work. Mrs. Chapin's name is mentioned by all in loving terms, and her work is named in praise. We went from Monroe to Bastrop on Thursday. It is a drive of twenty-eight miles, part of it through a most beautiful prosperous farming country, part of it though the rolling pine woods. I wish I could send you a bouquet of the lovely wild flowers which brightened the woods. The sweet wild rose of Ouachita, mingled its odors with the spicy pine. The beautiful blue tradescantia contrasted prettily with the white bell like beauty of a flower unknown to me. Scarlet salvia, golden blossoms and flowers of many hues were in profusion blooming in this wilderness. How true it is, that many flowers are made to bloom unseen and brighten the otherwise dark wilderness, showing and speaking the glory of God in their quiet beauty.

My husband was to deliver a lecture in Bastrop, for the benefit of the Woman's Missionary Society. My object in going to Bastrop was to help in the best way I could their newly organized W. C, T. U. but you can scarcely imagine my astonishment and consternation, when just before we reached Bastrop, the stage driver told us that it was announced in the Baptist church the Sunday previous, that Mr. W. H. Goodale would lecture in the Methodist church on Thursday night and that I was to lecture on temperance on Friday night in the Baptist church. It was also announced in the newspaper. With your more advanced ideas you can scarcely put yourself in my place. We Louisiana ladies have such habits of a quiet reticent life, that we shrink with timidity and fear at the very idea of appearing in public. But I saw what was expected, my duty was plain, and I sometime ago learned to fear a duty undone, and to seek for the beauty in duty.

Encouraged by friends and supported by the loving smile, and strengthening presence of him "who is all the world to me," I made may first effort at a public lecture.

The temperance workers in Bastrop are a band of brave and capable women. Mrs. Kate Vaughn, the worthy president, presided over the meeting with grace, ease and dignity. Mrs. Handy, one of the vice presidents sat on the platform and by her presence lent strength to the meeting. That dear mother in Israel, Mrs. A. L. Ross, sat just in front and by her tender smile and earnest face lent courage to the amateur speaker. At the close of the meeting Mrs. Vaughn and Mrs. Handy carried the temperance pledge album around and presented it to every one in the room for signatures, securing twenty-five signers.

By the way, the album used was one left at our house by Mrs. Chapin. I intend to return it to her filled with signers as a souvenir of love from her "little debutante." A good collection was also taken up for the benefit of the union. A lawyer present (my lawyer) talked in the meantime most eloquently and forcibly on the importance of the temperance movement and especially of the adaptability of woman for the grand work. He told of Miss Willard's visit to our home in Baton Rouge, of the sweet influence she left in that home, and of Mrs. Chapin's subsequent visit, which resulted in cementing in strongest bonds that home to the temperance cause.

He said if woman wanted to make herself irrisistibly attractive and wield magnetic influence for good on all around her, that she must enter into the Christian temperance work and let that work chisel her face and mould her character.

One of the noblest men and grandest workers in our state, the Rev. John T. Sawyer, organized the Bastrop union on April 8, 1884; so you see it is very young in days. They are fully organized in many departments of the work, and are energetic in doing all they can. They are trying to establish a reading room. Mr. Silk, the stage driver, a man with a nature as delicate and refined as his name suggests, called for us on Saturday morning, and we bade adieu with reluctant hearts to the kind friends and good people of Bastrop.

I had been invited and hoped to be in Monroe and attend a meeting of the union there on our homeward way, but time and boats wait for no man, so I was compelled to be content with merely looking in on that union. However it was a very pleasant glimpse and I feel nearer to the workers there since I have seen them in meeting and joined them in prayer.

Yours in the work,
MRS. MARY READ GOODALE,

MAMIE'S FANCY.

BY META E. B. THORNE.

"Do they keep it up in heaven?
I heard you tell papa
Today is brother's birthday,—
Do they keep it there, mamma?
Six months ago he left us,—
Six long long months ago.
My precious little playmate,—
I miss the darling so.

"Last year when days were sunny
We used to run and slide;—
I never lacked for pleasure
When he was by my side.
And do you not remember
The pretty picture book
I gave him for his birthday?
I can't forget his look
Of pleasure as he thanked me;—
His blue eyes brightly shone;—
Again it is his birthday,
But far away he's gone.

"Yet don't you think the angels
Remember it? I do.
I guess that they will give him
Some lovely flowers, don't you?
And a golden harp all shining,
(You know he loved to sing,)
And round the throne of glory
His sweet glad voice will ring.

"Perhaps the dear kind Jesus
Will take him by the hand,
And lead him by the river
Where trees fruit-laden stand;
Then He Himself will gather,
From life's fair stately trees,
Fruits rich with heavenly beauty
Our darling child to please.

"So though I cannot send him
Some present from my hand,
I'm glad he is so happy
In yonder glory-land."

JENNY.

"In the sweet by and by,
We shall meet on that beautiful shore."

Where did that voice come from?

I looked round from one cot to another, for the voice was unearthly sweet. At last I saw the singer—such a bit of a girl, with wan cheeks and hollow eyes.

"She's better, ma'am," said the nurse. "Soon as she's better she begins to sing."

"What a bright little face she has!"

"Oh, yes, Jenny is a pretty girl, and happy as a lark when the pain is gone."

"Is she dangerously ill?"

"Well, it's something, miss, from which she can't recover, though it is thought she may live a good many years. She's a very dear child."

I asked permission to speak to the little thing, who, whenever I looked that way, smiled so winningly that she was irresistible.

"You love singing," I said as the wee hand crept into mine.

"Oh, yes, dearly! Can you sing to me?" she asked.

"You shall hear me by-and-by," I said. "Before I go I will sing to all the little ones. How long have you been here, Jenny?"

"Almost a year; ever since my mother died."

"What! have you no mother?"

"I haven't anybody,—that is, of my own," she replied with a sad little smile.

"Were you always sick, my dear?"

"Oh, no; it was trying to save little Johnny and my mother that I got so burnt. We were very poor, you know, and I never remember my father, 'cause he died when I was a baby, the week after Johnny was born. Mother had to go out by the day and lock us in the room, and I took care of Johnny. When she came home, she'd make a fire and give us a nice supper. One night, she came in late and brought some oil for the lamp; but while she was filling it, little Johnny lighted a match so close that it took fire. I pushed little Johnny away, and it didn't touch him; and then I pulled at mother but she'd caught and so had I, and we both blazed up. Oh, it was dreadful!" and the child shuddered. I felt her little fingers tremble. "But I'm all right now," she added quickly, looking up at me with a bright smile.

"But how was the fire put out, my child?"

"I don't know; I never did know. I only woke up here, and I've been here ever since—but mother died." Her lips quivered.

"And Johnny?"

She brightened again.

"Johnny didn't live a great while after mother died, and she's got him."

"And are you happy here?"

"Yes, indeed; they are all so good to me, and I think—it's just like heaven."

I looked round upon the little white cots with their pale-faced occupants, the monotony of white walls, the ever-recurring visits of nurse and physician, and wondered in what depths of social misery the child could have been reared that such a place could seem like heaven.

All this time the child was hugging her doll with one arm, the other lying stiff and helpless, and looking into its lifeless face with all the sweet affection of her little trusting heart. It made the tears come into my eyes to see her so contented. But just then we were interrupted.

"There's a gentleman, ma'am, who wants to see you," said the attendant, coming up to the bed and speaking to the nurse. "He's in the small parlor below." The nurse left us with a nod and smile, and after a little time had elapsed she came back with a tall, gentlemanly looking man, whom she left at the door gazing anxiously up and down the wards of this evidently new sight to him. I thought the woman seemed flurried when she came toward us, and seated herself with a nervous kind of motion on the edge of the little cot-bed in which her little patient lay.

"Jenny, my dear," she said softly, "Jenny, my dear—I've got something to tell you."

The child put up her little hand with a caressing movement.

"Did you ever know your mother to speak of your Uncle Ben?"

"No, ma'am," said the child.

"Never said she had a brother?"

"Oh, yes, ma'am," said the girl, her face lighting up, "she used to kiss a picture she said was her brother."

"Did she ever say he was dead?"

"No, I think not," was the reply; "mother never talked, she was so tired when she came home."

"Well, little Jenny, your mother did have a brother who went away years ago, and was never heard from. I suppose she thought he was dead, but he was not. He was away off in another part of the world, earning his living, and he has just come back to America, and, after a great deal of patient searching, he finds that his poor sister is dead, but that his little niece is alive, though sick in a hospital"—

"Is it me?" cries Jenny, a light breaking all over her face.

"Yes, dear, it is you."

"Oh, and he is my uncle?"

"Yes; he is your uncle."

"Then I have got somebody of my own."

"Yes; shall I bring him here?"

"Yes, yes!" she exclaimed eagerly, her eyes like stars.

I shall not even try to describe this meeting, even though it was by no means demonstrative. Could I depict her smile — that patient, pain-touched smile? Could I paint that pitiful look on his face that told one just what a man he was, and that his great heart was both sorry and glad? No, but I will speak of a visit I made to little Jenny in the pleasant country, where I found her out on the lawn in a wheel-chair, visibly improved, surrounded by charming people and beautiful things. If the dreary hospital had been heaven to Jenny, what was this?—Youth's Companion.

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S TALK.

Dear Children:—It is more pleasant than I can tell you to get such cheering letters as this that is just below, from our little soldiers. Will you not let me hear from more of you?

Louisville, Ky., May 19, 1884.

My Dear Capt. Deborah:—Last week when I had measles mother read me a story where a little boy wrote an acrostic on his name from Bible verses. Yesterday was Sunday and grandmother thought it would be nice for me to find some acrostics. This one on Aunt Frank's name I thought of, or found most all myself. Don't she have many nieces and nephews to love her? How can they help it? I am getting well now.

Can't you come to see us at the Sunday school convention?

The stomach charts are here, hanging on the walls of our headquarters and we have had one lesson about them. Give my love to all our army.

Your affectionate little friend,
Carrie A. Leech.

Here is the acrostic:

Frances E. Willard

F–ear not for I am with thee.
R–est in the Lord; wait patiently for Him.
A–sk and ye shall receive.
N–ow abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity.
C–asting all your care upon Him, for He careth for you.
E–verlasting love will I bestow upon thee.
S–o teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom.

E–ndeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace.

W–ine is a mocker, strong drink is raging: and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise.
I–n my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so I would have told you.
L–et not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid.
L–et patience have her perfect work.
A–soft answer turneth away wrath: but grievous words stir up anger.
R–ejoice ever more.
D–o thy diligence to come shortly unto me.

LICENSE, OR BUMBLE BEE AND CLOVER.

BY MRS. L. H. WASHINGTON.

Mr. Buzzing Bumble Bee,
Said to blushing Clover,
"You're as sweet as sweet can be,
May I be your lover?"

Said the nodding little Clover
Unto Bumble Bee,
"You're a handsome, honest lover,
Just the one for me."

But the courtship was so funny,
Ere the day was over
He had stolen all her honey,
And forsaken Clover.

Was she robbed, Miss Saddened Clover?
That depends you see,
Whether her deceiving lover
Was a licensed bee.

SOMETHING IN THE GARDEN.

BY ANGELA C. DAVIS.

It is a beautiful, quiet night, with only enough wind to set the tops of the tall pines swaying. There is no moon, but a clear, strong starlight. Every thing is quiet. Only the frogs in the "branch" (southern for creek) serenading the spring night. Only a southern whip-poor-will, crying, "Chuck-will's widow," from the black jack copse. Occasionally one of the negroes down by the stables breaks into a musical roundelay but that doesn't count, because they are always singing and it is part of the established order of things.

Lucy, the "ginger-cake colored" house-girl, has taken her banjo out into the cook's house, and now the fun begins! First she tunes the banjo—tank—tank—tankyte tank, tum, tum, tum. Next she sings a few introductory, preliminary little flourishes and then bursts forth with

Gwine down de hill side to see a funny flower,
Double-headed pigeon, an' a fo' eyed owl.
Froggy in de meadow, screamin' like he hollow,
Springtime come, bet you half a dolla'
Yallow gal, yallow gal, sittin' in de cornah'
Yallow gal, yallow gal, winkin' at me.

What an effect that melody has on the darkies' feet! Mike, the "cook's assistant," (what he does, only heaven knows) a black, mischievous imp twelve years old, begins to "cut de sho't dog" with his feet, and pat his hands in rhythmic beat.

The cook doesn't approve of Lucy, chiefly because the latter isn't bad-looking, I believe, and wears red ribbons. But even she keeps time with one foot, though she thinks no one knows it. Uncle Simon limps up to the door and listens. But he is a deacon in the church, and bethinks himself he must not countenance levity. So between verses he heaves a deep sigh and says,

"Laws, Lucy chile, you bettah be preparin' fo' death, dan pickin' dat low-lived banjo."

And the cook gives a sepulchral groan of assent. But Lucy doesn't care, she goes right on with

Blue jay, blue jay, in de tree top squallin'
Whip-po-will sings when de dew drop fallin',
Yallow gal, yallow gal, jump up lively,
Yallow gal, yallow gal, laughin' at me.

Suddenly, an interruption comes to the festivities. A round-eyed, bare-footed child, with her black wool braided into little tails all over her head, breaks in with a cry of "De hogs in de gyardin, eatin' up de boss's taters, an de peas, an de watah-millions!"

(Evidently, this small African delights in being the harbinger of bad news.)

Down falls Lucy's banjo. Away goes Mike. The cook follows as rapidly as her embonpoint allows. For the time being, Uncle Simon forgets his rheumatism and flies after them with a peculiar, nondescript gait, made up of a limp, a long trot, and a kind of a flying-trapeze movement. Then the dogs give tongue. Old Cæsar, the Cuban bloodhound, leads the van with his deep, bell-toned voice. Next comes my pretty Irish setter, Fanny, with a following of terriers, hounds and "curs of low degree." All the dogs on the place feel that the hour has come, and "Roaring Branch expects every dog to do his duty." Even the puppies in the kennel whine and whimper, and give little staccato barks. And so the cohorts fly, across the yard, through the gate, and into the garden.

"Hi yi! I seed 'im! Hit's dat ole, sharp-nosed speckledy shoat, o' Mr. Dan Shepard's! Hit's bust de palins off 'n de fence, an' scrunch in!" shouts Mike with his shrill voice.

"Dat hog is de out doin'est, biggotiest, rascalest, fetchedest hog I ever met up with on de face o' this yearth!" pants Uncle Simon, as he whacks a long pole across the back of the offending porcine. "Laws-e-e! How you reckon I'se gwine to run, same's dat limber-kneed Mike, wid dis misery in my b-a-ck," he continues, falling against the fence. "Here, Lucy chile, take dis heah pole an' whop dat hog good wid it."

Away they go. Whoop-e! Squeal! Bark! Yell! Down through the chicken yard, where the guineas rustle and softly pot-a-rack, at the unwonted noise. Through the yard, over a cape-jessamine bush that is the pride of my heart, and into the "big road," then out of sight into deeper darkness. Comparative Silence like a poultice comes,

To heal the blows of sound.

I sit down on the gallery-steps to wait the return of the pursuing host, I know that once more have "the colored troops fought nobly," for I hear Mike exclaim triumphantly:

"Reckon I mos' bus' his head open, Uncle Simon. Didn't you year me smack him, bip! bip! two times wid dis piece o' plank?"

"Oh yes! you's a large chile, you is Mike." Says Lucy sarcasticly. "If you'd work mo', boy, an' not talk so mannish, you'd be mo' count," she continues with fine scorn. Her remarks have no bearing on the subject under discussion, neither are they dictated by malice. They only come from a feeling the older negroes have that the rising generation must be "taken down" on every occasion.

Now they come straggling back, the dogs first, with lolling tongues and much self-congratulatory wagging of the tails, then follows Lucy, Mike and the cook. Uncle Simon is the last one. The others go back to the banjo, and "patting Juba." But he mournfully wends his way to the scene of devastation. Alas for the hopes of the early potato, and the appetizing pea! Alas for the dreams of luscious, red-hearted water-melons!

Uncle Simon ejaculates something wrathful, then limps back to where I sit, listening to the night-song of a waking mocking-bird.

"Honey, yo' gyardin' truck is done all rooted up by dat speckeldy hog," he says, lifting his battered old hat from his grizzled-head.

"Never mind, Uncle Simon," I reply soothingly, "there is plenty of time for you to plant over again."

"Dat's so, Honey, dat's so. Hit aint dat I'se studyin' 'bout. You knows dis aint de onliest time dat hog done busted himself in dat gyardin; dats what hurts my feelings. Now I puts it to you dis heah way. I'se a human bein' isn't I? Jes' so, dat hog is a dumb beas' dats gwine to perish, aint it so? Egzackly, well den, how is it, dat hog, dat speckeldy shoat o' Boss Dan Shepard, is gittin' his work in a-head o' ole Uncle Simon, like he do, dat's what I ax you, an' I ax it fa-ah." Pleased with the sound of his own voice, Uncle Simon assumes an oratorical attitude. I say:

"Oh well, Uncle Simon, I suppose it can't be helped. The hogs will come in, you know."

"Dat's so, dat's zackly so, Honey. You know de boss said I mus' fence in de gyardin good, put de palins high an' strong. An' you know I done built dat fence de bes' way I knows how. I worked t'ree days, an' Ben Baldwin he done holped me. Now you see, dat ornary hog of a speckledy shoat aint gwine to mine little palins. He jes took dat ole sharp nose o' his'n, an' he jes heave it up—so! an' de palins jes r-rip! an' in he walk, big as Gen. Grant, same like t'was his gyardin 'stead o' b'longin' to de boss. Well, I ax you aint dat same beas' gwine to keep on breakin' tro de palins? Co'se he is. I puts it to you, now chile, aint he gwine to keep it up?"

"I suppose so, Uncle Simon, but we can't help it; he will break through."

"Co'se he will; he's boun' to break tro; you hear me now. But I knows a way to stop him, sure."

"What is it, Uncle Simon?"

"Jes, kill 'im; kill 'im dead. Den he aint gwine to trouble no mo'. Ef a hog, or a varmint, or any owdacious thing, keeps up a fuss, worryin' an worryin' jes kill it. Hit's de onliest way. I 'lows to tell Mr. Dan Shepard 'bout dat same speckledy shoat, an' I says once mo', an' I says it good, hit's boun' to die." Then Uncle Simon bids me an impressive good night, and walks away.

After he is gone I sit thinking. The words of the old colored man possessed a deeper significance than he knew. I repeat over his words: "Ef a hog, or a varmint, or any owdacious thing keeps up a fuss, worryin' an' a worryin' jes kill it. Hit's de onliest way."

I know an "owdacious" thing that license and "regulation" cannot fence out. And I conclude the only way is to kill it with the good club of prohibition.

My dear, well-meaning, but faint-hearted temperance brother, just make up your mind that "Hit's de onliest way."

PIE VERSUS PROHIBITION.

BY SUE A. SANDFORD.

The Inter-Ocean reported interviewing the "nation's preacher" during his dinner at the Grand Pacific Hotel says:

Mr. Beecher had finished his dinner when asked about his stand on the temperance question. Mr. Beecher had dined: he was satisfied. The apollinaris had cheered, so had the pie—two pieces of which (apple and blackberry) according to the chronicler had been masticated by the "great preacher." In this replete condition he responded, "I am a high license man, but eventually look for prohibition. Prohibition now, has not a leg to stand on. It cannot become practical in this generation," etc. and so on.

We agree with the grand old man, so far as endorsing the one leg. Not one leg to stand on to be sure, but a multiplicity of legs. We entirely dissent from his prediction regarding its reign "in this generation." If another decade finds Henry Ward Beecher numbered with the living he will confess his judgment clouded.

According to the poets and bon vivants, there is a glamour that belongs to the after dinner hour and mood. The more material and grosser demands have been ministered to with devotion, and a supreme contentment with all systems seems to hold sway over the rational mind. Moral: Is this the time for the best play of the intellectual faculties? May not the higher and finer attributes have been in this case a little over-weighted by—pie?

With due reverence to the man, wise in many things, his high license position may be added as one more in the list of his mistakes.

The Sunday School Lesson.

June 8] Third Quarter, No. X. [1884.

TOPIC: JUSTIFICATION BY FAITH.

LESSON TEXT.—Romans 3: 19-31.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Therefore being justified by faith we have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ. Romans 5: 1.

TIME.—A. D. 58.

PLACE.—Corinth.

1. "The law out of Christ is as terrible as a lion," says Bunyan, but "in him is meek as a lamb." Divine law has been defined by Paul to be simply a school master. One has to be educated to comprehend even God's love. Law makes us desire it in that we find ourselves hopeless without it. Law sets itself up against our short comings and sinfulness, and shows us our crookedness, deformity and short stature. It gives "the knowledge of sin."

2. Human law has much the same character, and if this fact could be always recognized we should hear less of the law's failure. Human law does not make it easy to do right. It does not change disposition. It measures up human conduct and shows where it is lacking. It too gives the knowledge of wrong doing.

3. The sinfulness of all is clearly set forth in this lesson. One cannot boast himself over another. To sin at all is to come short of the glory of God which is fufilling His law. The drunkard is a sinner, the liquor dealer is a sinner, the social drinker is a sinner, the minister who sanctions by word or deed any item of the great drink evil is a sinner, and so is everyone who fails to use his vote or her influence on the right side. The murderer is a sinner and so is the kind and lovely woman who is without personal saving belief in Christ.

A lady once asked God for a view of sin. In time her prayer was answered, and a great panorama was unrolled to her sight, on which sin in all its Protean forms was portrayed. What was her surprise, however, to see murder, lying, stealing and all the gross sins of humanity portrayed as of inferior rank, small size and put far in the background, while at the forefront, in hideous appearance, and leading all other sins, was unbelief. He who doubts God is the sinner par excellence, because he makes Him a liar.

4. To all sinners alike God offers the simple cure, faith. The making just of all who come to Christ seems expressed simply on this wise: I am a sinner—a violator of law. Law has no cure, no means of setting me right with itself. Christ who is above law, has fulfilled all righteousness and satisfied the law's demands, for me. By faith, and in humble repentance, I take His righteousness, and all law's terrors cannot harm me. He has made me just before the law.

5. Truly then is all boasting excluded from our saved lives. Only for another's righteousness are we to be accounted righteous. Let us put ourselves in no other attitude than this in dealing with sinners. Poor drinking men, and equally poor, sinful saloon keepers are sinners with us till we all wear the robe of Christ's righteousness.

GOOD illustrations are not too plentiful, and the following, which was introduced the other day in a temperance sermon, is worth making a note of. According to a fable current amongst the Arabs, the vine in the early stages of its growth was tended by Satan, who first moistened it with the blood of a peacock, later on that of a money was used, then that of a lion, and finally that of a hog. So, says the fablist, it comes about that in the various stages of intoxication a man first struts about with the vanity of a peacock, then he makes himself as ridiculous as a monkey, and passing through the stage of fancied bravery, lies down at last in the gutter like a hog.

PROHIBITION.

It is a strange fact that a word has become perfectly incorrigible. It refuses to share in any compromise, or to enter into any covenant of peace. It cannot be prevailed upon to remain quiet, or to take a position a little less conspicuous, or to postpone its querulous agressiveness to a "more convenient season." Intent on keeping in front, and bound to "speak in meeting," no matter what kind of a meeting it may be, whether a religious gathering or a political convention, it it is rapidly becoming an element of uneasiness generally. Ex-Governor Long, of Massachusetts, calls whisky the dynamite of civilization. All right! so it is, and anything else destructive you may call it; but prohibition is become the dynamite of politics. It makes us think of a company of soldiers who were on their way to the seat of war. Halting at Cairo, Ill., they undertook one morning to cook their breakfast, using what appeared to be rusty cannon balls to support coffee-pots. The heat of the fire developed the terrible fact that they were shells. Many hearts are anxious in these days as they are scouring their kettles and adjusting their fire-places to get ready to cook their political goose. They don't know what careless hand may roll under a temperance shell, or slip in among the fuel a chunk of prohibition dynamite. No wonder they are nervous; for if it should happen, heaven save us! Who could gather together the pieces?

A hundred years ago or more a common feat said to be performed by the old enchanters was to raise "spirits from the vasty deep;" but a trained wizard was always careful to have so managed his arrangements before hand that he knew how to control or exorcise them after they did appear; else the result was serious. They also used to be sent for to "lay," or put down, a troublesome ghost which haunted, and disturbed the rest of the inmates of a certain house. Many a black lake or deep pond was pointed out as holding securely in its depths the "bottle" in which the spirit had been incarcerated.

Alas for us! those days are past; the enchanters have lost their cunning and the wizards their skill. The temperance "spirits" are abroad and cannot be exorcised, the troublesome ghost of prohibition is haunting every political house in the land, and the disturbance and unrest which it causes, are growing worse and worse. Who and where is the wizard that can "lay" this spirit, bottle it up and cast it to the depths, and "let us have peace?" Echo answers, "Who and where?" One of the traditions of the past was, that if anyone in a disturbed house could muster courage enough to talk with the miserable disturber, find out what was wanted, and promise to carry out that desire, and fulfill that promise, no more trouble was experienced. It is said that Brutus, the night before the battle of Philippi, refused to talk with such a visitor in his tent, whereupon a voice reached him saying, "I will meet thee tomorrow at Philippi." On the morrow he was slain.

This furnishes the key to the difficulty regarding this case. This ghost will not down; it will be talked with, and will have its desires respected and carried out! Every Brutus that denies it this will eventually meet its Philippi.

PRACTICAL CHURCH EXTENSION.

The commonness of unhealthy, deformed and crippled people makes it good for the eyes to rest upon a really healthy, vigorous, perfectly formed person. So the great uniformity with which churches expect to grow without the use of adequate means gives a real zest to the reading of such a scheme of church work as that presented in the regular leaflet of the Berean Baptist church, corner Bedford and Downing streets, New York, pastor Rev. Edward Judson, son of the missionary Judson. The regular exercises are as follows: Sabbath morning, preaching, service and baptism; Sunday school at 2:30 p. m. evening, preaching followed by song service; young peoples' prayer meeting before preaching; gospel services every evening in the week by the pastor; Saturday evening devoted to gospel temperance meetings. With this program many churches stop, but this goes on. French Baptist Mission, having its own pastor, and a lady instructor or manager, and work every afternoon and evening, covering a wide range of practical value; German Bible class every Sabbath afternoon; Flower Mission; free ice water fountains in summer; Berean Kinmouth Home for feeble and deserving children; sewing school, Saturday, 10 a. m.; childrens' choir, rehearsal Saturday 3 p. m., children receiving gratuitous instruction and five cents a week wages.

Next, a free employment bureau, office in basement of church, open every morning but Saturday and Sunday. Lastly, wood and coal yard, where kindlings, coal, and all kinds of ready cut wood are offered for sale, "a first rate article and good measure." The object of this yard is to furnish employment.

"Any man or women who is a member of this church, or a regular attendant of its services, or has a child in the Sunday school, may apply for work daily between 9 and 12," the men sawing and splitting wood, and the women canvassing for sales. Not more than four hours a day is allowed and the rest of the time must be given to seeking regular employment. The right is reserved to pay in meal tickets, lodging tickets, or grocery orders, where not best to pay in money.

We commend this wood yard employment bureau, sewing school etc., to the notice of workers in localities like that of Mr. Judson's mission, where the unfortunate, and often the low and degraded, are to be helped to work, and elevated to sober and industrious habits. Such very material aid and comfort is an admirable means of building up the spiritual life, and churches that work so practically must of necessity grow.

WOMAN'S ballot will hold on to the good in politics, let go of—push off, rather—the bad. Why so positive? do you ask? Because the bad among politicians and other classes are afraid of that ballot, opposed to it; and because such numbers of reflecting men not working at the trade of politics, men who make politics a means not at end, are fast coming to have faith in this future ballot. At this date politics would perhaps be excepted from the injunction, "Bless them that curse you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you." At least not feeling thus gracious toward the liquor traffic and its kindred of traps for woman's as man's misery and sin, we ask an open door to woman's active voice against them, and for that temperance and purity which invite woman, as man, toward heaven through the home that is likest heaven.

We are glad to lack close acquaintance with the entire brotherhood of professional politicians; but we venture to affirm that hardly one of them, especially those who live by and for office, is in favor of suffrage for women. Did its most uncompromising enemy ever know a saloon keeper to be its friend? a libertine, a gambler, or a courtezan to favor it? Do the scamps and villains who live by getting bad laws and abusing good ones want women to vote? Not at all. They are positive that women do not know enough to vote. Will the better men still in their company stay there after stopping to think? We believe they will not.

THE Duke of Westminister in presiding at the corner stone laying of the addition to the London Temperance Hospital gave emphatic endorsement to Dr. Edmunds' verdict on alcohol never a stimulant. He said moreover that "it has a tendency to create a taste for stimulants in those who perhaps would not have otherwise acquired it, and it leads ignorant people to conclude that as wine and spirits are prescribed for them by the doctor they must be a needful remedy in most cases of illness, and thus the habit of flying to the bottle for relief is created and the groundwork laid for habits of indulgence and intemperance which might otherwise never have been acquired."

The truth is no truer because His Grace has has uttered it, but we are glad of his words nevertheless.

"THE BREAD WINNERS" is a story inspired by issues that grow largely out of the liquor traffic. It deals with the strike of 1877 as developed in Cleveland and in the following pregnant sentences sets forth the apathy of the opulent class, from which better things were to be expected:

A week passed by; the great strike was already almost forgotten. The rich and prosperous people, as their manner is, congratulated themselves on their escape, and gave no thought to the questions which had come so near to an issue of fire and blood. In this city of two hundred thousand people two or three dozen politicians continued as before to govern it, to assess and spend its taxes, to use it as their property and their chattel. The rich and intelligent kept on making money, building fine houses and bringing up children to hate politics as they did, and in fine to fatten themselves as sheep that should be mutton whenever the butcher was ready. There was hardly a millionaire on the fashionable avenue who knew where the ward meetings of his party were held. There was not an Irish laborer in the city but knew his way to his ward club as well as to mass.

Let Christian voters ponder the foregoing words, for in them is the prophecy of destruction to the Republic.

"SHE always counted." I heard Mrs. Harrison make that remark, and puzzled over it a little. Did she mean that Mrs. Buckingham was a perpetual calculating-machine, or like the poor demented cashier whose burden was "one and one make one." Presently Mrs. Harrison spoke again:

"She was always on the right side. In her family, in the church, in society, as a neighbor, her influence for good has been right up to the mark. There is nothing negative in her character. All that she says and does is for good."

Do we always count on the right side, if not shall we not from this time henceforward and forever more?

THE article entitled "Who is responsible for the liquor traffic?" printed in our last number, should have been credited to Mrs. R. A. Swift, and not Mrs. R. A. Thurston. Similarity of initials and several other incidents led to the substitution.

---

I was pleased to note the publication of the last W. C. T. U. bulletin by the Courier Journal of Louisville, Ky. It's a friendly token.

One day last summer I sat in a buggy with a winsome little lady while her husband made some purchases in a drug store preparatory to a fishing excursion. When he finally took his place in the carriage and tumbled over into her lap a lot of packages, she turned them all over, examined their labels carefully and when all had been carefully investigated she broke out with, "Why, Charles, you've forgotten the whisky."

"And what do I want with whisky on a fishing excursion?" said he.

"Why, Charles, what would you do without it if you should get a snake bite?" was her agonized reply.

And now comes Dr. Vinke—that sounds like a foreign name—and says to the St. Louis Courier of Medicine, that more persons are killed by the whisky they take when snake bitten than by the bite itself. He believes in quinine as a remedy for the wound.

Mrs. M. H. Hunt is at present in Canada. Engagements have been made in St. Catherine, Thorold, Brentford, Ingersoll, Toronto, Owen Sound, Fergus, Guelph, Kingston, Gannanoque, and Ottawa. From St. Catherines where she filled her first engagement Friday, May 16, and was then detained to speak on Sunday, comes these words: "Mrs. Hunt has been here and has captivated all our hearts. If she were to speak again we have no building large enough to hold the crowd that would come to hear her."

* * *

"Instant in season" is what I should say of Mrs. McClees' action in sending a package of her unique temperance literature to the Greeley relief expedition on its departure.

A W. C. T. U. convention becomes an Institute in Vermont. I rather like that. It seems more dignified to be instituted than simply to convene. The program of Windam County Institute held just about now, looks very interesting as well as dignified, and I only wish I could leave the important interests of the TOWER long enough to hear Mrs. Greene conduct the Question Box exercise, Mrs. Barney discourse in her tender and fervent way of Prison and Jail Work, Mrs. Housh read her poem, "How the School house was won," and the class recite in "Legislative work."

Some queer things are being said and done. For instance, Rev. Edward Everett Hale suggests that rum be made odious by a law compelling liquor dealers to wear a uniform just as their customers wear—red noses.

And again the new process that somebody, said to be a Pittsburg man, has discovered whereby whisky may be solidified and carried about in one's pocket like a plug of tobacco. What next?

I think women are remarkably forbearing creatures. Here a while ago when Mrs. Howe and her celebrated banking bubble burst, the men raised such a hue and cry about "women's methods in business," "women have no heads for business" and that sort of medley for weeks. Well I've not seen or heard a single retort by the women on the occasion of Grant & Ward's failure, not even though the most astute man in the nation was concerned in it, and as I don't want to, I'll not say a word myself but "keep up a terrible thinking" about men's "head for business."

A lovely Quaker lady, Mrs. Ruth Murray, of New Bedford, Mass., being intent to secure scientific instruction along W. C. T. U. lines in the public school, had tact and enterprise enough to arrange a tea on behalf of our union, to which all public school teachers (one hundred and fifty in number) were invited by specific printed cards. Of these one hundred and twenty-seven came and they had a charming evening. The "school committee" was invited also and came. The superintendent of schools in a little after-tea speech said, "If this is right, to teach temperance on a basis of scientific fact, and I believe it is, then, if the course of study is too full, let us omit something else and give this branch the right of way." What other W. C. T. U. will try a similar experiment?

Marietta Holley, of Adams, N. Y., is author of those popular books "My Opinions and Betsey Bobbit's," "What Josiah Allen's Wife saw at the Centennial," "Miss Richard's Boy," etc. Their sale has been immense and they have taught the progressive side of "The Woman Question" to thousands who would never read Curtis, Mill or Cobbe. A special inspiration for temperance has come to this gifted and noble-hearted writer and it seems probable that the greatest work of her life will soon be in the hands of average woman kind, teaching with pathos, fun and logic, the philosophy of the W. C. T. U. Local unions watch for it.

Mrs. C. H. St. John, of Colorado, paid a visit to the TOWER on her way to Washington. She will spend the summer speaking in New York State camp grounds, and can be addressed at 414 Sixth street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

Miss Eliza Lazenby of Victoria, B. C., made an effective extempore address recently at a public meeting in that city. Miss Lazenby is one of the ablest workers for "the cause" and best friends of THE UNION SIGNAL.

SEMI-ANNUAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.

The semi-annual meeting of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. has just been held in Holyoke. Nothing could exceed the hospitality of their entertainment by the citizens of the place, or the enthusiasm awakened by the presence of the earnest Christian women. Mrs. Mary A. Livermore presided. Plans for promoting the effectiveness of local unions; for reaching the voters with literature and petitions; on work among the children, and extending the circulation of our official organ, THE UNION SIGNAL—were discussed with intelligence and ability.

On Wednesday evening, Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, superintendent of scientific instruction of the National W. C. T. U., gave an able lecture on the general subject of her department, with some account of the campaign in New York during the last winter, which resulted in the passage of a bill by the legislature, making scientific teaching on the physiological effects of alcohol and narcotics compulsory in all schools supported by public money. "It was a glorious victory." The next morning the subject was brought with more detail before the convention, and it was voted to adopt this special line of work in our own state during the coming year. The following resolution was also passed:

Resolved, That the Massachusetts Woman's Christian Temperance Union indorse the hygienic physiology by Joel Dorman Steel, Ph. D., published by A. S. Barnes & Co. of New York, and edited by Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, superintendent of scientific instruction of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, as a standard work on the action of alcoholic stimulants and narcotics, and recommend it to the school boards of the state as a text book.

Mrs. Livermore gave a thrilling lecture on Thursday to an immense audience. Dr. Adams of the Baptist church presided, and addresses were made by Rev. Mr. Stryker and Rev. Mr. Foote, pledging their co-operation to this work "for God and home and native land." Other influential citizens expressed sympathy and pledged pecuniary assistance. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union at Holyoke have received a great impetus and encouragement through the influence of this convention. The wife of the Episcopal minister is president, and she is seconded by the wives of the other pastors, and a large number of the most efficient ladies of the city. They are planning to erect permanent headquarters on a lot offered them by the Water Power Company, where, under the same roof, reading, social and coffee rooms, with a temperance hall for public and gospel meetings, can send out an influence to offset the one hundred and nineteen grop shops licensed during the last week by the city government. So the "wheat and tares are growing together." What shall the harvest be?

GEORGIA.

In Mrs. Sibley's recent letter to THE UNION SIGNAL she speaks of the cheering gospel temperance work in Augusta, and of the meetings held at Rev. Mr. Dillard's church; but she was too modest to tell that she had spoken there herself, and that even standing room could scarcely be found for all who came. Nor did she hint that Rev. Clement A. Evans had asked her to address an audience in another part of the city, being convinced, conservative as he is, of the good she is doing.

During the recent state Sunday school convention at Columbus, Mrs. Chapin addressed a large audience at one of the evening meetings. From there she went to Hamilton, where she was received with the greatest enthusiasm. She spoke there at 10 o'clock on Sunday morning and at the close of the service seventy persons signed the pledge. In the afternoon she lectured to the colored people, ninety of whom took the pledge.

Says Miss Loula Lee Barnes, the corresponding secretary of the union, in a letter telling of Mrs. Chapin's visit to Hamilton:

"After her lecture to the colored people she left immediately for Chipley, a little town near Hamilton, where she had wonderful success; organized a union of one hundred and sixty-five members, in a town of about three hundred inhabitants!" At Hamilton, the pupils of the military academy took the pledge and put on the white ribbon.

Today I have a card from Miss Barnes announcing the organization at Hamilton of a colored W. C. T. U., with one hundred and forty members. "After the organization there were three speeches from colored men who spoke practically and sensibly upon the temperance question."

On her return to South Carolina, Mrs. Chapin stopped over at Atlanta and spoke to a large audience at the Fulton county Sunday school celebration.

At a late meeting of the Atlanta W. C. T. U. we had encouraging reports of the local Juvenile Work from Mrs. M. N. Callaway, one of the devoted workers in that department. Mrs. J. C. Keyes, state superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction, reported a recent visit to the Packard Institute (colored) of this city, where, through her efforts, Miss Colman's series has been introduced, there being one hundred pupils in the catechism on alcohol, and sixty in "Alcohol and Hygiene."

Mrs. E. E. Harper of Atlanta, state superintendent of Prison and Jail Work, is the right woman in the right place. She has thoroughly consecrated her rare talents to this department, for which her unselfish nature, and her loving but brave spirit seem just fitted.

Not long since Mr. E. W. Bliss, the evangelist, gave at the request of the Atlanta union, a Bible reading entitled "What the Bible says about Liquor and the Liquor Traffic." This effort could not have been surpassed. It was cordially endorsed by Christians, and carried conviction to the hearts of some intemperate men who were present.

Several new unions have lately been organized in various parts of the state. In my next I hope to tell you of my own experiences in visiting new unions and forming others.

MICHIGAN.

MANISTEE.—Apropos of the work being done in Chicago by Francis Murphy, it may be interesting to hear something of his work in Manistee, inaugurated in March last at Mrs. R. G. Peters' Union Hall under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. and the evangelical churches, and continuing with unabated interest for fifteen days in succession. "The Murphy meetings," as they are familiarly called by our people, began by a grand special union service March 23, 1884.

Mrs. Evelyn N. Peters, the beloved and honored president of the W. C. T. U., in a graceful and appropriate address of welcome introduced Mr. Murphy, who after expressing his pleasure in meeting the people of Manistee in the beautiful hall of which he had read and heard so much, and testifying in grateful and loving words to the faith and earnestness of the women of the nation who have wrought with such consecrated zeal for God and humanity, delivered with all the pathos, wit and eloquence for which he is famous, his lecture, "Real Life." The recital went straight to every heart, and at the close, in response to an impassioned appeal, large numbers went forward and signed the "Murphy Pledge" and donned the "Badge of Blue." From that time forward the interest in Francis Murphy and his methods never faltered; for fifteen nights in succession he attracted crowds of from twelve to fifteen hundred composed mainly of men and women whom it has never before been possible to interest or arouse on the temperance question.

Every day at 3 p. m. an hour of prayer and conference was observed.

On the last night of Mr. Murphy's stay in Manistee Union Hall was filled from floor to galleries—every available space in the aisles, parlors and passages was occupied to the very front, the platform was overflowing to its edges, and from a careful estimate fully 2,000 people were present, at least 1,000 more were unable to find entrance at all. Let it be remembered that all this interest and enthusiasm was manifested in a city of only 12,000 inhabitants.

A month has since winged its way and the Murphy meetings are as a "tale that is told" but not forgotten. The influence which surrounds a great moral movement by means of which 2,500 persons signed the total abstinence pledge remains, and the immediate result was felt in the election of a temperance mayor and a majority of temperance men are filling other municipal offices in our city.

A Murphy temperance club is an established society. Sunday laws are being enforced. Hope and happiness have come once more to hearts overshadowed through fear of an enemy who steals by imperceptible steps all that woman holds dear.

NEW MEXICO.

ALBUQUERQUE.—I was very much interested in reading today the article in the last UNION SIGNAL, "Is the Band of Hope a Success?" Here, in New Mexico, it seems to be the only work that tells. Our W. C. T. U. in Albuquerque plods on, not wearily, but with few apparent results. About the only encouragement we receive from lookers on (and we do confess to a sort of humble satisfaction in it), is an occasional expression of polite surprise at our "gift of continuance." When Mrs. Foster was here, and spoke so grandly to one of the best audiences ever assembled in Albuquerque, we did have quite a refreshing breeze—it was to our union what a picnic or Christmas tree is to a Sunday school, only that we hope the interest will be permanent, and productive of still greater things. Mrs. Foster's kindness in coming to us, we deeply appreciate. She has done our cause in New Mexico much good.

But, while among the grown folks, we have seemed to accomplish but little, the Band of Hope work has been gloriously successful. The boys and girls enter into the fight against King Alcohol with wonderful zeal. I am astonished and delighted every time I go to a Band of Hope meeting, and they carry the lessons home. I have discovered that frequently. One mother said to one of our ladies, that she had to have her beer occasionally, but her eight-year-old daughter, one of our "soldiers," couldn't be persuaded to touch anything of the kind, and the younger sister, too small to belong to our army yet, was just as strong-minded on the subject. One little six-year-old boy explains to his papa that he will not drink certain things because "there's alcohol in them!" and these small men and women are not at a loss when they're asked what alcohol is. Miss Colman's catechism has not been taught here in vain. Our Band has recently adopted the plan of juvenile officers, and greatly increased the pleasure and pride in their work thereby. I was very proud of our temperance boys and girls, when a little over a week ago they appeared before the public in what a gentleman who ought to be a competent judge said afterward, was "conceded by every one to be the best entertainment ever given in Albuquerque." The concert was held in the opera house, because in that way very many could be reached, who would not go to a church, and even though twenty dollars had to be paid for the use of the house, the Band of Hope cleared nearly fifty dollars. Twenty dollars of this they have given to the W. C. T. U. for a reading room, and now they are filled with a spirit of organizing, and want to help start new Bands, in other parts of the territory. So you see, when I saw the question, "Is the Band of Hope a success?" I immediately wanted to tell you that we, here in New Mexico, say most emphatically, "Yes!"

SENANGO COUNTY CONVENTION.

To say that our county convention which was held this week in Oil City, closing the evening of May 16, was a successful convention in every particular, would only echo the expression and impression of all in attendance. The interest expressed in the faces of bright, earnest, intelligent women, who had gathered from all parts of the county, some coming under difficulties, bringing their little children (whom they could not leave behind,) with them, and the cheering and encouraging reports on all branches of our work, gave proof that old Senango county was intelligently awake to the great question of the day. We were kindly welcomed and entertained in the best and most beautiful homes of Oil City, and had the use of the Baptist church.

Our president Mrs. W. C. Hone, presided with dignity and patience, proving herself equal for every emergency and doing credit to the trust and cause she represented.

On the evening of the 14th a large audience gathered to hear a lecture from Mrs. Mary H. Hunt which was well received and appreciated. Mrs. Hunt also gave instruction before the convention on the following morning.

Our officers are as follows: President, Mrs. W. C. Hone, Franklin; recording secretary, Mrs. Kate Witherup, Rockland; corresponding secretary, Mrs. F. J. Fee, Franklin; treasurer, Mrs. D. Penn, Oil City.

The reports given stand high in the amount of work accomplished and in the substantial way it was done. When I tell you that eleven new unions have been organized in Senango county since last November, you can imagine the activity of its officers, the energy of its workers and interest of its reports. If we do as well in the year that is to follow as during the one that has passed, we shall have the banner so well spread, and the "strongholds" so firmly established, that the defeat of old "King Alcohol" in Senango county will be realized.

MRS. E. A. RICKARDS, Supt. of Press Work.

ERIE COUNTY ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The Erie county W. C. T. U. convened at Park church May 14 and 15.

The opening devotional meeting was led by Mrs. Colegrove, of Corry, after which the president, Mrs. Hall, called the convention to order. The committee on credentials reported the names of fifty-two delegates, and the treasurer, a balance in the treasury. A list of the unions was called and reports from all were read, indicating activity in work and an increase of temperance sentiment.

A recess over, other superintendents of departments submitted reports. Then Mrs. Julia Sterrett delivered an "Address of Welcome" that embraced a history of the Erie Union since organized ten years ago. Mrs. Sterrett's description of the difficulty experienced in the early days of the union in raising $4 to pay "Mother Stewart" for a lecture created considerable amusement, and every listener warmly indorsed her tribute to the faithful few of ten years since, some of whom are yet fighting bravely in the cause. In responding Miss Narcissa White spoke of the work in various parts of the state and emphasized the fact that in the counties where the German element predominates the temperance banners are being carried forward rapidly, the Germans themselves within a few years having realized the growing danger and the necessity of checking the traffic which is responsible for such widespread misery and destruction of homes. Her words were full of encouragement and the talented lady received a demonstration of approval that must have been gratifying.

At the evening session Park church was crowded. The preliminary exercises over, Miss Narcissa White was introduced and gave an address upon scientific temperance which was received with great applause.

Thursday morning's session was largely devoted to the discussion of scientific temperance.

Mrs. S. B. Hotchkiss, of Edinboro, spoke on the necessity of teachers instructing their pupils on the terrible effects of drinking alcohol in any form. Miss Macie Flower, of Albion, strongly advocated such teaching, giving reports from several schools in which the hygienic effects of intemperance, and its influence as an economic factor in business enterprises are taught. In Girard lessons are given one day in the week from books furnished by the W. C. T. U. In Edinboro normal school text books on temperance were adopted over a year ago, and have been used ever since.

A Band of Hope has been organized among the children, and among the larger ones a W. C. T. U. has prospered very well indeed. The school library has been kept supplied with cheap temperance books, which have been read eagerly by the school children.

At the afternoon session Mrs. E. S. Marsh reported concerning "Gospel temperance Work," showing how to to work and conduct a Bible reading. "Two Great Social Forces" was the subject of the discourse of Miss Margaret Marsh, of McKean.

A large package of copies of THE UNION SIGNAL was presented to the convention by Mrs. Hitchcock, of North East. They were received with warm indorsements.

In the evening an audience as large as that which greeted Miss Narcissa White the evening previous, assembled in Park church to hear the lecture of Mrs. M. H. Hunt, of Boston. She is an excellent speaker, and the address pleased all her listeners. At its conclusion the convention adjourned until next year.

ALONG THE LINE.

The Butler county W. C. T. U. held its first semi-annual convention at Harrisville May 8, Mrs. J. K. Dain president, Miss May Sullivan corresponding secretary. The county was well represented by delegates from a number of new unions who bore testimony to the great benefits received from this their first meeting with the W. C. T. U. workers. Two excellent papers were read: By Mrs. Dain on the "Departments of W. C. T. U. Work," and by Miss Sullivan in regard to the "Hindrances and Difficulties in the Way." A promising Y. W. C. T. U. was organized. I had the pleasure of addressing a large and appreciative audience in the evening and of adding the 87th link for this year to the W. C. T. U. chain that is fast girdling the Keystone state.

MARY BYNON REESE.

A WORKER'S NOTES.

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—Let me urge the appointment of a superintendent of organization by each state and territory. Let these keep the work of organization moving steadily forward, by keeping organizers constantly in the field, and by planning and arranging routes for them.

FLORENCE, Ala.—A pronounced people for temperance. Spoke in the court house, which was packed, and nearly as many were upon the outside within hearing. The W. C. T. U. is a new revelation to the excellent women here and they organized with intent to make a good record of work. "Where there's a will, there's a way" is their motto, and they have the will.

WAYNESVILLE, N. C.—I have established here my first W. C. T. U. in North Carolina, with Mrs. Lizzie E. Chastaine, one of our very elect, to lead the sisterhood.

MORGANTON, N. C.—On account of a landslide on the railroad, I was compelled to journey sixteen miles by hack over the roughest and muddiest of roads. Several times we were compelled to get out of the wagon while the wheels were dug out of the mud with fence rails. With head aching by reason of fatigue and want of food, though thankful that there was no complete break-down, of which we had been in constant fear, I reached Morganton, exclaiming, "And this is what it costs the women of the land to plant the kingdom of heaven in the hearts of men!"

MORGANTON, N. C., May 7.—Of the "salt of the earth" are Mrs. Judge Avery, sister of Mrs. Stonewall Jackson, and Mrs. M. A. Chambers, of this place. A good audience tonight, though there is a patent hostility to woman speakers in all this region.

MORGANTON, N. C., May 8.—A rain prevented our meeting tonight. Prohibition prevails here. No young men drinking. A few old men continue the drink habit by obtaining liquor from neighboring localities.

MORGANTON, N. C., May 9.—Another meeting tonight. A good Sons of Temperance Division here, but the powers of the women are still latent.

HENRIETTA G. MOORE.

MINNESOTA.

ST. CHARLES.—The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of St. Charles was organized in January, 1877 with twelve members, by Mrs. Harriet E. Bishop, a pioneer in temperance work, as well as a pioneer settler of Minnesota. [She died last August at St. Paul.]

We have had fifty-nine different names on our member roll. Some of these have died, some have moved away, and others have dropped off, till at present we number only nineteen. With the proceeds of a 4th of July dinner, a reading room was opened July 15, 1877, and furnished as well as our means would permit. We had to start with, for reading matter, a small library of donated books, three monthly magazines, two weekly and three daily papers. The average of cost of running it was $14.00 per month. The average daily attendance was about 30.

By various devices we managed to raise the means for its support two years and three months, when, owing to adverse influences, we were obliged to give it up. We have also hired a good many lecturers, one of the best of whom, Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, spoke four evenings with marked success, over 400 signing the pledge and putting on the Blue Ribbon while she was here. After she left the meetings were continued and much interest manifested in temperance work, as the following election clearly proved, when "no license" was carried by a handsome majority.

We have circulated a great number of tracts, and for a while edited a column in the St. Charles Union. We have had many meetings and entertainments which have been both pleasant and profitable.

At present we are trying to instruct and interest the young people in a Band of Hope.

NEW YORK.

ORLEANS COUNTY CONVENTION.

The W. C. T. U. of Orleans county held its third meeting in Medina, May 6 and 7. Ten unions were reported. We consider this very favorable, as our county has not been organized quite a year. With two exceptions these unions are doing a great and noble work. Medina is now passing through a temperance revival. P. A. Burdick is speaking every night. Already five hundred have signed the pledge.

In most of our towns the pastors and press are ready to help in our work. The Holley union is doing a good work in holding quarterly union meetings with temperance addresses.

One of our women in going from the convention, when on the cars was asked "What is that little white ribbon for? I have seen so many of them today, it must mean something." Yes, the little white ribbon does mean something, and Western New York, is alive with earnest consecrated temperance women.

MRS. J. H. RUGGLES, Pres. Orleans Co.

ANOTHER W. C. T. U. IN PUTNAM COUNTY.

May 1st, a bevy of ladies numbering fifteen, from the Carmel union, went to Mohopac Falls and organized a W. C. T. U. I have written to the president for the number of names, but have not received an answer, but I am anxious to report to your paper so will not wait any longer. How the ball rolls on, and our hearts are made glad. A. M. STEWART.

WOLCOTT.—We have a good working union and a no-license town; no opposition ticket this year. The change in public sentiment is due somewhat to a fire which swept the business portion of the village and caught in a corner saloon, where it is believed by many a drunken row was going on.

Col. Bain spoke to us on Saturday evening and the fire raged Sunday morning, giving him an opportunity to draw impressive lessons from the devastation for his Sunday morning address.

On Sunday, May 11, Mrs. Lucy Washington addressed a large audience on "The Walls of Defence," also on the following evening on "Constitutional Amendment." All were highly delighted with her addresses. An impromptu reception was given Mrs. Washington at the residence of Mrs. Geo. P. Groves.

The Wayne Co. W. C. T. U. convention will be held in Lyons the first week in June.

MRS. FLORIDA LAWRENCE, Cor. Sec. W. C. T. U.

IOWA.

DAVENPORT.—While the state and the country at large hears about the liquor element, and the liquor opposition of Davenport, it seldom hears of the temperance element and the temperance workers of Davenport. At an afternoon meeting in the Fourteenth street M. E. church on a recent Sunday, largely attended by both men and women, twenty-one names were added to the union, some five or six of them being honorary members. Then in the basement of the same church I met the Band of Hope of Davenport that is some 160 strong, and just as enthusiastic as any band you ever saw; some of its members are gray haired men, too. I would not have missed the inspiration of that meeting for anything, but the meeting in the evening was even more inspiring. The Presbyterian church was full, gallery and all, of men and women whose faces told of deep interest in this work, and earnest desire for its success. Such a gathering was a joy and a delight to me, and I realized that the loud-mouthed defiant liquor element of Davenport will be met by a quiet, steady, persistent, prayerful toil and labor that will yet bring the dawn of a triumphant prohibition day in all Iowa.

I go now to Elkader singing in my heart "Get ready for the jubilee," for it is coming. Praise God it is coming. M. J. ALDRICH.

FREMONT.—The W. C. T. U., recognizing the powerful opposition that will be brought to bear against Iowa's new law, and in view of the strenuous efforts being made by the liquor element to raise a fund to test its constitutionality, adopted strong resolutions at a recent meeting pledging united effort to enforce the law, and assistance in raising a fund to defend it. They propose, if necessary, to deprive themselves "of tea and coffee and many of the luxuries of life, for the purpose of raising said fund."

WRIGHT COUNTY.—Mrs. Aldrich has been giving a week's work to Wright county and reports a strong temperance sentiment throughout the parts of the county visited by her. Few saloons in the county, and some of the druggists now have the reputation of being temperance druggists, while others are reported as saying that "after this" they will sell no liquors of any kind, except upon a physician's prescription. The saloon keepers frankly declare their expectation of quitting when the law goes into effect. Some of them are getting ready to go into some other business or out on farms.

WISCONSIN.

In her "suggestions to local unions about making public meetings successful," the National President lays down a program which, if followed, would make every meeting a power for good and insure its success to the degree that each really first class speaker would bear her own weight financially, i. e., leave the local union in as good condition as she found it, if not better. The plan of visiting all saloons, wholesale dealers, breweries and distilleries before the lecturer comes, distributing literature, and inviting all concerned to attend the meeting, is in itself enough to assure a good turn out of the people and a pervading impression that the union is alive. At Green Bay, Wis., this was done and a "rousing house" was the result. For the first time in her work, Miss Willard found the platform decorations in part furnished by saloon keepers, a handsome Japanese screen and several pots of flowers being among their contributions to the evening's entertainment.

Pastors and ladies occupied the platform giving it the effect of a parlor scene. Mrs. Alma Robb presided gracefully. Mr. Weston Kimball made a stirring speech at the close saying that "if Green Bay could not prohibit, she could at least prescribe fire limits to the liquor traffic and say to the fiery tide of alcoholic poison, 'Thus far and no farther shalt thou come.'" He then offered a resolution (adopted by rising vote) that this audience request the town board to prescribe certain limits within which the traffic shall be hedged, stating that one of the most attractive (?) saloons in the city is in the shadow of the Presbyterian church.

When a rising vote was called for, six hundred people rose, and Rev. Lorenzo D. White, Presbyterian pastor, shook hands with Rev. Mr. Smith, Methodist pastor, and said "Thank the Lord."

The Armory Hall was given the ladies free of charge; $46 was given in the collection (young ladies passing the baskets) and thus with practical work done, the meeting rounded to its close.

Two day meetings were held, largely attended and many new members added. Miss Gordon addressed one of these to great acceptance. Ladies were present from Fort Howard, De Pere, Oconomowoc and other towns.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

VICTORIA.—The young ladies of Victoria wish their names added to the list of temperance workers. We organized a Y. W. C. T. U. Feb. 25 (1884), with a membership of nine, since that time we have added thirty-five ladies and sixty-five gentlemen to our number. We brought our union before the public by holding a reception on the 17th of March, in Temperance Hall, which was a grand success. We sent a general invitation to the public, and charged no admission fee, nor did we intend taking up a collection, but the gentlemen present insisted on giving us a collection which helped us on to the extent of twenty-six dollars and twenty-five cents. We also obtained a number of signatures to our pledge.

Three weeks following this reception we held a general mass meeting and were greeted by a crowded hall, in so much that our worthy president was compelled to announce that on specially mentioned occasions the meeting would be devoted to young people alone, the officers of the W. C. T. U. and their husbands excepted. Some difference of opinion seems to exist as to the wisdom of making this distinction. We however feel compelled to take this course, for want of room to accommodate all who would like to be present. Acting upon this plan we announced a pound party and devoted it especially to the young people, the success of which may be estimated by the following result: ten ladies and twenty gentlemen signed the pledge and we realized from sale of pound packages twenty-one dollars and fifty cents.

In addition to social meetings, we have endeavored to promote the interest of our union by distributing temperance literature from house to house throughout the city. We also intend in the near future taking up the hospital work, and feel assured that the temperance cause is one that requires our most earnest endeavor to promote. MRS. W. H. BONE, Cor. Sec.

CALIFORNIA.

EDEN.—The Eden W. C. T. U., composed of ladies from the towns of San Leandro, San Lorenzo, and Haywards, (Alameda Co.) was organized last fall and since then has been very busy. The union meets in the three towns in succession and is fortunate in numbering among its active members quite a number of good workers, those who understand how to create an interest in that particular branch of the temperance work, etc. A gentleman who has attended very many gatherings carried on by men alone, said to the writer lately, that never, in all his experience had he witnessed meetings carried of in better order than those conducted by the president on this union, Mrs. Sturtevant Peet, lately from Vermont. As a "masculine observer," I take pleasure in speaking in high terms of the manner in which the work is done.

The union numbers about eighty members, nearly all active. One result of their short labors has been seen already, namely: The county board of education have lately sent notice to the president of the union that Prof. Fisher's Physiology will be placed in the public schools of the county, in answer to a request, drawn up by this union and signed by a large number of residents, that temperance text books be introduced in the public schools of the county. C. P. Nettleton.

ILLINOIS.

PIASA.—RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, It has in His inscrutable wisdom pleased our Heavenly Father to remove from among us our esteemed friend and sister, Mrs. Amanda Peter; therefore

Resolved, That while we bow in humble submission to His heavenly will, knowing that He "doeth all things well;" we do today deeply mourn the loss of a dear and faithful member of the W. C. T. U.

Resolved, That we will ever cherish her memory as we treasure a flower whose fragrance can never die, while we miss from our union her bright face, loving words and hands ever ready to aid in work for the W. C. T. U.

Resolved, That in memory of our sister each member of the union shall wear till the close of the year a badge of crape entwined with the white ribbon of our order.

Resolved, That we tender our deepest sympathies to the bereaved family of our sister, and pray that He who has said, "When thou passeth through the waters I will be with thee," may be with them and pour into their wounded hearts the balm of His consolation.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be presented to the afflicted family; also that copies for publication be furnished our county papers and The Union Signal, the National organ of the W. C. T. U.

Mrs. L. A. Harris, Pres.
Mrs. L. M. Darby, Sec.

SEVENTEENTH DISTRICT CONVENTION.

A convention of the seventeenth district was held in Hillsboro, March 26, 27. About fifty delegates and visitors from abroad, representing some sixteen unions were in attendance.

Miss West who was with us the first day helped us greatly by her bright thoughts and numerous timely suggestions. Her talk on unfermented wine was full of the most convincing arguments against the use of fermented wine at the Lord's table. Nowhere is it mentioned that Christ took wine, the cup only is spoken of. When the Lord's Supper was instituted fermented wine could not have been used as nothing in the shape of ferment was permitted in any of the houses. Upon inquiry it was found that nearly all the churches represented in convention use the pure juice of the grape at communion.

Mrs. Wilcox presented the claims of The Union Signal, and made a strong appeal in its behalf. Specimen copies were distributed and a number of subscriptions taken.

Mrs. Kepley, state superintendent of Work among Foreigners, had carefully collected many facts and statistics to show that much temperance work is needed among the foreign population, giving the Germans the precedence.

Mrs. Gilmore's paper on "Church and Prohibition," for clear, forcible ideas and true womanly eloquence was one of the gems of the convention.

Mrs. Lee, of Shobonier, presented the subject of "Obstacles" in anything but a discouraging fashion. Afterward, in her report of her union we heard how Shobonier women overcome difficulties. Learning that the whisky party was circulating a petition for license, the women (and there was but a handful of them) started out at once through the mud and rain with a remonstrance, and before many hours handed to the board of supervisors a list of names so long that the license party despairing of success, called in its petition.

One of the pleasantest and most encouraging features of the convention was the interest manifested by our young ladies. Miss Stahl, from Litchfield, favored the convention with a most carefully written article on "Cider and Beer." Her treatment of the subject was comprehensive and evinced a degree of study and patient investigation that would have done credit to a much older head.

At four o'clock the public school teachers came in to hear scientific temperance instruction discussed. Mrs. Mary B. Willard presented the subject advocating the use of temperance text books in the schools, and suggesting many ways of inculcating temperance truths.

The plan of work adopted by the district was substantially the same as that adopted at Alton by the state convention. The finance committee offered a resolution in favor of raising $600 before the next state meeting, $300 to be given to the state, which was unanimously adopted.

The plan of work and resolutions have been published for distribution.

The reports of local unions were encouraging, showing steady growth in interest in most lines of work, general increase in membership, and enlarged views on finance. Several new unions have been organized within the year, two large and flourishing Y. W. C. T. U's. are in active operation and a large member of children are enrolled in Bands of Hope. The treasurer reported the district in a healthy condition financially. The president in her report gave evidence of a thorough and careful supervision of the district work.

On Wednesday evening the church was filled to overflowing, many being unable to gain admittance. After the usual opening exercises followed the addresses of welcome. Miss West was then introduced and held the attention of her audience for an hour and a half while she spoke of the various lines of work of the W. C. T. U. Four little boys, one the son of a saloon keeper, who occupied not the most comfortable seat on the altar railing, sat earnestly watching her face absorbed in her remarks.

On Thursday evening Mrs. Mary B. Willard spoke to a crowded house, on Woman's Ballot. A touching little poem written by Mrs. E. A. Matthews, of Carlinville, was read by Miss Cram.

Much interest was added to the evening sessions by the excellent music furnished by the choir. A quartette of young gentlemen favored us with a number of fine temperance songs and Mrs. Lilly, the sweet singer, delighted us all by her perfect rendition of several choice selections. E. S. Aylworth, District Sec.

Noble.—We have just been holding a series of gospel meetings under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. of this place, conducted by that talented and indefatigable worker, Mrs. M. H. Villars, of Champaign. The meeting commenced April 17, and continued until the night of May 11. The results are a general stirring up of the whole community both in religious and temperance principles. Great crowds attended these meetings from miles around and 122 more precious souls are now numbered among the saved of Christ. C. L. Slate.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—The tenth district has made arrangements for telling work in the departments of organization and finance. Mrs. C. H. Smith, of Elmwood, is to give that district two months and a half of work, as district organizer and financial secretary, and all who know Mrs. Smith will feel assured of work well done.

—Miss West has prepared a second leaflet upon scientific temperance, entitled, "Temperance in the Public School," designed not for workers only, but for general distribution as a means of arousing interest in our proposed scientific temperance bill. The first four pages have been bound in a separate leaflet and it is desired to place it in the hands of every man and woman in the state. Mrs. L. H. Gwin, state superintendent of Juvenile Work, has also prepared a leaflet giving valuable hints upon this most important line of work. Both leaflets will be ready June 1. Let unions send in large orders promptly, remembering that fifteen cents per hundred, for postage, is all the charge made for this valuable series of leaflets.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' DEPARTMENT.

Dear Sisters:—I desire to call to your cordial and prayerful consideration the new branch of our temperance work, known as the Soldiers' and Sailors' Department.

Our main object is to relieve our land from the curse of intemperance. How best to accomplish this is not easily determined. Woman's purpose is not best accomplished by bitterness, nor by a vengeful spirit. Our work should be so kind, so charitable, so free from party, intrigue or sect, that good people of all parties, sects and classes can aid and assist us in this work of education and reformation.

To the silent influences of the home, to the wide dissemination of information concerning the effects of alcohol upon the human system, in the public schools, from the platform and through the press, by persistent personal solicitation for signers of the pledge, and to prayerful, ceaseless activity in the work must we look for success, rather than to expect political action before a correct public sentiment has thus been developed.

Let our work be so distinguished by those crowning attributes of the woman, wife and mother, constancy, unselfish devotion and loving kindness, that the shafts of antagonism and prejudice can find no lodgment. In this way we shall sap the foundations of the liquor traffic, disarm criticism, and cultivate a healthy public sentiment, and we may be assured when public sentiment is correctly and properly developed, prohibitory law will as surely appear on the statute books as the rising sun heralds the dawn, and our beautiful land shall indeed become a peaceful home, where all may dwell secure from the ravages of strong drink and its attendant train of evils.

To promote the cause, and as state superintendent of this department, I recommend that you appoint a superintendent for special work amongst soldiers and sailors, in your union.

Choose a woman of prayerful, loving spirit, whose heart shall prompt to earnest, active work. We aim to reach the army and navy, the organizations of the Grand Army of the Republic and the National Guard, with temperance literature, to secure co-operation of commandants and chaplains, and by correspondence, personal visitation, gospel temperance meetings in camps, military hospitals, at homes, on shipboard, or wherever convenient, promote the cause of temperance.

As the state report must be sent in by September 20, county and local unions will please report by September 1, that time may be given for preparation.

Invoking God's blessing upon this new work which He has placed in our hands, I am yours faithfully,

Mrs. Marcus Hulings.

MISSOURI.

Carterville.—Our W. C. T. U. wishes to air its white ribbon in the columns of that breezy temperance paper, The Union Signal. In December 1883 Mrs. Mary Clardy organized about sixteen of our most energetic ladies into a W. C. T. U.

At that time three saloons were running at full blast, and the whisky element had nearly taken possession of our busy little burg.

Today but one saloon looms up in our midst; the W. C. T. U. boasts over 40 members; every Sunday afternoon a temperance Sunday school is in session; a Band of Hope has been organized, and total abstinence is slowly but surely spreading over the entire city.

During the winter Messrs. Holt and Critchfield each held a series of meetings, in which the blue ribbon was shaken so forcibly that several hundred hard drinkers were induced to "swear off."

Sunday, the eleventh instant, Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, the "Minnesota cyclone," struck our city and delivered one of her finest lectures.

Our union is wide awake and will make a desperate effort to keep her share of the temperance business booming. Mrs. Fred Dalby, Cor. Sec.

COLORADO NOTES.

A few weeks since Mrs. St. John reorganized union at Pueblo, with thirty members. Mrs. Shields has organized a union in North Denver. A work on "Hygiene Physiology" has been adopted by the board for use in public schools in Colorado Springs.

Mrs. J. Ellen Foster will give Colorado from July 7 to 21. We anticipate great good and great pleasure from her lectures in the state.

Mrs. Kitty D. H. Thompson.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

Hereafter no liquor will be sold on the boats of the New York and Hartford line.

"A veritable social tinder-box" is the way the Boston Traveller refers to Cincinnati.

The Y. W. C. T. U. of Collinsville, Ill., organized in April, gave an entertainment recently to raise funds for their Band of Hope which netted them $63.

The work of organization is being rapidly extended in West Virginia. Appointments have already been made for Mrs. M. L. Wells of Indiana, which will completely fill the month of June with solid work.

Messrs. Hughes and Ward have just given a week's earnest labor in Marshall, (Mich.,) under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. It is confidently expected that their work will be productive of great good.

The W. C. T. U. of Iowa will join with the Western Sunday School association in celebrating the doubly glorious Fourth of July at their camp ground at Lisbon. Miss Willard and other prominent speakers will be present.

Mrs. Laura G. Fixen was greeted by a large and appreciative audience in Humboldt, Kansas, on the evening of May 13, that gave her a good contribution, and also the largest amount for State Prison Work that she has received in the state.

A juvenile temperance school was organized in Bloomfield, (N. J.,) May 3, 1884, by Mrs. M. G. Baldwin superintendent of Juvenile Work in temperance schools. Number of scholars present 56 boys, 74 girls, making a total of 130, number of teachers 14.

McMinnville, Tenn., has just enjoyed a visit from Mrs. Saxon, who gave them two lectures which are pronounced a grand treat. Mrs. Saxon left substantial proof of her ministry in the newly organized W. C. T. U. which has already started a subscription list for The Union Signal.

Mrs. Rev. Pfeifer, a member of the Beaver Falls W. C. T. U., believes she is called of God to work among the Germans of this country and is open for engagements. She graduated from the Academy of Strasburg, Germany, in 1870, and was consecrated to the Lord's work in 1873, since which time she has tried to do faithfully whatever her hands have found to do. Her terms are $25.00 a week and entertainment. Address Mrs. Rev. Pfeiffer, Beaver Falls, Penn.

A noteworthy incident of the annual May party celebrating the thirty-third anniversary of the Cherokee Seminaries at Tahlequah, Ind. Ter., was the entire absence of liquor. Everything was quiet and orderly, quite in contrast to some of the parties of former years before the gospel temperance movement became so prominent. Blue ribbons were worn by almost every body. The interest in Mrs. Molloy's work there grows and is reaching out to the regions beyond.

FLOWER MISSION—PRISON DAY.

My beloved Co-workers:—June 9th is at hand and I want to say a few last words to you about Prison Day. I may write you again through these columns next week; will do so if I find I have omitted any important item.

Kentucky state superintendent, Mrs. Munnell, came to me last week to ask if she may use my text cards for Prison Day work. This suggested to me that others of our state superintendents may be willing to do the same.

Our cards are small and plain, and were selected for your regular weekly work all the year round, and without reference to that day's work. But after this conversation with her, and finding from her the expense of the floral and illuminated text cards—that so many out of a package must be thrown aside as useless on account of the inappropriateness of the texts on them,—I believe it would be a good thing to adopt these for that day's work.

I have selected these texts with great care and after earnest prayer for the guidance of the Holy Spirit, that I might be led to choose those which will be best calculated to win souls for Christ, to reclaim the erring, to woo the sinful, to comfort the burdened, and to teach most invitingly the glad tidings of salvation. I shall be pleased to hear of the Flower Missions using these cards this year. Should I live, next year (D. V.) we will get out a handsome set especially for Prison Day. These cards can be bought at $1.25 per thousand and any order sent to Miss Gertrude Ferguson, W. C. T. U. rooms, No. 2 Polytechnic building, Louisville, Ky., will be attended to at once.

We felt a little afraid to make too large a venture in ordering text cards printed, as we could not tell if the workers would be willing to buy all they need of us. But we receive encouraging words from several friends, and have already had enough orders for the cards to make us believe it was a good move. Our faith is strengthened to see God's hand in it, and He will make it grow. We regret exceedingly the delay which has been caused by unforeseen accidents in the printer's office. He assures us he will have them ready for us by Thursday of this week. Those who have ordered are perhaps surprised to receive so small a variety. This is because our printer has only sent in one set yet. There are twelve in a set. We have ordered eight sets, so giving us ninety-six texts of the most choice selection. If the demand for them increases we will get out more sets at once. Do not send postage stamps, we cannot use them to advantage. Send postal order, check or registered letter.

If any superintendent needs some plans for Prison Day let them order at once, and as many as she needs, from Miss Ferguson. The text leaflets are almost gone, but we have plenty of the plans for that day's work on hand. We have ordered today two thousand more of my letters explanatory of W. C. T. U. Flower Missions and hope to receive them by the first of the week. Any one desiring such please notify me.

Let especial care be paid to the religious exercises at the jails, prisons and alms houses visited. Select old familiar hymns which will fill the hearts of the prisoners with recollections of home, mother and childhood's pure joys. I would advise asking a hymn to be sung to you by the prisoners, and by all means get them to join in your hymn.

This day's labor will be worse than useless unless entered into with faith, real soul consecration, and devout, prayerful desire for God's blessing upon the seed you are to sow and upon the souls of those to whom you go to carry Christian counsel, and that brightness which springs from service for Christ's sake. Be sure to secure the prayers of the pastors on the Sabbath preceding prison day.

Remember me, "beloved of the Lord," in your prayers that I may be taught of God and His own wisdom may be given me to guide you in this work He has given us.

There seems some little misunderstanding about the use of "Texts for Prison Day" which I wish to explain in this issue of THE UNION SIGNAL. The thought has come to me to have the same selection of texts read at the religious exercises in all the prisons over the land on that day. Unity of work has a blessed influence. In order to secure this and to bring to the prisoner a few of the sweetest of "Our Father's" words, I have collected those I believe will be of most solid comfort and had them printed on leaflets for general distribution. I would suggest to the different committees that they leave the leaflet with the prisoners. In view of this I had the reference put at the end of each text, hoping that some poor famished soul desiring to read again, may look up the context and then these words of God may be "quick and powerful, sharper than a two-edged sword," and may prove "a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart."

Most affectionately yours,

JENNIE CASSEDAY.

THE W. C. T. U. National Anthem, "For God and Home and Native Land" should be used at all W. C. T. U. meetings and conventions. Miss Willard hopes to hear it wherever she is invited to speak. The price has been reduced to 10c. for single copies; fifteen copies for $1.

THE passage of a prohibitory measure by our legislature this winter means a reduction of onerous taxation; a diminution of pauperism and crime; it means the triumph of morals and religion over debauchery and licentiousness; it means the rejection of every corrupting element and the support of frugality, temperance and virtue. It means fealty by two political parties to platforms as wide as the world and as broad as humanity.—Iowa Advance.

IT has been ordered by Cardinal Manning that a branch of the Catholic Total Abstinence League of the Cross be founded in every Catholic school; the manager of the school being the president of the league and a total abstainer. The Catholics are rapidly moving into the front ranks of temperance workers, and doing good work in their endeavors to educate the youth of the church in regard to the evils of intemperance.

REV. JAMES PINKHAM, of Iowa, in an address to the W. C. T. U. of Minneapolis, Minn., spoke of "the utter failure of high license to restrict the evil. Des Moines, in less than five weeks after the ordinance went into effect, had a gain of eleven saloons. In Burlington there had been a gain of five saloons in six weeks after the license was raised from $500 to $600. It cost more and the business was made respectable. (?) The same was true in every city which he had examined, and he could prove his statements by the words of the mayors of these cities. He wished to leave these facts here in Minneapolis, where high license may soon be the issue."

An Efficient Remedy.

In all cases of Bronchial and Pulmonary Affections is AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. As such it is recognized and prescribed by the medical profession, and in many thousands of families, for the past forty years, it has been regarded as an invaluable household remedy. It is a preparation that only requires to be taken in very small quantities, and a few doses of it administered in the early stages of a cold or cough will effect a speedy cure, and may, very possibly, save life. There is no doubt whatever that

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

Has preserved the lives of great numbers of persons, by arresting the development of Laryngitis, Bronchitis, Pneumonia, and Pulmonary Consumption, and by the cure of those dangerous maladies. It should be kept ready for use in every family where there are children, as it is a medicine far superior to all others in the treatment of Croup, the alleviation of Whooping Cough, and the cure of Colds and Influenza, ailments peculiarly incidental to childhood and youth. Promptitude in dealing with all diseases of this class is of the utmost importance. The loss of a single day may, in many cases, entail fatal consequences. Do not waste precious time in experimenting with medicines of doubtful efficacy, while the malady is constantly gaining a deeper hold, but take at once the speediest and most certain to cure,

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again, I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address Dr. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl St., New York.

BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

FROM THE NERVE-GIVING PRINCIPLES OF THE OX-BRAIN and WHEAT GERM.

VITALIZED PHOSPHITES.—Restores the energy lost by nervousness, weakness or indigestion; relieves lassitude and neuralgia; refreshes the nerves tired by worry, excitement or excessive sensitiveness, and strengthens a failing memory. It aids wonderfully in the mental and bodily growth of infants and children. Under its use the teeth come easier, the bones grow better, the skin smoother, the brain acquires more readily and rests and sleeps more sweetly. An ill fed brain learns no lessons, and is excusable if peevish. It gives a more intellectual and happier childhood. It does away with that feeling of weakness and exhaustion which impels to the use of alcoholic beverages, and directly counteracts a cause of depravity and suffering which has baffled the efforts of religion and morality. Not a secret remedy; formula on every label. For sale by Druggists, or mail, $1.

Miscellaneous Selections.

Now it transpires that the Nebraska high license law is violated with impunity in the great city of Omaha and the city council is in league with the saloonists in the matter. The Omaha Republican of recent date makes an urgent protest against "that abortion of the Slocum law" which the city council call a legal ordinance.

The Cedar Rapids Republican concludes an article on compensation for losses sustained by the brewers by the following well put sentence: "No; Iowa will pay millions if necessary, to enforce its prohibitory law, but not a cent to compensate those who by it are cut off from doing further harm."

Up to thefi fteenth of May, 29,847 signatures had been obtained in Indiana, to call for a convention to nominate a state ticket on the prohibition platform, providing none of the existing parties adopt prohibition as an issue, and nominate a ticket in favor of it. The Monitor-Journal expects 50,000 by June 1.

A declaration in favor of local option, signed by 830 ministers of religion in Liverpool and the Hundred of West Derby, has been forwarded in a bound volume to the prime minister. In his reply addressed to the Bishop of Liverpool, who heads the list, Mr. Gladstone says, "Her majesty's government are most anxious to proceed with a prudent reform of the licensing laws."

The monster petition in favor of the bill to prohibit the sale of intoxicants by grocers, promoted by the Church of England Woman's Temperance Association, has been a success. Mr. Kennard presented a petition to the British House of Commons, signed by 15,080 mothers, wives, and daughters of England. A petition was also presented by Mr. Stevenson in favor of Sunday closing by 104,000 women.

The American Normal Musical Institute will be held this year in Michigan City, Ind., commencing July 7, continuing four weeks This Institute has been held annually for ten years, and has sent forth many of the best teachers in the country. Among the branches taught are Church Music, Voice Culture, Solo Singing, Harmony, Composition, Sight Reading, Piano, and Organ, etc. The principal will give a very thorough course in "The Art of Teaching," which will be of incalculable value to teachers. The principal choral work to be studied is Haydn's masterpiece, Creation. There will be six teachers in the faculty, including the celebrated Pianist Amy Fay (author of "Music Study in Germany"), who will teach her inimitable system of technics, and give her grand piano "Conversations." Mr. J. M. Stillman, Mus. Doc., who is one of the best teachers of Harmony and Composition, will present his specialty. Mr. S. W. Straub is known in all parts of the country by his excellent books and skilful teaching and convention work. The other teachers are also eminent in the profession. Students from all parts of the country have been in attendance, and it is expected that an unusual number of teachers and those who are preparing to teach, as well as others who desire to take a thorough course with eminent teachers, will be present. Our musical friends should address Mr. S. W. Straub, 236 State St., Chicago, for circulars of this school.

Among a few of the numerous points of superiority enjoyed by the patrons of this road are its DAY COACHES, which are the finest that human art and ingenuity can create; its PALATIAL SLEEPING CARS, which are models of comfort and elegance; its PALACE DRAWING ROOM CARS, which are unsurpassed by any; and its widely celebrated
North-Western Dining Cars,
the like of which are not run by any other road anywhere. In short, it is asserted that IT IS THE BEST EQUIPPED ROAD IN THE WORLD.
All points of interest North, Northwest and West of Chicago, business centers, summer resorts and noted hunting and fishing grounds are accessible by the various branches of this road.
It owns and controls over 5,000 miles of road, and has over four hundred passenger conductors constantly caring for its millions of patrons.
Ask your ticket agent for tickets via this route AND TAKE NONE OTHER. All leading ticket agents sell them. It costs no more to travel on this route, that gives first-class accommodations than it does to go by the poorly equipped roads.

Signal Notes.

SOME of Iowa's saloon keepers are closing out already and going to the Black Hills, where they think no prohibitionists will bother them. Congress should be impartial in this regard and serve other territories as well as it serves the Indian territory.

A METHODIST temperance colony has been established in Assiniboa, in the north west of Canada. The colony was established two years ago and covers an area sixteen miles long and fifteen in breadth. The land is said to be excellent, and about 120 settlers with their families are already in the colony.

AT a temperance meeting held in Cedar Falls, Iowa, recently, Judge Stoneman made an address, and the handsome sum of $1,100 was subscribed to aid in enforcing the prohibitory law. The campaign against the saloon has but just opened. It will be a short, sharp and decisive contest after July 4th.

THE saloons of St. Louis under high license are expected to pay $1,000,000 into the city treasury. They produce eighty per cent. of the crime and poverty of the city. They cost the people of St. Louis $15,000,000 annually. They make drunkards every year of more than 1,000 young men. Does high license work satisfactorily?—National American.

THE leading brewer of Emporia, Kansas, declared he would run his business "law or no law." A correspondent of the Iowa City Republican called on him the other day and interviewed him. He was boarding at the jail, and in answer to the question, Does prohibition prohibit? answered: "Mein Got in himmel, I tink it do." His opinion on that subject was affected by his environments.

JOAQUIN MILLER in Philadelphia Press: Ten years ago, when writing letters from this city to London, I was compelled to chronicle the fact that it was no strange thing to see United States senators drinking, drunk in public bar-rooms along with knots of lobbyists and loafers. And it was all true then, But it is not true now. The world moves. There is hope, for the great American heart is good, perfect. State a folly or a wrong fairly to the people, keep it before them, so they may not forget it, and my word for it in less than five years it will be swept away.

We append the testimony of Gen. C. H. Howard, because of the esteem and confidence in which he is held, not only by his many friends, but also by the thousands who know him as the recent editor of the Advance, and hence know that only deserved merit alone can influence him in the following statement:

CHICAGO, Ill., March 4, 1884.

DR. F. L. PEIRO—Dear Sir: It gives me great pleasure to state that Mrs. Howard's health is permanently restored. Last summer she began the use of your excellent Oxygen treatment by your advice So gratifying have been the results that it seems to be not less than a simple duty, as a debt of gratitude, to make this statement. Very respectfully yours,

C. H. HOWARD.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 23. CHICAGO, JUNE 5, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

FRANCIS MURPHY and his son Thomas Edward are now conducting a campaign on the West and South sides of the city, after ten days of successful work in Farwell Hall, where hundreds have signed the pledge and begun new lives. The blessing of a thousand homes is poured forth like sweet ointment on the heads of these devoted workers.

As we go to press there is no news from Oregon—concerning its decisive day—June 2—whereon hung the fate of woman's ballot in the state. A few weeks since an Oregon court decided that a mother who prosecuted the saloon keeper of whom her boy was in the habit of getting liquor, was not "a person," and therefore could not maintain an action against the despoiler of her home. God grant that by the plebiscite of Tuesday, mothers may become possessed of a legal personality.

A SOCIETY has been formed in England, Dr. Norman Kerr at the head, for the study into the causes and cure of inebriety. It is composed largely of medical men. This is going down to the roots of the evil, but we should predict even better results from the study if the mothers of England were to be numbered among these students. Scientific research of this sort and purpose needs to deal with the sacred beginnings of life whereof God has made mothers the tender custodians.

DENMARK is rousing itself from a sodden lethargy. The home has been reached in the ravages of the national drink customs, and it is found that one in every one hundred and fifty marriages is dissolved through drunkenness on one side or the other. Our own agitators in behalf of stricter marriage laws and against the growing evils of divorce, would do well to study as deeply as the Denmark philanthropists the causes that lead so surely to the disruption and overthrow of the home.

MAYOR MARTIN, of Boston, refuses to issue licenses to liquor dealers in that city. The decision of the supreme court of the state, rendered in October last, is behind Mayor Martin. By the Massachusetts statute all licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors to be drunk on the premises must contain the provision "that the licensee shall not keep a public bar." Every saloonist in Boston today can be convicted of keeping a public bar, and consequently every saloon is illegal.

The saloonists are themselves appealing to the supreme court against Mayor Martin, and the matter is one of the most complicated in license history.

THE non-partisan memorial of the W. C. T. U., asking for the adoption of measures that shall lead to the constitutional prohibition of the manufacture, sale and importation of alcoholic beverages, was presented to the republican convention by Senator Donnan of Iowa, who at the opening of the legislature last winter, sprang to his feet at the last stroke of the president's gavel to present the prohibition bill which is now the law of Iowa. There is great fitness in his bearing the first prayer of the American home to the party which has in the past aimed to secure the liberty of his home to every man, black as well as white. A description of the presentation of the memorial to the greenback convention may be found in our editorial columns.

THE Sybarites taught their horses to dance to the sound of pipes, and the Cretonians learned what music they used. The two nations becoming engaged in war with each other the Cretonians resorted to a curious stratagem; they caused their minstrels to sound those strains to which the horses of the Sybarites had been accustomed to dance, when, lo, in the midst of the fight they began to perform their fantastic pranks, threw their riders into confusion, by which they lost the battle and were annihilated.

The Cretonians of the liquor traffic have adopted a similar stratagem in raising the cry for high license. Their leaders resorted to it as a "judicious measure," partaking of the music of prohibition, to do, in another way, that same work! They sounded their stolen music right in the midst of the fight; and what has been the result? Why, that some of the most dashing cavalry of temperance lost control of their steeds, and exhibited to the general gaze the grotesque but sad and mortifying spectacle of dancing to the music of the enemy!—enforcing on us a greater and more earnest effort to restore order from the confusion, to recognize the fight, and press on with a more irresistible determination for victory.

THE national convention of the republican party, now in session in this city, is the center around which the city's thought and feeling revolve. The first thought of 600,000 citizens, to say nothing of thousands of visitors is, "How to get in;" the first feeling on the part of as least 590,000 of them is of disappointment that they cannot get in. But deeper than this, is the thought of the business man, the politician, the place-holder, the honest working man, the Christian citizen, to all of whom the presidential nomination of the republican party has an interest varying in importance from bread and butter considerations, to high and noble purposes of statesmanship and patriotism.

Deeper even than these are the thoughts and feelings of the true women of the country, those who are hoping, and praying, and working for the ideal republic, the government that is to be on His shoulders whose right it is to reign. The mothers of the republic are thinking of their sons, are looking with anxious eyes for the nomination of righteous men, to whom they can point these sons as to the example of a pure and upright political life. Shall they watch and pray in vain?

AT the annual meeting of the Illinois Homeopathic Medical Association in this city the statement was made by a prominent member, that the W. C. T. U. is the best medium of communication between the profession and the laity. Of course not everyone will accept this proposition without question, but the maker of it stands ready to make good the assertion by actual demonstration. It serves to point another moral however in our our own personal interest, which we are not slow to "make a note of."

We are receiving many words of commendation for the position taken by THE UNION SIGNAL in regard to the exclusion of all advertising of patent medicines and other medicinal recommendations Please remember, good friends, that the space ought to be filled with such advertisements as you would like to see in a Christian temperance paper, and make a little effort in this behalf. If the W. C. T. U. is such a valuable medium for the transmission of scientific truth, it is quite as true that there is probably no better advertising medium among weekly papers in this country today than the national organ of the society, THE UNION SIGNAL. It goes to the heart of the home—is a heart investment in these homes, and is read conscientiously and lovingly, as only a paper in which such investment has been made, is read. Many a subscriber says, "I read the paper, every page, advertising and all—as I read no other periodical that comes to our home." An abundance of such testimony justifies us in the statement that no better advertising medium can be found, and quite contrary to editorial custom in this paper, we have made this much of an appeal to the generous readers that they use the information so kindly given us, "where it will do the most good."

IT IS I; BE NOT AFRAID.

(St. Mark; vi:50.)

ANNA HOLYOKE HOWARD.

The night was dark on Galilee,
The wind blew high across the sea,
Weary and faint, a patient band
Toiled with the oars to gain the land.

But see! a white and spectral form
Walks on the waves amid the storm,
With quaking hearts they cry with fear,
For lo! the awful form draws near.

But hark! who answers to their cry?
No foe that voice. The Lord draws nigh.
He speaks to cheer, not to upbraid,
"Lo! it is I; be not afraid."

Our human hearts oft faint and fear,
Oppressed and sad while ills draw near;
Ah! often heaviest clouds that rise
Are only blessings in disguise.

THROUGH THE EYE TO THE HEART.

A PAPER READ BY MISS ELLEN STORRS AT A RECENT CONVENTION OF MISSOURI W. C. T. U. WORKERS.

The press of the country is the index of its civilization; the lever of its morality. How shall we as temperance workers write upon it the truths we believe, and through them move humanity to higher grades of thought, to clearer conception of duty, and greater loyalty to God?—Esther T. Housh.

The Executive Committee of the National W. C. T. U. in planning its varied departments of work wisely appointed a superintendent for each, with a field of labor so broad and full of interest and responsibility as to make her for the time being a woman of one idea. We all know the power of concentrated thought and action. Women as a class are not noted for this; the worry and varied duties of their daily lives render it almost a necessity that they should be troubled about many things. The demands of our local temperance work are urgent and continual. I never felt that I belonged wholly to one department until shut in by ill health from all work but that which could be done with the pen. To my thought the Press Department more than any other seems to demand this singleness of purpose; not for its importance only, but because it is closely allied to the spiritual and unseen, one of those powerful forces which are quietly making and moulding for the future, yet in this every day world of ours likely to be thrust aside by those which are more self asserting. Our local superintendents of Press Work most of them prepare the matter for their temperance columns amid the pressure of home cares. How then shall they be true to one idea? By seeking first of all the wisdom which cometh from that which shall make them quick to discern that which is fittest, that it may go forth bearing the pure impress of a womanly hand and about it something of the sanctity of home life. In his lecture at Hannibal Geo. W. Bain said: "There are two great armies in the field, the brewers and distillers and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. One comes with money and the ballot, the other with prayers. Can any one doubt as to which side God is on? The prayers are heard, but the ballots count." Our opponents realize fully the power of the press and that many papers can be bought. Very recently they laid upon the table of every member of Congress in both houses a pamphlet of thirty pages containing a petition asking for an extension of the bonded whisky period. Only twelve pages of this pamphlet were taken up with the petition and documents, the remainder was filled with the names of petitioners. Not only the names of liquor men in the cities and towns, but bankers, merchants, tradesmen, professional men and mechanics, names of prominent men in the churches in great numbers, Presbyterians and Methodists, so says one who had seen the document. These Christian men were sorely in need of more light that they might have clearer ideas of duty. How can they be enlightened so effectually as through the public press? A newspaper item will go where temperance literature can find no entrance.

The press department has not received the attention its importance demands, either in our national, state or local councils. Many of our departments have a national superintendent constantly in the field traveling from state to state in the interest of the work. Noticeably the Sabbath school, juvenile, scientific temperance instruction, legislative work and many others are managed in much the same way, but the department of press work is reached only through correspondence. It is briefly alluded to in the National and state conventions.

At Detroit, when a meeting of the state superintendents was called by Mrs. Buell, there were only two present. In the county conventions I have attended in our own state, I have not always found it easy to gain space and time in which to present the claims of this department. Our two state presidents have been deeply impressed with its importance, and as they have gone about through the state, have given it such aid and encouragement as they were able amid the pressure of other duties. As a result in the rapid progress Missouri has made in all temperance work, this department has kept pace with the others. Wherever there is a union, almost without exception, space has been granted for temperance matter in the local papers. Every district has been heard from as having papers favorable to the cause, even that benighted one, so far as W. C. T. U. influence is concerned, the fourteenth, the largest in the state, having seventeen counties, about which we know but little except that some of them are under water. One of them Stoddard, has one of the most important papers in Missouri, and has the only W. C. T. U. in the district.

Faint appeals for help came up to us at the beginning of our state organization, which of late has ceased altogether, but we know that The Union Signal is taken there, and that Stoddard county is quoted as having ninety different varieties of timber.

Missouri has a reputation abroad for other things than bandits and bank robbers. Flour made from the winter wheat of Ralls county took the premium at the last Paris exposition. Flour from St. Genevieve won the medal at the Vienna exposition in 1873, and the Missouri wheat crop of 1880 was of greater value than all the gold and silver mines of Colorado and Nevada. The corn crop of the same year was worth more in gold than the same year's gold and silver product of California. A great state rich in all natural resources with a grand future, I know of no better place in which to work for God and home and native land, through that most potent of all instrumentalities, the press. To the unions here represented I would say, having appointed your superintendents of press or committees, sustain them, surround them with an atmosphere of sympathy and encouragement, and provide them with such materials as they need for their work in the way of temperance papers or literature. Remember that while most of your work is only local, theirs goes out on the road and highway, sowing the seed everywhere. The little band of local superintendents just entering upon this work which to many, I know, seems so full of difficulty, are very near to my heart, and always in my thoughts, for I well remember how overwhelming was my sense of utter unfitness to meet its demands when first appointed to take charge of this department; but step by step through the darkness and over the mountains of difficulty, God has led me and will lead you all. So I give you words of cheer adapted from our true temperance poet, John G. Whittier, to our need and our future:

Take courage, temperance workers!
You shall not suffer wreck
While up to God the people's prayers
Are rising from your deck.
Wait cheerily, temperance workers,
For daylight, and for land;
The breath of God is in your sail,
Your rudder in His hand!

Sail on! Sail on! deep freighted
With blessings and with hopes:
The good of old, with shadowy hands
Are pulling at your ropes.
Behind you, holy martyrs
Uplift the palm and crown:
Before you unborn ages send
Their benedictions down.

Courage! your work is holy,
God's errands never fail
Sweep on through storm and darkness
The thunder and the hail!
Work on! toil on! the morning comes,
The port you yet shall win;
And all the bells of God shall ring
The ship of temperance in.

SCIENTIFIC INSTRUCTION.

EMILY V. KEEVER.

Many persons are wondering what the women of the W. C. T. U. really mean by the term "scientific instruction" which they notice more frequently than formerly in articles on the subject of temperance, also what they are aiming to accomplish by it in the public schools if their plans are carried to a successful issue.

Many teachers claim to be already teaching temperance principles, and so they are in a very mild way, by casually remarking now and then to their pupils that whisky drinking is morally wrong and that it degrades, debases and impoverishes those who indulge in the habit.

To teach temperance truths scientifically includes much more than this. It is to give regular lessons on the nature of alcohol, its effects on the different organs of the human body, and the changes that slowly but surely take place as the blood becomes poisoned and carries this poison to every part of the system.

The state provides for the education of its children and demands in return that they be sent forth armed and equipped to defend the laws of a free people, in short that they be good citizens.

The greatest obstacle they meet in their path is intemperance. They are constantly tempted to indulge in the so called social (?) glass, and one of the most important questions of today is, How can they best be taught to resist the temptation which leads to the moral, mental and physical ruin which lies in the cup of intoxication?

The answer is, by scientific instruction, and the best place where such instruction can be given in early life is in the public school.

There are few teachers who would consider themselves prepared to give regular and systematic lessons on this subject without special preparation.

The work to be thorough and permanent must be done as well as that in arithmetic or grammar; step by step from the simple statement which a child can understand to the more difficult ones as the pupils develop a capacity for higher grades of mental work.

As long as the matter of having such instruction in the schools is optional with school boards, so long will it be done in a half-hearted manner by a large number of teachers, under the impression that a change in the administration of school affairs will perhaps be the signal for a pause in the teaching already begun.

To secure permanency in this work, to inspire teachers with a laudable ambition to excel in this line, the state must make it obligatory in all schools under its control; a matter easily accomplished by passing a law requiring the effects of alcohol and tobacco upon the human system to be regularly and scientifically taught.

The legislature of Vermont with a keen insight into the needs of the future has passed such a bill, the principal clause of which reads:

"Be it enacted, that Sec. 10 of the school laws of Vermont are amended, adding to the list of required studies in the public schools, elementary physiology and hygiene which shall give special prominence to the effects of alcoholic drinks, stimulants and narcotics upon the human system."

New Hampshire and Michigan quickly followed her worthy example. Do you ask what is to prevent Illinois from having a similar law in operation?

Ask those legislators who did not dare to vote against it, yet did not want it to pass—how the bill was manipulated when presented last winter.

A still more determined effort in that direction is to be made. For the sake of our future citizens let us plead for it; for the sake of mothers who would thus be spared the agony of beholding promising sons go reeling into drunkards' graves let us work for it.

If every person as soon as convinced of the need and expediency of such a law would earnestly set to work to convince one other, how rapidly a little leaven would leaven the whole lump and public sentiment would soon demand such a law as a right, while legislators, whether personally favorable to it or not, would not dare vote in opposition to the known wishes of their constituents.

W. C. T. U. WORK IN CANADA.

A. C.

Many years ago a woman in Israel, a judge and prophetess, having heard the voice of the Lord in relation to a great work to be done in that land gave the divine command to Barak who then went forth to battle in behalf of an oppressed people.

The most noted leaders were in that company, ten thousand men were under arms, and victory was promised, for had not the Lord said "I will deliver the enemy into their hand?" Still the army hesitated. Why did they not move?

Barak said to Deborah "If thou wilt go with me I will go," so Deborah arose and went with Barak to Kedesh, where the battle was fought, the victory won, and the land had rest.

From that time till the present many battles have been fought between truth and error, freedom and oppression, where the leaders have recognized and invited the presence and influence of woman.

The Deborah of the anti-slavery army (Mrs. Stowe) uttered this same prophecy as she, with those grand leaders, went forth to the aid of a down trodden race. "The Lord will deliver the oppressed people."

That, like the sound of prohibition at the present day, was not a popular cry, neither was the work praised of men, but a work which was done largely in secret, by many, because of the varied interests involved. Ridicule, denial and abuse were used against the truth, but in vain, the work went steadily on, until a few years later, the tide of right feeling rose, came nearer and nearer, and finally swept over the whole country, washing away the stains of slavery, that curse of a nation which delights to call itself free.

The women of Canada having heard the voice of the Lord in secret, are now hearing the Barak-call from the leaders in this great army of temperance workers.

Not only that, but they hear more loudly and frequently, the cry of the enslaved people, the wail of little ones who suffer and die under the reign of the tyrant, and the bitter moaning of those who wish for death and no death comes. They have gone in and out of homes saddened by a great sorrow, and have sat silent before the hoplessness of broken hearted wives and mothers whose very effort to conceal the cause of their grief only made it more apparent.

Our women see too that their homes are in danger. While some happy homes have been entered and their peace destroyed, what guarantee is there that other happy homes may not be touched with the same blight? So, in self protection and in the interests of humanity, they have united to help in freeing this people from a tyranny greater than that exercised over the people of Israel, and from a slavery of both soul and body into which so many thousands of our people have sold themselves.

While they work they continue to look forward with the sure gaze of prophecy to the time when this land, now grown to be a country among the countries of the world, and this people a nation to be proud of as it takes its place in the march of nations, when this land and this nation shall have rest.

The W. C. T. Unions of Canada are as follows: Dominion, Ontario Province, Quebec, Maritime, British Columbia.

The Dominion Union was organized in Montreal in October 1883, and will hold its first meeting, which meetings are to be held once in two years, early in 1885. Its aim will be to unite more closely in their work the Christian temperance women of the different provinces, and to devise plans for the general good, these to be largely carried out in detail by the provincial unions. Its officers are, Mrs. L. Youmans, president; Mrs. Chisholm, Ontario, Mrs. Middleton, Quebec, Mrs. Todd, New Brunswick, Mrs. Pollard, British Columbia, vice presidents; Mrs. Tilton, Ottawa, Ont., corresponding secretary; Miss Menand, recording secretary; Mrs. Steadman, New Brunswick, treasurer.

The Ontario province union, organized in 1877, now comprises fifty local unions with a membership of 1,100. The attention of this union has been largely directed to the importance of introducing scientific instruction in temperance into our public schools. Dr. Richardson's Temperance Lesson Book and other books have been widely circulated in teachers' conventions and elsewhere; petitions have been presented to school boards, etc., and within the last week a deputation of ladies from this union waited upon the Minister of Education at Toronto, asking that temperance text books be introduced into the public schools, to which request a very favorable reply was received.

Medical conventions and associations have been approached and correspondence had with synods, conferences and assemblies, on the medical uses of alcohol and the use of unfermented wine at the Lord's Table.

Twenty thousand tracts have been sent out from the literature department of this union (which is just in its infancy) and a large number of newspapers supplied regularly wi h temperance items.

Three Y. W. C. T. Unions in Ontario are doing good work in this temperance warfare. Boys' night schools, girls' sewing schools and Bands of Hope are successfully carried on under their supervision.

There are eleven departments of work in connection with this provincial union, corresponding to some of those so successfully controlled by the N. W. C. T. U. President, Mrs. Addie Chisholm, Ottawa; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Fawcett, Scarboro.

The Quebec province Union was organized in Montreal, Oct. 17, 1883. Starting with 18 auxiliary unions and a membership of more than 900, this association bids fair to become a power for good in the land.

Although the provincial society has been so recently formed, effective work has been done for some time by local unions, the first union in this province having been organized at Stanstead, by Mrs. Pierce, of Boston, Mass., in 1877.

The education of the children in temperance principles has received the special attention of very many unions in Quebec, public temperance meetings have been promoted, literature distributed, free reading rooms established, petitions circulated against license, temperance picnics held, temperance text book question agitated, cottage and mothers' meetings held and a great amount of individual work done that has greatly aided and strengthened the cause of temperance in that province.

There is one W. C. T. U. at Point St. Charles which is already engaged in active work and will be found to be a social power whose weight and influence for good cannct well be estimated. This union also has its different departments of work, each under the management of a faithful and efficient superintendent. President, Mrs. Middleton, Quebec; corresponding secretary, Miss Lamb.

Four years ago a provincial union for New Brunswick was organized at Fredericton, in that province, the first local union having been formed at Moncton in 1875. In 1883 this provincial union was merged into a maritime union, formed also at Fredericton, which includes seven auxiliary unions from the three provinces, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward's Isle. The exact number of members is not furnished, but if we may judge by the work accomplished, there must be very many willing workers in behalf of this cause in these eastern provinces.

The lines of work followed have been similar to those laid down by the older provincial unions. President, Mrs. Dr. Todd, St. Stephens, N. B.; secretary, Miss Ella Thorne, Fredericton, N. B.

The provincial union of British Columbia was formed in 1883 and comprises two local unions, one in Victoria and one in New Westminister, with a membership of one hundred and forty. In addition to the branches of work undertaken by the other provincial unions, this society has declared in favor of the ballot for woman. President, Mrs. Rev. Pollard, Victoria, B. C.; corresponding secretary, Mrs. D. A. Jenkins, Victoria, B. C.

In Manitoba two local unions have been organized during the last year. One in Winnipeg, Mrs. Monk, president; Mrs. Somerset, secretary, and one in Brandon, the names of officers not given us. These are just beginning in the good work, but at the close of the year will have, doubtless, a record to give of many useful measures planned and executed by means of which, reformatory, educational, preventive and legislative work will have been effectively accomplished.

Our Canadian women gratefully acknowledge the aid given us by many of our sisters across the border, who have greatly assisted us from time to time with wise counsel and stirring words of appeal. Especially do they remember the inspiration and fresh courage that came to us with the presence and influence of Miss Willard. The formation of the Dominion union was largely her suggestion, as was also the organization of British Columbia provincial and local unions.

Mrs. Emily McLaughlin has won the hearts of all with whom she came in contact during her visits in Canada while Col. Bain and Hon. J. B. Finch have charmed us with their eloquence, and have done much to educate the people in sound temperance principles.

Our own Mrs. Youmans has been the pioneer in union work in nearly all our provinces, while the late Mr. Thomas Gales, secretary of Dominion Alliance and Prof. Foster, M. P., have proved themselves friends on whom we could always rely.

More than ever we feel the need for individual work, for hand to hand conflict, yet, Deborah-like, we look forward to the time in the near future, when our women shall be busy in this war, not only with pen and voice and influence, but at the call of the Baraks of our country, shall go up to the land where only the enemy can be vanquished, where only victory can be had in this fight, to the land of Kedesh, the ballot box of our country.

TRAPS.

REV. C. M. LIVINGSTON.

1. There are many traps used to catch animals, but ten times more to catch boys and girls. One of my Sunday school scholars made me a list of some. I wish twenty, who may read this, would each send me a list for comparison.

2. These traps differ. The rat-trap is not like the fish-trap. Those creatures are not caught the same way. Harry is caught in one sort of trap; Hattie in another. There was Joe, I knew him well. The cider trap took Joe. A certain Emma was caged by means of cards. The devil used the dance trap to capture Ralph.

I have fifty in mind now and each was caught in a different trap. The last died a miserable death a short time since. The trap that caught Will was the sugar in the bottom of a tumbler from which his mother drank her brandy when sick. Look out! a trap is now set for each of you.

3. Traps don't seem to be traps. There's the bit of a thing you slipped into the water last Saturday to catch that string of fish.

It was dinner time and Miss Speckle was hungry and she thought it was a worm. So it was a worm, and something else concealed, that hooked Miss Trout up in a trice.

And you think, do you, that a piece of wood, three inches square, looks to a mouse like a prison? Why, that inch auger hole is but a neat door into a pretty dining room whose table is spread with cheese to be sure. A free lunch of course.

Just one taste of beer, or a look into a bad book; what's the danger? Just as the foolish mouse would argue, if it knew how.

It is the last look and the last taste that finishes up the business and the boy or girl. "Why?" Because there was a first.

Still, many of you will meddle with these harmless looking things till you are fast. What then?

4. Yes, traps catch. "They set traps, they catch men;" I wonder if you can find that in the Bible? It is there.

I once looked out upon the ocean and saw ship loads of foolish fish gathered up in nets.

Ah well, there is a certain trap that caught nearly 100,000 folks last year; some of them your friends no doubt. The very best people do get in. Can you guess out that trap, and where it is set. How many do you think were caught by all the other hundred traps?

5. Getting out is quite another matter from getting into a trap.

How did that mouse manage to escape from your trap? "Didn't." That's what I thought.

"I can stop smoking," said Fred a month since. Fred had a cigar in his mouth today. Why don't Fred "stop?" "He don't want to."

Umph! Fanny wants to stop using slang. I've tried to help her. Now she says, "It's no use; I can't; I CAN'T; Oh I C-A-N-T.

Charlie S———, (he is now in a drunkard's grave some where west) was in my school at eighteen. Once I found him in his room fearfully drunk.

"I can't help it," he answered me. ,'You must keep me in or send a teacher to watch over me when I go by Mr. H's. saloon; else I must go in and drink!" Easier to keep out than get out.

6. A mouse is sometimes in the trap without knowing it. The cheese tastes so good it don't see that the door has closed behind it. I should not wonder if several of you were in now. When your cheese is eaten you may find yourselves caught.

Luke 4:18 tells of the only one who can set the prisoner free. Do you know Him?

Campbell, N. J,

A WONDERFUL ANSWER TO PRAYER.

MRS. M. ANNA SMITH.

During the month of March a most interesting work of grace was manifest in England in connection with Mr. Moody's labors for soldiers. A request for prayer was brought in that all in this service and in all the world be included. We believe in answer to these prayers in England, the blessed spirit impressed my mind in San Antonio, Texas, that I must visit the government post there, to open the way for the W. C. T. U. to undertake and save this long neglected class. I had never worked for these men before this time. But although engaged in aiding the W. C. T. U., both among the white andcolored people, and after speaking in three different places to the children in one day, I requested one of the ladies to take me in her carriage to the Government Post. Arrived there we had a very interesting conversation with the chief clerk who was a Christian. He said although a member of the Episcopal church he seldom could leave his duties to attend service, but said if we had this temperance work instituted he would be glad to attend. He told us that General Vincent, then in command, was a Christian gentleman, and directed us to his quarters. We called, found the general and his wife ready to enter into the plan for the W. C. T. U. to hold their meetings for the soldiers in a school room near, and remarked, This is the curse of the soldiers. As soon as they receive their pay they hurry to the saloons and spend it there.

The ladies were pleased to find this open door ready for them to enter. At one of the meetings in the city several soldiers after they had got out on the sidewalk sent in a request that they and their friends might be permitted to sign the temperance pledge. The minister of the Trinity M. E. church, when requested by the ladies of the W. C. T. U. made a plan that once a month in one of the churches special service should be held for the soldiers when the front seats should be given up to them, all others taking the back seats. This we deem a striking instance of how we may be led by the Spirit and the apparent result should encourage us in this fearful struggle in which we are engaged to remove the curse of the world. We trust these soldiers and all others will be remembered in our daily prayers.

Is not this a true picture of some good people who see no beauty in temperance work, "that they should desire it."

Their lofty souls have telescopic eyes,
Which see the faintest speck of distant pain,
While at their feet a world of agonies,
Unseen, unheard, unheeded, writhes in vain.

A CONTRIBUTION TO ESTHETIC TEMPERANCE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—This comes from one of our best workers in Maine: F. E. W.

PORTLAND, Maine, April 17, 1884.

My Dear Miss Willard,—I have an offering for the "National" not of gold or silver, though I hope it will prove of value; neither does it represent sacrifice, although it was born of suffering. Let me explain:

A year ago last February, I had the misfortune to break the bone of my knee, and for six weeks was obliged to lie on my back with my limb suspended and bound in splints from my hip to my ankle. You know something of my busy life, and can understand in some measure what this forced rest must have been to me. I tried to be patient, and never for a moment doubted but that the Father's hand was guiding my life.

One day I received from dear Mrs. Buell a little poem, entitled, "Called Aside." That was a new thought, that I had been suddenly checked in my busy life, made to stop, I was aware, but called aside by God, For what? I asked. In answer to this question which became a prayer, it came to me that I could still do something for our beloved temperance cause. I dictated letters, had my nurse read poem after poem, and as a result compiled what I have called a Temperance Souvenir. My thought back of it was this:

We have found it very difficult to reach the so-called higher social circles. I will prepare a book which shall contain the best tribute which art and song have given to the subject. It shall be ready for the Holidays. I will appeal to our one hundred thousand women to purchase or to persuade others to do so; to interest the book sellers in their own cities, towns and villages to keep it in stock; to advertise and write it up in the temperance papers, with the hope that it will go into families where our temperance literature has never been welcome.

I have had three illustrations painted by the artist Dora Wheeler, of New York, which are verses from Longfellow. I have called it a book, but it is in the form of the so-called Christmas cards. It contains a poem from Whittier, one from Alice Cary, Phœbe Cary, Lucy Larcom, and a page of quotations from Shakespeare, and one from Longfellow. Primarily it is to do missionary work, and secondly it is to bring money, and "lots of it," into our National treasury, as all of the profits will be devoted to our National work.

In spite of pain and weariness the hope of doing something helped to keep my heart strong during those first dreary weeks. I am not yet able to take the journey to Boston to consult with publishers, but through the kindness of friends I trust that either in New York or Ohio, the Temperance Souvenir will soon be in the market. Of course it remains in a great measure with "our women" as to whether or no it will bring money into our treasury, but if at Christmas time, Easter, and for birthday gifts they will all purchase one Souvenir my offering will be of value. Will you help me to bring this to the notice of the temperance women and men? I do not think like Col. Sellers that "there is millions in it," but there are certainly many thousands if those who are able will give this matter their sympathy and co-operation. I sincerely believe that this work and a Temperance Calendar, which I compiled later, was an answer to my prayer, "Called aside for what?" May it bring forth richly for God and home and native land.

Cordially yours, MRS. G. S. HUNT.

ANOTHER WORKER ABROAD.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I am sure that your readers will be interested to know that I am writing from the home of Mrs. Margaret E. Parker, president of the "Woman's International C. T. U." I feel myself fortunate in having made the acquaintance of this large hearted woman who certainly stands at the head of the temperance movement among the women in Great Britain. I am always glad to be introduced to the home life of one who has done and is still doing so much for humanity. This lovely place is truly a haven of rest to me and the warm sympathy which I find is just what my spirit needed. I am sitting at the bay window with a lovely view before me. In the distance is Halton Castle, memorable in English history in the time of Charles I, and the wanderings of the beautiful river Mersey adds to the loveliness of the scene, while all around the house are the cultured grounds with vineries and conservatory all bearing the impress of the taste and refinement of its gifted mistress; while indoors peace and harmony reign. I wish that men who speak of philanthropic women neglecting their homes could see the perfect arrangements here. There are five visitors besides myself staying in the house, and yet there is no strain, every one being made to feel truly at home and happy.

It is refreshing to see how much this family is thought of here. A public reception was tendered them on their arrival. On Mrs. Parker intimating that she would like a meeting for me, her wish was immediately responded to, and an excellent audience gathered. I gave my lecture, "Three Months in Palestine" (Mrs. Parker presiding) to a highly intellectual, select and appreciative company. I am pleased to see how much Mrs. Parker values anything American. She has an American base burner in the hall, an American sewing machine in the sitting room, and I am writing on an American, table and I meet American appliances on every hand. She has a very warm heart to our country and people. I feel richer for having added to my list another precious friend.

Tomorrow evening I am to give my third address on temperance in Manchester, this time at the Friends' Institute, the others being in the hall of the Y. M. C. A. at the conference of the B. W. T. A., of which I am a member. I shall then return to London, my home on this side of the Atlantic. I have just completed an extensive tour to the principal cities in England, giving temperance addresses, and holding gospel temperance missions. On the 1st of June I am to go for another mission, to New Castle-on-Tyne, which is to be held in a great hall, which seats 1,200 people. The annual meeting of the B. W. T. A. is to take place in London on the 15th. Mrs. Baker, who is ex-president, is one of the speakers. The association now numbers about two hundred branches, and sixty delegates are expected. The women of England in their temperance associations and work have become a power in the land. Their untiring zeal and efforts in framing their petition and sending it up to the house of commons with 140,000 signatures for the Sunday closing, although defeated in purpose, are bearing fruits which promise a harvest at no distant day. I have just completed a series of eleven meetings and conferences of the B. W. T. A., held in different places, near Manchester and Liverpool, which I have addressed, and at which Mrs. Margaret B. Lucas, president of the association, and sister of the Right Hon. John Bright, presided and addressed. That Mrs. Lucas can leave her delightful home in London, where I have often visited her, and give herself with so much devotion and self-denial to the cause is one of the rarest things among women to be met with in any land. My association with her in the temperance work is one of the memories which I shall ever retain of my life and tours in England. In the recent meetings in one place the mayor gave the use of his parlors in the court house for the drawing room meeting which was crowded with ladies from the higher families.

In a few months I expect to return to meet some engagements in Ohio, my native state, and to join the temperance workers in other parts of the states, and I shall come as the bearer of good news from the land where many warm hearts have welcomed me, and where I have been a guest in many a good home where the name of America is a sacred word.

MRS. SARAH F. WELLS, M. D., of Ohio.

A NEW YORK INCIDENT.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—It was advertised in the papers that the new temperance company D of the 12th regiment would publicly take the pledge yesterday afternoon at Cooper union. Of course I went to see them do it, and I don't know when I have been more deeply impressed.

Dr. Lambert, in a half hour address, explained the pro cesses of fermentation, the baleful nature of the alcohol thus produced, and its influence on the brain, stomach, health and happiness.

After which, Captain Kilmer, of Abraham Lincoln Post G. A. R., came forward and took the pledge of total abstinence. A noble example, which will, I hope, be followed by many of his comrades.

O, but when company D marched on to the platform, to the tune of "Onward, Christian Soldier," you should have heard the audience cheer. There are ninety men on the roll, and about seventy present. Now just imagine this picture: Seventy fine looking young men, tall and straight, drawn up in double file, each with a blue ribbon in his button hole. In front of them and facing the audience, their gallant young Captain Bernard and two trim lieutenants. At the left, the Rev. J. P. Newman, tall and dignified, hat in hand, and a world of sympathetic interest in his face. On the right, General Conway, of the regular army, and President Gibbs, of the Manhattan temperance society, and in the extreme front two little boys of eight and ten years of age, who had begged the privilege of taking the pledge with the soldiers. Add to this, Cooper union, fragrant with memories of dear, grand, old Peter Cooper, and an audience of two thousand people, and you have before you a scene which some day will be historic. It was a sight to make the angels in heaven rejoice.

President Gibbs administered the pledge to the young soldiers, as they stood there, officers and men together, ready to enter the lists against that fearful enemy, intemperance, with a harder fight before them than often comes in the bloodiest hand to hand contest on the battle field. Up rose seventy staunch right hands and seventy heads bowed reverent assent to their solemn vow. God give them grace and strength always to keep it.

Capt. Bernard and the two other officers (whose names I do not remember) were then introduced to the audience, and greeted with storms of applause, and when they would let him speak, the brave young captain told in a few words how the company came to be formed. Then Dr. Newman made a prayer, and afterwards gave the boys words of encouragement and good advice, and Gen. Conway told them how he had been in active service during the last war, and had passed through the vicissitudes of hospitals and prisons without the use of intoxicants; "and here I stand," said he, "a living witness to the incalculable benefits of total abstinence."

The young soldiers were in citizens' clothes; "they were not willing," the captain said, "to don their new uniform until they had pledged themselves not to disgrace it."

Company D is probably the first and only total abstinence company in this country. How glad I am that we have a department of work for soldiers and sailors. It is a hopeful field. May we not hope now to hear of whole regiments falling into line under the auspices of our W. C. T. U.

Oh ring out the news all over the land! Long live the brave company D of the 12th regiment of New York Total Abstainers. R. L. C.

SUCCESS IN THE PINERIES.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—As superintending missionary of the Lumbermen's Missionary Association, I wish, through your paper, to thank the local unions of the W. C. T. U. of Michigan, for the generous gift of fifty copies of THE UNION SIGNAL, and fifty copies of the Lever each week from ———— to April 4, 1884, for distribution among the lumber camps of northern Michigan.

I can say that the papers have been carefully distributed among the camps situated in the central part of the state.

The papers have been read by the men, and as far as can be observed, have done a large amount of good, as there has been less drinking among the woodsmen this spring. Who can tell how many sons of praying mothers, have been led, by reading these papers, to go home with their money, when heretofore they have wasted it in riotous living?

The unions need not fear that their money has been thrown away; but may feel assured that they have assisted in doing a work whose grand results eternity alone can reveal.

What joy one mother must have when her wayward son has returned home.

About 7,000 copies of papers and tracts have been distributed the past year in the lumber camps, and among settlers.

The following is a portion of the report of the superintendent of the L. M. A. for the past year. Only one missionary has been at work. One hundred and forty-eight visits made to camps, reaching 5,200 men, 222 meetings held, 350 families visited, and three Sunday schools organized.

Fifty persons have been led to publicly express a desire and determination to live Christian lives. Eleven persons have been baptized. The work is great and the laborers are few. C. W. BENNETT, Supt.

THOSE HOP BITTERS CARDS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Your recent article on hop bitters advertisements calls to my mind a little experience. The latter part of last year I found one of those lying cards in one of our religious papers. I had written an article against such advertising in that paper, but it failed to appear; so I thought I would enlighten the editor. The "card" was dated "Malden, Mass., Feb. 1, 1880," and signed "Mrs. E. D. Slack." I felt sure that no woman, unless it might be a beer-seller, had written such a card; so I wrote "Mrs. E. D. Slack" a letter asking about it. I put it in a return envelop. It was mailed Nov. 10, 1883, and came back as an "unclaimed" letter Nov. 20. I then wrote to the postmaster of Malden, and asked him if a lady of that name "had lived in Malden since January 1, 1880." His reply was: "Know of no such person." He further says: "There was one D. E. Slack who left rather suddenly some five years ago." These "bitters" are simply alcohol and water, with about one-third of one per cent. of hop-bitter. They contain eighteen per cent. (by volume) of alcohol. It is absurd to claim that they have any medicinal virtue. It is not strange, however, that men who make such stuff will lie about it; but it is strange that the publishers of temperance and religious journals will take such advertisements, and thus help these liquor sellers in disguise do their mean work.

WHO BIDS?

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I have already received one bid of $100 on the cup given by Miss Willard to the Jewelry and Souvenir Fund. We do not yet cry "Going, going at $100." We hear in the air $500, $1,000. With the bid comes the suggestion that southern ladies bid for Mrs. Johnson's cup and crusaders for Mrs. Thompson's.

The Souvenir collection is receiving additions constantly. A dear woman has just sent her "grandmother's spoon," more than a hundred years old, for some "wealthy relic hunter" to buy, that the proceeds may help drive the liquor traffic from the land before her own little boy shall be tempted. I have somewhat to say on the "million dollar" fund in a future communication. In the meantime am ready to receive bids on Miss Willard's cup, or any other article.

Yours always, ESTHER PUGH.

WORK AMONG COLORED PEOPLE OF THE NORTH.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Mrs. Frances E. W. Harper, 1006 Bainbridge street, Philadelphia, superintendent of Northern Colored Work, is probably the most gifted and cultured woman of her race in the United States. She has a fervid and eloquent tongue and desires no better portion than to work among "her very own." Mrs. Harper's daughter is a gifted young woman and recites with great acceptability in her mother's meetings. I warmly commend this noble woman to our constituency. Write to her, dear sisters, and see if she can come and help influence your colored population for the right. And when she comes, remember, as you have always done, so far as my experience goes, "The laborer is worthy of his hire." FRANCES E. WILLARD.

The Soul's Inquiries Answered.

CONDUCTED BY MRS. HANNAH W. SMITH,
Superintendent of Evangelistic Department.

Inquiries to be addressed to MRS. H. W. SMITH, 4653 Germantown Avenue, Philadelphia, Pa.

QUESTION.—I hear Christians telling about a wonderful experience which they call the baptism of the Spirit, and as I have had no such experience, I am troubled. Can you explain it?

ANSWER.—In every difficulty the first thing necessary is to get at the bottom facts of the case. Now what are the facts in this matter? Simply these, that the Holy Ghost has been given and is being given to every child of God. It would be impossible to be a child of God without it, for the new birth is itself a birth of the Spirit. Now the Holy Spirit is like the sunlight which forces its way into every place where there is the slightest opening to receive it. The sunlight has been shed forth upon the world, and the Holy Ghost, the promise of the Father, hath been shed forth upon the church. Every man born into the world shares the world's sunlight, and may have as much or as little of it as he pleases, and every man born into the church (I mean of course the invisible church of all believers) shares the church's gift of the Holy Ghost, and may have as little or as much as he pleases.

If I want sunlight in my house I do not need to ask God to give it to me as if it were to be a fresh thing shed down from the sky, but I need only to open all the doors and windows of my house to permit the entrance of the sunlight which has already been given; and if I want to be baptised with the sunshine I do not ask the Lord to baptise me, but I go out into the sunshine and am baptised. Similarly, if I want to be filled with the Spirit I need not ask for more of the Spirit to be given to me, but only that more of myself may be given to the Spirit. I am not looking for any fresh outpouring from God, but for a fresh incoming into me of that Spirit which has already been "shed forth" upon every believer.

The definite, conscious experience of which so many speak as the baptism of the Holy Ghost, is simply the moment when the soul either consciously or unconsciously surrenders itself fully to this divine incoming. The command is, "Be filled with the Spirit," and we obey this command by abandoning our whole selves to God, and opening every avenue of our being to His possession. Like sunlight, or like the wind, He enters and fills every spot that is opened to Him. The result of this when done suddenly is often a very emotional and overwhelming sense of His presence. But this sudden experience does not rise from the fact that anything new has been shed forth from God, but only that which has been already shed forth on the day of Pentecost, 1800 years ago, is now allowed to enter and take full possession.

All the scripture teaching on the subject of the Holy Spirit is in harmony with this view. Even to the carnal Corinthians the apostle declares: "Know ye not that ye are the temple of the Holy Ghost?" etc.

His operations may be hindered and the manifestations of His presence clouded; He may be thwarted and grieved, but nevertheless it is a simple fact, that the Spirit of God dwells in all believers.

What you need to do therefore is simply to abandon yourself to the Lord, body, soul and spirit for His full possession, and then believe that He does come in and taken possession of the temple thus abandoned to Him. Hold steadfastly here, regardless of all seemings, and the result is sure. Do not look for an emotional experience as the seal of the fact, but leaving all this with God, go steadily forward in the way of simple faith, and the fruits of the Spirit will soon manifest themselves in a blessed abundance.

THE names of two women were in the list of delegates to the Methodist general conference at Philadelphia; one from Kansas, and one from Little Rock. These ladies were alternates for lay delegates, and though they were not seen in the law-making body of the Methodist church, yet the fact of their election as alternates even, records the advance of sentiment as to woman's position in a church which still refuses to give authorization to the general acceptance of their "gifts, graces and usefulness."

MOTHER'S WING.

Some little birds lay in a warm, sunny nest
Before they had learned to hop round in the trees,
And fluttered, and fluttered, each dear little breast,
Singing: "Chick-a-dee-dees,
We are three, if you please."

The mother bird waited and watched, for she knew
They only could fly in a soft, gentle breeze,
And she wanted to show just how they should do,
Singing: "Chick-a-dee-dees,
This way if you please."

But the little birds ventured one beautiful day,
Found they could fly, with such pleasure and ease,
And together the three of them floated away
Singing: "Chick-a-dee-dees,
Good-by, if you please."

But very soon, wearied of motion so new,
Each thought, "How unwisely a little bird sees!"
And back to the nest in the sunny place flew,
Singing: "Chick-a-dee-dees,
Mother's wing, if you please."

And if little children, when filled with unrest,
Would stop to look up to the blossoming trees,
They might just recall three birds in a nest
Singing: "Chick-a-dee-dees,
Mother's wing, if you please!"

THEIR WORK OF ART.

JESSIE E. WRIGHT.

"Georgie Bishop do you believe that?" And Polly sat bolt upright, consternation and horror written in every line of her face.

Georgie shook her head solemnly. "It's awful, I know, but that gossipy Mrs. Tucker said so, and I guess she knows."

The two little girls sat facing each other, one on a flat stone, the other on a stump.

"You see," said Georgie, weighing every word, "you and I were afraid when he went to college that something would happen to him. You know there never was such a nice boy in this town. And now he has come back for vacation, and that old Mrs. Tucker says he was in trouble in college, went with dreadful boys, and got drunk, and everything; and now, Polly, do you believe it?"

Very grave faces they both wore, and poor Polly never winked, she was so much in earnest.

"I don't believe it! I don't; but O dear! O dear! what shall we do?"

One would have thought the responsibility of Tom's misdeeds lay entirely with our little friends; and they felt as though it did. Polly had heard of pledges, had a vague idea of what they were, and after much discussion they decided that the best thing to do was to offer Tom a pledge.

"We'll make it out and not tell anybody, said Georgie.

So they begged a sheet of foolscap, secreted some red and blue ink in the barn, and went to work on their pledge. Every word was changed several times, and they had some difference of opinion as to the form of it. At the top of the paper they printed in red ink, "This is a Pledge"—"So he'll know," said Polly. Then in blue was laboriously written and printed: "Dear Tom:—Please sign this so you will be temperance. Don't do it any more, though we know you didn't. 'Wine is a mocker, and strong drink is raging.' Georgie Bishop and Polly Pennington made this pledge."

Their Bible quotation was printed in red ink as being in some way more impressive. A blue ribbon bought at the store tied up their pledge, and they were all ready for a visit.

So it happened that one afternoon, not long after Tom came home for the vacation, while he was writing in his sanctum at the top of the house, two very small girls with very grave faces and in very clean frocks came knocking at his door.

"Why, halloo!" said Tom, smiling as he opened the door. "How do you do! Glad to see you! Here, do sit down in my two best chairs!" And he hurried around to make his little visitors comfortable. They looked so melancholy and so unlike the usual Georgie and Polly that he was surprised. What makes you two so like a funeral, anyway?" he said after a pause.

Georgia gave a gasp. "We heard you got drunk!"

Tom flushed and started. Polly was fairly pale and stammered out: "Oh! we don't believe it. O dear! Georgie, how could you? Tom, we know you didn't; but here is a pledge we made." A momentary look of triumph came over her face at the mention of it. "We do feel awful; but, Tom, don't look so!" Then Georgie explained, and Polly explained some more, and Tom explained, till Tom, with a small girl on each knee, was presented with a pledge.

He never smiled at the blue and red ink. "You see," he said earnestly, "most of what Mrs. Tucker said wasn't true. I never did get drunk; but I am much obliged for this pledge. I'll sign it, and I tell you up and down I'll keep it, and I'm much obliged to you for it."

Georgie and Polly were quite satisfied. Tom was positively nicer than ever they were sure and as for their pledge, they modestly considered that as something beyond reproach.—Temperance Banner.

THE STUBB'S LETTERS.—NO. I.

FROM AUNT JANE.

THORNBUSH, Ill.

To My Nephew, Peter Stubbs:—Dear Peter:—Now that you've gone to the wicked city to 'tend school, I do hope you will not forget your good country raisin'. Some of them mis'rable city lads may try to teach you bad ways. But my dear boy jest as long as your name's Peter Stubbs give 'em all the go-by. If any of 'em should dare to offer you a cigar or a chew of tobacco, let 'em know you come of a respectable family, and the Stubbs's never smoke. Tell 'em your two grandfathers was sensible Christian men, and didn't make chimney-pots of themselves, nor chew anything that wasn't good enough to swallow. Tell 'em your father is the same kind of a sensible Christian man, and he has begun to train you after that pattern.

Be polite to 'em, Peter, don't hurt their feelin's; like as not they haven't had half the chance you have.

Treat 'em well, but never as long as you live, never give up to 'em in any of their bad ways, no more'n if they was reg'lar ruffians, a beggin' you to drink and swear.

I expect to write often, so I'll close now and hope soon to hear from you.

Your true and affectionate friend,

Aunt Jane.

"BE YOU A LADY?"

As a young lady walked hurriedly down State street on a bleak November day, her attention was attracted to a deformed boy coming towards her carrying several bundles. He was thinly clad, twisted his limbs most strangely as he walked, and looked before him with a vacant stare. Just before the cripple reached the brisk pedestrian he stumbled, thus dropping one bundle, which broke and emptied a string of sausages on the sidewalk.

The richly-dressed ladies (?) near by held back their silken skirts and whispered quite audibly, "How horrid!" while several who passed by, amused by the boy's looks and blank dismay, gave vent to their feelings in a half-suppressed laugh, and then went on without taking any further interest.

All this increased the boy's embarrassment. He stopped to pick up the sausages only to let fall another parcel, when in despair he stood and looked at his lost spoils. In an instant the bright-faced stranger stepped to the boy's side, and in a tone of thorough kindness said:

"Let me hold those other bundles while you pick up what you have lost."

In dumb astonishment the cripple handed all he held to the young Samaritan, and devoted himself to securing his cherished sausages. When these were again strongly tied in the coarse, torn wrapper, her skilful hands replaced the parcels on his scrawny arms, as she bestowed on him a smile of encouragement, and said:

"I hope you haven't far to go."

The poor fellow seemed scarcely to hear the girl's pleasant words; but looking at her with the same vacant stare, he said:

"Be you a lady?"

"I hope so; I try to be," was the surprised response.

"I was kind of hoping you wasn't."

"Why?" asked the listener, with her curiosity quite aroused.

"'Cause I've seen such as called themselves ladies, but they never spoke kind and pleasant to me, 'cepting to grand uns. I guess there's two kinds—them as thinks they's ladies and isn't and them as what tries to be and is."

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S TALK.

Dear Children of the Prevention Army:—I told you two or three weeks ago of the little soldier who forgot for a little minute and broke his pledge not to swear. I am sure you all felt sorry for him, and thought he ought to be forgiven. Now, I wonder what you will think of a little five year old boy who wants very, very much to become a Band of Hope boy, but somehow he cannot hardly help saying bad words. His mamma does not know how he learned all the bad words he says, and she has washed out his mouth with soap and water, and done everything she could think of to break him of this bad habit, but just as soon as he gets angry up the bad words come right into his mouth, and hop out almost before he knows it. The superintendent of the Band of Hope told him the other day that the only way she could think of to keep them back was this, just as soon as he felt them coming he must clap his hand right over his mouth and "chuck them down."

Just after she had told him this, he was out playing with some little boys, and she saw him all at once get red in the face, and then he clapped his hand tight over his lips and the bad words did not get out. The last I knew he had kept them chucked down for a whole week. I am sure he will be one of our bravest, truest little soldies yet, be all the stronger because he has to fight so hard.

If you can tell him anything from your own experience that will help him in the struggle, I hope you will write it out and send it to your.

Ever faithful,

Captain Deborah.

THOUGHTS ON BABY'S HAND.

MRS. E. A. RICKARDS.

Will it ever grow hard with toiling?
Will it ever be stained with crime?
Will it wield the pen of the gifted,
And trace out its soul-song in rhyme?

Will it soften the pillow of sickness,
And smooth out the wrinkles of care?
Will it guide the steps of the penitent,
And point to the altar of prayer?

Will these wee, waxen fingers,
Which now lie quiet in mine,
Be rough and harsh when years have flown,
Or be white and wear jewels that shine?

Dear, dear little hand full of dimples,
My wish is that when childhood has flown,
Thy clasp may be true, and each that meets yours
May be as sincere as thine own.

Receiving and giving and blessing,
Pressed only in friendship and love,
And, when it no longer has earth-work to do,
Join hands with the angels above.

BREAD CAST UPON THE WATER RETURNING.

MARY A. MCCLEES.

The following composition upon "Bread" was written by one of our kitchen garden maids, who having been duly instructed in all the other household arts has been promoted from the primary to the cooking class.

A few weeks ago Miss Parsons, our efficient and faithful superintendent, without whose aid and instruction the Yonkers' Kitchen Garden would not be the "best conducted within our border," gave to the children a brief lecture upon the importance and results of good bread, and after giving a practical lesson, she requested them to write compositions on the subject, offering a prize for the best. This one was selected among a number as deserving the reward, and the little girl received a temperance receipt book containing the receipts of those things she had learned to make at school, biscuits, stews, plain cake, etc.

Perhaps some one may express surprise that practical cooking should be included in a kitchen garden and I would explain that it is not a part of the system. But the training of the kitchen garden is intended to lead the children to the door of the cooking school, and if girls remain long enough for such teaching they certainly should enter and be taught how to cook. The little maid who wrote this composition had two years of regular kitchen garden training, and shows the result of it in the stress she lays upon cleanliness, which always has to be the first lesson.

Two years ago she would scarcely have been interested had we asked her to join a bread-making class, but the charm and variety of the kitchen garden occupation were a delight to her, and now that she is older, she appreciates the need of learning more.

She is the daughter of a saloon keeper, and the father is in sympathy with our work, expressing a desire for his girl to attend the school regularly though he knows they are pledged not to use liquors, even in cooking; and probably sees the library books and little text cards which they carry home. So are we trying in the kitchen gardens to help little girls to lead pure, industrious lives.

BREAD.

"Our daily bread is so common a thing that we accept it with almost as little inquiry as thankfulness. Some people indeed have but little time to consider how important it is that bread is the staff of life. Every person, rich or poor, should learn the use of bread making, for we are never too old to learn how. When persons are learning to bake, bread is the first thing they should learn. Some people think they spend so much time in making bread; well, even if so, it makes you much stronger and healthier and you will like it much better than bakers' bread.

"Nothing looks neater and cleaner than to see a person baking bread or cooking, with a clean white apron, the hair all fixed nice and smooth, and the hands nice and clean; of course this is always required. Some people mix their bread in their dish pans; of course sponge you would not like to do that way, but if it is very clean, why, there is no difference. You know there is a difference in the taste of bread; if it is made by a clean person you can taste the difference very much.

"There are two kinds of flour. The people that use the unbolted flour are mostly Indians, but we use the bolted flour. Here is a receipt for plain bread: Take 2 quarts of flour, after sifted, mix with one pint of warm water. Dissolve one-half compressed yeast cake, add one-half tablespoonful lard, sugar, and salt, and mix together. If you mix your bread in the afternoon let it rise until nine o'clock and then give it a very light moulding. After you have moulded it, put it into a larger pan to let it rise over night, then in the morning it must have one more moulding, and is then ready to bake. Remember you should never mould the bread with your fingers but with the palms of your hands."

THE GIRLS OF MARYLAND.

MRS. GEORGIA HULSE MCLEOD.

I wish I could transfer to canvas the picture which, among many, my boy described in the letters that came to me from over the sea during his journeying. His last battle is fought, his last journey ended, and over eternity's sea he went home years ago, but the old letters hold many a fair picture for me.

The one that I am thinking of just now, describes the "March of Life" and had I the artist's power it should hang on the walls of every free kindegarten in our land. Among the many pilgrims crowding life's ways, were prominent three figures, an old man, bent and feeble, who had fallen by the roadside, the helping hand of a young girl stretched out to him, while, clasped by the other arm, a little child nestled. The faces of the old man, scarred and furrowed, the young girl's pure and saintly in its compassion, the little child's bright and happy as the sunlight, are to me—as thought pictures them—sermons.

So the girls of Maryland, as in other states, are the golden links that bring helpfully together the feebleness of age, the helplessness of childhood. They are active in beautiful ministrations at our headquarters where the free kindergarten is presided over by Mrs. Welsh, a lovely Christian lady from Savannah.

Last night at the Academy of Music, a delightful literary and musical entertainment, (to raise funds for the kindergarten), attracted a large and enthusiastic audience. The Johns Hopkins Glee Club was the musical attraction, and bright gifted Jessie Couthoui, of Chicago, gave readings. A beautiful girl, young, and with uncommon elocutionary power, which the W. C. T. U. will do well to capture for the cause.

Chicago of sweet memories has added to our store this of the young girl who stood last night, in silk attire, and fresh young beauty, reading with blended song:

Rock of Ages, cleft for me. Blessed be Illinois, that has given to us, the Willards, a Carse, a Hood, a Kimball, and a host of workers for the cause we love.

A WORD WITH OUR GIRLS.

ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS.

"Girls, first make up your minds that you will be something! All the rest will follow. What you shall be comes more easily and clearly in due time.

"A girl of thirteen cannot decide, with any discretion or assurance, whether she will be a sculptor or a washerwoman, a farmer or a poet; but she can decide distinctly whether it is her wish or her duty, a ter leaving school or college, th remain dependent upon her parents or to fit herself for a self-providing life.

"The education by which you mean to get your bread and butter, your gloves and bonnets, is a very different affair from that which you take upon yourself as an ornament and an interval in life. The chemical experiment which you may some day have to explain to pupils of your own is quite another thing from the lesson that you may never think of again. The practice in bookkeeping, which may some day regulate your dealings with live, flesh-and-blood customers, becomes as interesting as a new story. The dull old rules for inflection and enunciation fairly turn into poetry, if you hope to find yourself a great public reader some coming day. And the very sawdust of the French or Latin grammar becomes ashes of roses to the stout little fancy that dreams of brave work and big salary, in some foreign department at Washington, or tutoring girls or boys for college.

All over the terrible ocean, among the lawless sailors, the men with wives and children to work for are those who lead the gentlest and cleanest lives. So, on the great ocean of school-life, the girls with aims to study for are those whose labor is the richest and ripest. Ah! you will never realize till you have tried it what an immense power over the life is the power of possessing distinct aims. The voice, the dress, the look, the very motions of a person define and alter when he or she begins to live for a reason.

I fancy that I can select in a crowded street the busy, blessed women who support themselves. They carry themselves with an air of conscious self-respect and self content which a shabby alpaca cannot hide, nor a Bonnet silk enhance, nor even sickness or exhaustion quite drag out."

At a meeting of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society in Philadelphia, a girl wearing the richly embroidered sack and skirt and silk slippers of ladies of rank in China, attracted much attention. This was Hu King Eng, who has just arrived in this country from China in company with Rev. Dr. Whitney, a missionary stationed at Foochow. She is a daughter of Hu Young Mi, a convert, who occupies the position of presiding elder in the Foochow conference, and is held in high esteem in China.

Her mother, a lady of high rank, assists her father in his missionary labor. Her grandfather, Hu King Hi, who died recently, was a mandarin of rank, and enjoyed the distinction of being the second convert to the Methodist Episcopal church in China. The girl is eighteen years of age, and is said to be unusually bright and intelligent. She has assisted her father in his missionary labors, and has rendered valuable aid at the hospital connected with the mission at Foochow, which is in charge of several ladies from this country.

Her purpose in coming here is to obtain a medical education, which will enable her to take charge of the hospital on her return to her native country. With this object in view, she will enter the girls' department of the Ohio Wesleyan University, at Delaware, O., in which the co-educational system is practiced, and then take a regular course in the Women's Medical College in Philadelphia.

Only a word for the Master,
Lovingly and quietly said;
Only a word,
Yet the Master heard,
And some fainting hearts were fed.

Only an hour with the children,
Pleasantly, cheerfully given;
Yet seed was sown
In that hour alone,
Which would bring forth fruit from heaven.

The Sunday School Lesson.

June 15] Third Quarter, No. IX. [1884.

TOPIC: BLESSEDNESS OF BELIEVERS.

LESSON TEXT.—Romans 8: 28-39.

GOLDEN TEXT.—We know that all things work together for good to them that love God. Romans 8:28.

TIME AND PLACE.—Same as in lesson X.

I. Paul and John have a very positive way of saying "we know." It is not "we hope," "we trust we hope," "we think," but always the declaration is one of experience. The psalmist said "Taste and see." The apostles say "We have tasted and we know."

2. If Paul had said some "things work together for good," all of us who love God would have no difficulty in taking his statement literally. But "all things" is very inclusive. It takes in many sorrows, many sins. It covers the family disgrace, the seeming ruin of character, the deflection from righteousness of one trained to serve God, the delayed conversion of some long prayed for son. It is hard even for Christians to believe this always, that out from under these heavy griefs will come the sweet flowers of God's mercy. But Paul says so, and he had large experience and heavy sorrows. Moreover and beyond all, he had the Divine warrant for saying so. Be it ours to believe it.

3. Who dares to be discouraged if God be for us? This is the ringing challenge of apostolic faith. With the centuries of demonstration back of us, we have even more reason than Paul to take up the strain and "tell it out with a shout that the Lord is King." He is our God, and He will be our guide even unto death. To be discouraged when God is on our side, or better said, we are on His, is to make Him a poor, weak leader, a king without the power of the throne, a God without omnipotence. Let us be careful how we yield to the tempter in this doubt of God.

4. Another "all things" is one of the blessed teachings of this lesson. We are often prone to limit the character and extent of God's gifts. We say, He will surely give us spiritual blessings, but we are not at all sure in our faith concerning temporal blessings.

Paul reasoned from the greater to the less. He that spared not His own Son, but freely gave him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us "all things"? Of this we may be as sure as of our own salvation that He will withhold no good thing!

5. Paul's list of the temptations liable to separate the believer from Christ is as extensive today as then. Tribulation (pressure from without); Distress (that narrowness of circumstance wherein one knows not how or where to turn); Persecution—Famine (temporal and spiritual); Nakedness (poverty); Peril (danger to life which drives some to do evil that good may come) or Sword. Seven enemies made almost human by the pronoun "who" are ranged against the Christian, but in all these things "we are more than conquerors." The potencies of earth and hell, and all the spaces of the universe are declared unable to wrest our souls from Him who has died for them. Paul was "persuaded" of this. Are you?

THE WOMEN'S MEMORIAL FOR NATIONAL PROHIBITION AT THE GREENBACK CONVENTION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

After spending the afternoon at our blessed "all day prayer meeting," at Chicago, for the national conventions, we took the night train for Indianapolis, duly arriving at the genial home of Mrs. Charles Kregelo, and going, by ten o'clock, to the greenback convention.

Mrs. Wallace had secured tickets for our party to an eligible proscenium box and there we remained the entire day, arranging for the presentation and enjoying the same.

Mrs. Buell had forwarded the memorial signed by the five general officers of each state and territory. Anna Gordon decorated it handsomely with white ribbons and it was read in full, listened to with interest and cordially applauded by the convention.

But this did not occur until afternoon. Meanwhile we took notes of this most interesting gathering up of men dedicated to ideas of reform. They have been much misrepresented. As a class, they are in the thoughtful years of life's meridian or else beyond it. Very few are young. They have friendly, honest faces and are largely farmers or their representatives, the average class who, whether they offered it or not, have realized the prayer, "Give me neither poverty nor riches."

They are not fools or fanatics, as a partisan press so often intimates; but thoughtful, earnest men, not to be trifled with nor hissed into silence. They are friendly to our cause and appreciative toward the work and potentiality of American womanhood.

One gray-haired man, in the midst of the din that characterized much of the session, looked deprecatingly toward the platform and said: "Let some of the ladies talk to us and they can make us behave." That remark condensed a whole "body of divinity" upon the vexed question of "woman's rights." At the opening exercises when an earnest prayer was offered, the "Amens" that rang through the house recalled a Methodist conference, and I believe that, badly as these brethren subsequently behaved, they did better than the average politician knows how to do.

How could it be otherwise when among the five hundred delegates were at least a dozen ladies, most of whom occupied the platform and were—that goes without the saying—models of deportment.

Tacitus tells us the northern armies that finally subdued the haughty Romans were remarkable for the importance they attached to the opinion of their women. History repeats itself, and perhaps the greenbackers are, for this same cause, ere long to be (with the prohibitionists, their kinsmen), conquerers of the republicans, the Romans of our epoch!

At all events the best speeches made at this convention were from the lips of women, and the largest contribution of ideas, in proportion to their numbers came from the craniums covered up by bonnets. Among all their speakers, Mrs. Augusta Cooper Bristol, of Vineland, N. J., has the most philosophic mind, and Mrs. Mary Haggart is a woman of senatorial presence and power. The turbulent convention, at times uproarious as the Paris Bourse or New York Gold Room, became instantly quiet when a lady was brought forward to speak. Talk of Orpheus in Hades! Woman in politics is the only combination adequate to prove that "music hath charms to soothe the savage breast." I do not refer alone to the concord of sweet sounds as expressed in her gentle tones, but to the rhythm of a balanced life, free from excesses, pure from habits of deterioration. As I saw those men upon their feet, standing in chairs, waving hats, screaming "Mr. Chairman," in a chorus as inconsequent as any springtime swamp ever illustrated, I thought with heartfelt pleasure of the National W. C. T. U. conventions and was once more proud to be a woman, while as I watched the perfectly impotent efforts of the chairman to control the momentary mob, I discovered my error in supposing that here we should gain new light on parliamentary usage! "Has the sceptre indeed departed from Judah?" I whispered to dear Deborah Wallace, beside whom I was seated. "From its sons yes, but from its daughters no," exclaimed May Wright Sewell, on hearing the words.

As I noted the amount of wild gesticulation that seemed a requisite of utterance in the average (masculine) delegate I thought how natural this was, after all. Man had to go forth and subdue the earth; react upon nature; be ever on the alert against enemies. He "wreaked himself upon expression;" it was his role, his God-appointed work. Meanwhile, in restraint, subjection, sorrow, woman developed the traits of self-repression, the power to "suffer and make no sign," the reserve force, the "stored up energy" of character which should just suit a regime when "after that which is natural should come that which is spiritual."

So what seems needed now is so to correlate the powers of each half of humanity as to secure the equilibrium never to be reached and maintained until we have "Two heads in counsel," as well as "Two beside the hearth." I wish to say that to this sharp distinction noticed between conventions of men and women, salient exceptions were not wanting. Indeed it is my observation that in character and manner the strongest and best developed among men and women are marvellously alike (the loftiest illustration conceivable of this, being the womanly and manly elements so mingled in the human nature of our Lord.)

The most perfect gentleman in the convention was Mr. George O. Jones, of New York, a fine looking man of noble dignity and genial presence, gray-haired, staunch, and perfectly self-poised. Amid the jeers, taunts and hisses of the great majority intent upon Ben Butler's nomination, this gentleman held his own like a great oak in a storm. Suave, steadfast, imperturbable, with strong, graceful gesture toward the platform and in perfectly modulated tones he called out, "Mr. Chairman," a score of times in quick succession, his voice sounding sweet and vibrant as a bugle through the howling of his angry comrades. There was something unique, an element of "the moral sublime" in this gentleman's bearing throughout the day. We women admired him so greatly that we thought he deserved to be an honorary member of the W. C. T. U. and would have sent him a white ribbon but for the fear that he would not rightly appreciate that distinction.

Then there was Gen. James B. Weaver, who seems to "stand four square to every wind that blows," though our Iowa sisters think differently, and good Col. Jesse

Harper, who nominated Abraham Lincoln for president in the old "Chicago Wigwam," and Dr. Gilbert Delamater, whom we chose to represent our National W. C. T. U., and to present the following non-partisan memorial with its signatures from all the states, beginning with Alabama and ending with Wyoming territory:

To the National Convention of the Greenback party.—We, members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the states herein represented by the signatures of our officers, believe that, while the poison habits of the nation can be largely restrained by an appeal to the intellect through argument, to the heart through sympathy, and to the conscience through the motives of religion, the traffic in those poisons will be best controlled by prohibitory law.

We believe the teachings of science, experience and the Golden Rule combine to testify against the traffic in alcoholic liquors as a drink, and that the homes of America, which are the citadels of patriotism, purity and happiness, have no enemy so relentless as the American saloon.

Therefore, as citizens of the United States, irrespective of sect or section, but having deeply at heart the protection of our homes, we do hereby respectfully and earnestly petition you to advocate and to adopt such measures as are requisite, to the end that prohibition of the importation, exportation, manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages may become an integral part of the National constitution.

And that your party candidate shall be by character and public pledge, committed to a national prohibitory constitutional amendment.

——— ———, President.
——— ———, Cor. Secretary.
——— ———, Rec. Secretary.
——— ———, Treasurer.

Rev. Dr. Delamater said, in substance, that he considered it the greatest honor of his life that he should have been chosen to present the memorial of the National W. C. T. U., the voice of the American home, and earnestly called upon his greenback brethren to stand by the inspirations and to help forward the aims of those who today come to us with a plea that represents every state and territory in the nation, the north and south standing side by side in defence of home and native land.

Unfortunately the state convention of Indiana W. C. T. U. was the same days as this political convention, so the expected delegation could not be present and Mrs. Woodbridge was not able to come; so those of us who were there, though kindly invited to speak, sat quietly by, content to leave our memorial in the hands of one so much esteemed and capable as ex-congressman Delamater. And so the first petition ever presented to a presidential convention was handed in and we went our way as quietly as we had come.

Next morning's paper gave us the platform of the party, which is one of the best I ever read. One plank reads thus:

For the purpose of testing the sense of the people on these subjects we are in favor of submitting to a vote of the people an amendment to the constitution in favor of suffrage regardless of sex, and also on the subject of the liquor traffic.

To this our W. C. T. U. will say, "Small favors thankfully received, larger ones in proportion."

En route in Indiana, May 30, 1884.

THE General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, which has deliberated at Philadelphia throughout the month of May, made a good record on the temperance question. The adoption of the report of its special committee on temperance commits this vast body of ministers, and presumably the church which they represent, to total abstinence, prohibition, severance of political party ties wherever these parties oppose or impede the enactment and enforcement of prohibitory law, to a temperance department in every church paper, to compulsory temperance education in the public schools, and to quarterly temperance lessons in the Sunday school.

The general assembly of the Presbyterian church, while not taking such advanced position in all regards, nevertheless has its standing committee on temperance which by systematic inspection and investigation of the interests of temperance in every presbytery, has brought to the chief council of the church a large mass of information which is sure to work all the desired change in church sentiment. The assembly recommends the enforcement of existing license and prohibitory laws through the agencies of law and order societies; the teaching in the public schools of the laws of physiology and hygiene, and the spread of such intelligence as will cause men and women to abstain from the use of alcohol as from any other active poison.

"Like a mighty army moves the church of God,
Brethren, we are treading where the saints have trod.
Gates of hell can never 'gainst that church prevail,
We have Christ's own promise, and that cannot fail."

THE Massachusetts W. C. T. U. is indeed bereaved. In the death of Mrs. L. B. Barrett, its corresponding secretary, which occurred May 24, a loss has been met which time, with all its power to heal, can scarcely lighten. Mrs. Barrett was one of the pioneers. She was active in the first beginnings of woman's gospel temperance work. She was utterly devoted and gave her life for this cause. No woman in Massachusetts had our work there so completely at her tongue's and fingers' ends. She was Mrs. Livermore's loyal and efficient lieutenant in the Bay State Army, her schoolmate in childhood, and beautiful was the love between them.

Miss Willard says of her: "As long as our work is remembered at all in Massachusetts, so long will the name of Mrs. L. B. Barrett be held in grateful and affectionate remembrance."

A GERMAN physician recently suggested to Mrs. Nichols, our superintendent of county fair work, that hot water stands would be a good temperance work, since men pay the same for a cup of hot water in a saloon, as they do for a drink of liquor. Enlarging upon this idea, Mrs. Nichols suggests, that a cup of hot water with the addition of sugar and good milk would be a welcome supplement to the scanty breakfast of many a poor child on its way to school. This same German physician complains that the motto, "For God and Home and Native Land," shuts out all foreign born citizens, causing them to feel like aliens. He would like the motto to read, "For God and Home and Country."

I hear it suggested that Friday, June 13, be a day of prayer throughout the W. C. T. U. for the success of our cause in the Triennial Sunday school convention at Louisville; I suppose because that is the day of its presentation.

It seems to me a little queer that we have to beseech heaven for an entrance to the hearts of these good men—it looks as if they were not friendly—which cannot be, I am sure.

Mrs. Barrett's funeral was held in Rev. Mr. Gifford's church, (Boston), of which she was a member. The W. C. T. U. of the city and state, filled the centre of the church. Mrs. Livermore gave the address, which was touching indeed, and this strong woman was once or twice overcome by her personal grief. It was Mrs. Barret's wish that her life long friend should speak the words of sympathy at her funeral, "Because," as she said, "you love me."

It is quite refreshing to read in the California exchanges that the numerical strength of the prohibition party in the state is fifty per cent greater than before the advent and work of Mrs. Foster. Some of the good people over there were possessed of the amusing fear that she was sent to the Pacific coast in the interest of the republican party. The margin of the political almanac reads, "About now look out for slander."

The women of Muncie hold a court house meeting for the children on Sabbath afternoon and it is the favorite gathering of the people. Other county seats might fall into line, for the court house is every body's rendezvous and has advantages over all other places for a meeting of this kind. As Charles Terry Collins, the gifted Cleveland pastor said, "We must not keep Christianity bottled up in the church, but, like our Master, carry it out into the haunts of the people."

Just in time to tell the summer total abstinence visitors to Saratoga, I learn that the Irving House has yielded to the temperance pressure and given up its bar. Its proprietor, Mr. Burroughs, says, "I will never sell a drop of liquor again."

I think it will please Mrs. McClees to know how kindly the English sailors are taking to total abstinence. A reliable English paper says that in Bristol Harbor 1,526 seamen signed the total abstinence pledge last year; on the Mersey, 950; on the Tyne, 880; in Swansea Docks, 674; in Cardiff Docks, 554; in Whitby Harbor, 400; in Newport Docks, Monmouth, 259; in Portsmouth Harbor, 171; in Sunderland Harbor, 170; in North Shields, 150; in Teignmouth and the Exe, 108; in Poole Harbor, 107; in Dover Harbor, 100; in Plymouth Sound, 457; in Cork Harbor, 434; in Portland Roads, 260; in Penarth Roads, 185; in Falmouth Roads, 167; in the Downs, 126; in Belfast Lough, 70.

There is a ring of good cheer in these words from Moncure D. Conway, of London, on his return from a trip round the world. Surely our W. C. T. U. workers stand on the loftiest vantage ground this planet can afford:

Experience has convinced me that any one with brains, ideas and ability for effective work, can do more by using the talent in the United States than anywhere else. It is impossible for any person who knows Americans and America to be contented with life anywhere outside of the United States. The majority of Englishmen who have visited the United States and have become really acquainted with the true character of the country, look upon it with longing eyes as the earthly promised land. I have returned from my recent trip around the world with such new visions concerning America that I find myself discontented and unable to resist the desire to return and remain there. ON DUTY.

FLORIDA.

Jacksonville.—Six years ago a little band of praying Christian women, perhaps not more than half a score, met in this city and organized under the more immediate leadership of Mrs. Lyons, a branch of the W. C. T. U. Under many discouragements, and with but little outside help or recognition, they prayed on and labored on, and have quietly grown in strength until, adjudged by their works, they must now be recognized as a power in the community. They have recently become an incorporated body have purchased and dedicated a home of their own.

The first meeting in the new quarters was dedicatory and congratulatory in its nature, and was large and especially enthusiastic.

Mrs. Governor Reed offered a resolution embodying a vote of thanks to Mrs. Solon Robinson, whose generous liberality in making the first cash payment of $720, (of which $600 is her own personal donation), had enabled them to make the purchase of their new quarters; also, thanks to Mrs. Griffin, Mrs. Goodhue, and others whose earnest labors and valuable time have been so freely given, and to the noble men of the community who have contributed from time to time to their aid. The resolution was passed unanimously and with emphasis.

The room occupied is over the old banking room and is roomy, airy and light. Over the rostrum was the legend, in large letters, in oil painting, "Headquarters of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union." This was donated by Mrs. Griffin. Beneath it was a framed motto, "In God we trust." Under this was a bracket, on which stood a vase of flowers, the vase, the gift of Mrs. Robinson, bearing the letters "W. C. T. U."

On the rostrum was a handsome walnut table, presented by Mr. C. O. Livingston. Of the chairs, one dozen were the gift of Messrs. Farwell & Page.

The ladies have received within the past few days donations to the amount of $100, for furnishing the hall and for the purchase of an organ.

The Band of Hope will meet hereafter at four o'clock on Sunday afternoons. A class of youths or larger boys will be organized and instructed in parliamentary usages and forms by Mr. Le Borveau. The ladies' regular meetings on Thursday afternoons will hereafter be held here.

The ladies feel that now they may work without let or hindrance, and hope before long to have the rooms open a part of every day. There is a nice room for the secretary with a desk and chair contributed by the secretary's husband. A Member.

Brooklyn and Riverside.—On the evening of Jan 10, 1884, a merry party of young folks of Brooklyn and Riverside, suburbs of Jacksonville, were gathered by special invitation at the residence of one of Florida's most earnest temperance workers, to attend what was supposed to be only a social party.

But when the guests had all arrived, they were greatly surprised by the hostess asking her son-in-law, another worthy temperance worker, to be kind enough to call the company to order and state the object of this meeting. He did so, and stated that the design of the hostess was to organize a neigborhood society, which should have for its object, the promotion of temperance, sociability and mutual improvement.

A chairman and secretary pro tem, were appointed, and the business of preparing a foundation upon which to work was vigorously begun. A committee on organization was appointed, also a committee to prepare an entertainment for the next meeting, of a kind calculated to induce others to attend.

The following week found a much larger company assembled in Mrs. Griffin's hospitable parlors.

The first thing of importance in the constitution was the name of the society, which was chosen to be the Social Temperance Union of Brooklyn and Riverside.

It was decided that persons fourteen years old and upwards, upon recommendation by the executive committee, should become active members by signing the pledge, constitution and bylaws, and that all who chose to attend should be considered associate members. However, only active members would be allowed to vote and hold office.

The officers were to consist of president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer and librarian, elections to be held quarterly. During this meeting twenty-two active and six associate members signed the roll.

Since then this little society has flourished and grown, until now its members number forty-nine, forty-two of whom are active. Its meetings which are largely attended by the best society in the suburbs in which it was originated, are called to order and opened by singing, usually some temperance hymn; some time is then occupied with the business of the society, admitting new members, etc. etc.; then comes a temperance talk of about fifteen minutes by some one connected with the society or otherwise; the reading of extracts follows and questions from a box which always stands on the table and to which all contribute; the business meeting is then adjourned and the rest of the evening until 10 o'clock is occupied with readings, recitations, music, pantomimes, charades, sociability, etc. Its funds are raised entirely by voluntary contributions, and it has, and always has had a surplus over all liabilities in the treasury.

It has been a great benefit to its locality, and the slight fears of any inhospitable reception, which at first existed, have long been dispelled; the good folks of Brooklyn and Riverside throwing open their houses to the society with cordial whole-heartedness. The latent talent of the young people of these suburbs which the society has developed, is something gratifying, and the edifying influence of the organization is readily perceptible.

Active, aggressive temperance work has now begun. The Union Signal is a regular visitor to the society and the distribution of temperance literature has now come to be a feature of the work.

Great good is expected to follow the earnest efforts of this society, which had its origin in the thoughtful mind of a single consecrated Christian worker. Where is there work for a like organization?

Peyton Wyeth, Sec.

REPORT OF STATE CONVENTION.

The state W. C. T. U. met in convention at Forrest City, May 14, this being the sixth annual meeting. The services were well attended, though but few local unions were represented. The president's able address gave a graphic picture of the struggle and discouragements with which the work at Little Rock was prosecuted.

The noble and untiring efforts which the ladies there put forth are worthy a more successful issue. After many days of weary canvass for signatures, and almost reaching the majority, to see their work defeated and the liquor dealers triumphant, is most disheartening. Our president came to the convention with the conviction that only with the ballot could the women hope to obtain victory. Work under the three mile law, which gives woman the vote by signature, and with which she has so crippled the liquor traffic that there is clamor for its repeal, forced her to this conviction. This opinion was echoed by many who have borne the burden and heat of the day; but there were timid ones who feared to jeopardize the work, and alienate excellent Christian women who have not been educated to this step, by taking any action on the question. After much discussion and earnest prayer the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That we appreciate the sentiment of the Liquor Dealers' Association, that "the ballot in the hand of woman will be the death blow to the liquor traffic," and we will pray and labor for this end, hoping that the time may soon come when our legislature will give us the right to protect our homes against this terrible foe.

Some unions have, by persistent effort, secured the benefits of the three mile law. In a majority of counties the law is inoperative, because of the indifference or timidity of the people. In other counties where the petition has received a majority of signatures, the judge, by arbitrary decision, has deprived us of its benefits.

Our president has given us for a motto, "Agitate and Educate," and we mean to fight it out on this line.

While this burning question is shedding light upon many towns in the northern counties, the greater part of the state south of Little Rock sits in darkness, and the convention decided to employ an organizer to form unions in every town or county where practicable.

Great disappointment was felt that we did not have the pleasure of meeting and hearing from Mary Allen West and Mrs. Willard, but the time was well filled by Mrs. Cornelius' graceful and eloquent address; by a stirring appeal upon the theme "Am I my brother's keeper?" from Mrs. Chase; a beautiful paper read by Mrs. Merriwether, of Memphis, and a masterly resume of the situation by Judge Howes, of Forrest City, in which he gave the unqualified endorsement of every prominent merchant of that city, to the value of prohibition as a business principle.

The delegates to the convention were charmed with the order and prosperity exhibited there, where no liquor has been tolerated for three years, and where old tipplers now declare they would rather pay one hundred dollars than have the sale resumed.

The convention was most delightfully entertained and reluctantly adjourned to meet in Little Rock the coming year. Mary L. Driggs, Pres. Prescott Union.

CONVENTION ITEMS.

The latter part of the last afternoon's session was occupied with a memorial service in remembrance of our lamented sister, Miss P. B. Newman. First in this service was prayer by Mrs. Chase (to whom she was a very dear personal friend). Resolutions expressive of our great loss as a state union, and the obituary notice and resolutions adopted by Forrest City local union were read. "Jesus lover of my soul," was sung in which many joined with trembling voices. This was the hymn requested by our sister to be sung, and in which she joined just before she passed away. Mrs. Dodge paid a loving tribute to her service and memory, and Mrs. Chase added a few words and urging all to be diligent that like her's their work might be done in the daytime.

Col. Howes payed a very high tribute to the work carried on by the W. C. T. U. He compared the union to the cloud (spoken of by the prophet,) no larger than a man's hand which had now expanded till it covered the whole heavens.

As he spoke so nobly of the 100,000 women in white-ribboned army, we all felt it an inspiration, and could say, "I'm glad I'm in this army." It having repeatedly been said by enemies of the work, that the merchants of Forrest City were in favor of returning to license, he interviewed them all that day and could give an unequivocal denial to the assertion, some of them saying they would give $500 and $1,000 rather than go back. He closed amid cheers.

In the address of welcome, Mrs. W. L. Thompson gave the following striking contrast between the condition of affairs in Forrest City five years ago, and that existing today. The great change has been wrought by means of the famous "three mile law:"

"I welcome you to a town, which, less than five years ago, was noted for the number of its saloons—and the quantity of liquor sold, but where today, not one drop of liquor can be bought or sold, (mind, I do not say drank.) To me it seems little short of a miracle. When I came here, ten years ago, one half of the business houses of the town were licensed saloons for the sale of intoxicants, and, truth compels me to add, very near the other half also. Drunken brawls were of daily and nightly occurrence, murders were not infrequent, and on Saturdays a perfect pandemonium of drunkenness reigned. Our jail was full, and a little building over across the railroad, called a calaboose, was full too, of drunken men confined like wild beasts till they sobered up. The jail is here yet; and occasionally has an occupant, this being the county seat, but the calaboose, I haven't heard of since—well, not since you voted whisky out of the town. It may have rotted down; most of the timber in Arkansas is like her drinking men, don't last long. All these things are changed now. There are no more disgraceful midnight orgies, or respectable midday tippling. No more drunken brawls, or foul murders, such as once disgraced our town. A lady can go out on our streets, as freely on Saturday as on any other day of the week."

OHIO.

THIRD DISTRICT CONVENTION.

The semi-annual meeting of the third district Ohio W. C. T. U., comprising the counties of Erie, Huron, Lorain, and Medina, met at Norwalk, May 14 and 15. A very happy address of welcome was given by Mrs. W. H. Winans, of Clarksfield.

The first topic was a paper by Mrs. D. W. Gage, of Oberlin, subject, "Importance of more thorough knowledge in regard to the work before us." The forcible and impressive way in which this subject was presented can not but result in much good. The Union Signal and Amendment Herald were urgently recommended as means of acquiring this knowledge.

Scientific instruction in public schools was presented in an able paper by Mrs. D. W. Fitts, of Medina. A very earnest discussion followed the reading of this paper and the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That while in view of the rapid strides of the temperance reformation within the past decade, we despair not of the speedy overthrow of the drink traffic by our own generation, our surest hope is in our children, and that we should use every endeavor to bring to their fresh and plastic minds an enlightened apprehension of the physical, mental, and moral evils resultant from the use of alcoholic beverages, that the generation which is to follow may be more enlightened than this has been and more unrelenting in its hostility to the drink trade.

Resolved, That public schools are one of the most potent influences in the enlightening of our state and nation, and ample education should be afforded them upon the physiological effects of alcohol.

Resolved, That in view of the pending legislation on this subject, we urge the members of the school board of this third district to memorialize the legislature in favor of such legislation.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this convention that the legislature of the state should at the earliest possible moment, by proper enactment, make compulsory the use of temperance text books, in the public schools.

Reports from counties showed a large increase both in numbers and interest; Erie county, recently organized, held its first county meeting May 20. The women throughout this district seem wide awake and in earnest. A large mass meeting was held in the evening, addressed by Rev. T. H. Hildreth. It was evident from the large crowd gathered and the enthusiasm manifested that in this instance "The prophet is not without honor in his own country." A liberal collection made glad the hearts of the workers.

The morning devotional exercises were of unusual spiritual power. Hearty, fervent prayers were offered and all seemed to feel that we do indeed know in whom we put our trust. A paper by Miss West, of Sandusky, on Juvenile Work, and also one by Mrs. Farr, of Norwalk, on Prison and Jail Work, occupied the forenoon. Cheering news was given by Mrs. Farr, of the reformatory work going on in our state prison in consequence of the statutory laws passed by our recent legislature.

We parted pledging ourselves anew to the work, believing that He in whom we trust will give us the joy of seeing the open saloon driven from our state and the rum traffic put under the ban of prohibiting laws.

Mrs. E. J. Gray, Dist. Pres.

MICHIGAN.

Mulford.—Knowing you will not despise one of the lower lights, we venture to hold up to view our humble light with the feeling that it may encourage some obscure union to trim afresh its flickering lamp that others may see the breakers ahead.

Our county (Oakland) held its annual convention here a few weeks ago. The result has been more light, knowledge, zeal, and recruits, but especially fixedness of purpose to wage war against our common foe, that we may share the conflict as well as enjoy the victory and blessings accruing therefrom.

As every effect is preceded by some cause, therefore we attribute our success to our gifted, cultured, and devoted district president, Mrs. C. H. Johnson. By her true womanly grace she captivated her audience while portraying in her peculiarly persuasive manner "The drinking done by law," earnestly pleading that it might be abolished by the same power.

The essay which was one of rare ability, was the means of giving character to our cause in the community, enabling us to ingratiate our union with the conservative and influential, also enthused us to renewed consecration in the work of rescuing the perishing. H.

CALHOUN COUNTY CONVENTION.

The fourth annual convention of Calhoun county W. C. T. U. was held in Battle Creek May 9 and 10. After devotional exercises the convention received the reports of the president, Mrs. Robinson, and the secretary, Mrs. Boughton, giving an account of the doings of the union the past year.

Reports were given from Marshall, Newton, Ceresco, Penfield and North Marshall, Emmet and Battle Creek unions and the Battle Creek Band of Hope.

The exercises closed with an excellent paper by Mrs. Rowley, of Marshall, having for its subject, "Am I my Brother's Keeper"?

The evening session was opened with singing by the choir and devotional exercises conducted by Rev. A. A. Knappen, presiding elder for the M. E. church for this district. There was a good audience and the proceedings were of marked interest.

Mrs. Dr. Mechem, of Battle Creek, gave the first address of welcome, which was in behalf of the W. C. T. U. She referred to the first meeting of the convention which was held here four years ago and the results accomplished in the temperance work since that time. The evils of the liquor traffic were portrayed and the different methods for their redress reviewed in a clear and forcible manner.

Miss Lulu Sixby followed with a brief welcome from the Band of Hope, which was finely worded and clearly delivered.

The reply to the above addresses, by Mrs. Thomas, of Albion, was presented in an animated style and gave a most hopeful and encouraging view of the work of the W. C. T. U. As in the labors of Paul at Thessalonica, the way might seem dark, the results discouraging, but the association had friends to help, the knowledge of the right and above all God to depend upon.

Some of the speakers who had been announced, having failed to appear, the president called upon Mrs. D'Arcambal, of Kalamazoo, who gave a most interesting and entertaining talk.

Rev. Mr. Mosher briefly expressed his sympathy with the temperance cause and prohibition.

Friday morning the session began at 9:30 with devotional exercises, the business meeting opening with the report from the Battle Creek union which was given by Mrs. Mechem and Mrs. Robinson.

Papers were read by Mrs. Dickie, of Albion, and Mrs. Marble, of Marshall, and Rev. A. E. Mather made some excellent remarks after which the meeting adjourned for lunch which was provided in the church.

The afternoon session opened with the usual devotional exercises, after which the subject of hygiene was presented in two admirable papers, by Mrs. Dr. Kellogg, of Battle Creek, and Mrs. Dr. Palmer, of Albion. Mrs. Mechem followed with a short address on heredity, and at three o'clock Dr. Kellogg gave a talk on the same subjects illustrated by the use of the manikin.

At the close of Dr. Kellogg's very interesting and entertaining lecture, the convention was visited by the Battle Creek Band of Hope, who came in a body accompanied by the teachers of the classes and furnished a very pleasing entertainment to the audience in the way of dialogues, recitations and music.

The committee on resolutions reported the following, which after some discussion were adopted:

WHEREAS, The present generation of temperance workers will soon pass away, therefore,

Resolved, That we make greater efforts in the future to interest our young in the great temperance work of today.

WHEREAS, The great flood of literature of today is detrimental to the morals of our youth, therefore,

Resolved, That as temperance workers we use our best endeavors to place before them such reading as shall tend to make uncompromising temperance men and women.

Resolved, That this convention recommend to all members of the W. C. T. U., and to all women of mature years, to attend the caucuses for nominating members of the school board, and all who are voters shall vote at the election.

Resolved, That the time has come when no consistent, conscientious temperance man, no philanthropist who sees the signs of the times, can afford to ignore the demands of prohibition at such a fearful cost as must inevitably follow the consciousness of having contributed the full amount of his influence against the prohibition principle.

WHEREAS, The union party of Michigan has boldly and squarely announced its platform for the complete suppression of the liquor traffic, therefore,

Resolved, That we do hereby pledge to that party and its members our sympathy and prayers.

Resolved, That the thanks of this convention are due to the ladies of Battle Creek for their generous hospitality and cordial welcome, to the pastor and Baptist society for the use of their church, and the choir for their excellent music, and the officers who have so ably and faithfully served us during the past year.

The following are the officers for the ensuing year: Mrs. Geo. Robinson, president, Battle Creek; Mrs. A. K. Thomas, corresponding secretary, Battle Creek; Mrs. Geo. Boughton, recording secretary, Marshall.

At the evening session the speakers were Rev. Mr. Cooley, of Marshall and presiding elder A. A. Knappen, of Albion.

The opening devotional exercises were conducted by the Rev. A. P. Moors, of Battle Creek.

Mr. Cooley's address was brief but pointed. He discussed the expensiveness of the liquor traffic to the people and showed that unlike other business, it was wholly without profitable returns, but on the other hand was an unmixed evil.

Mr. Knappen spoke efficiently and earnestly upon the hindrances to the temperance cause, and advocated independent political action on the part of temperance men, as neither of the leading political parties offered any hope of meeting the views of the supporters of prohibition.

The next meeting of the convention will be at Albion.

Mrs. Robinson, the president, is an excellent presiding officer and all the proceedings were conducted in a business like manner which reflected credit upon the ladies of the convention.

OREGON.

PORTLAND.—Two and one-half miles south of Portland, on the Macadam road, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union are carrying forward a growing and successful mission. Preaching services are held regularly once in two weeks on Sunday evening by Rev. Mr. Shoreland, and every Sabbath at 10 a. m. Sunday school is conducted by two ladies from the city who are members of the union. [We have reliable information that these two ladies are Mrs. A. R. Riggs and Mrs. R. T. Rankin. —ED.] A happier and more appreciative school perhaps is not often found. In age the members of the school range all the way from four years to mature and middle life. On a recent Saturday evening a concert was given by the school which was a success in every particular, the proceeds of which give promise of a self-sustaining mission in the near future. The recitations were by different members of the school, and would do credit to some of our city schools.

Another very important work of the Portland W. C. T. U. is that carried on in connection with the Seaman's Home. Gospel meetings are held in Bethel Hall every Friday evening. Chaplain Stubbs speaks in highest terms of their work.

NORTH CAROLINA.

North Carolina is on the advance! Randolph and Cabarrus counties are preparing to drive the entering wedge which is to split mercenary partyism asunder in another state and fashion a smooth, straight plank of morals for home and state.

These counties will put an independent prohibition ticket in the field at the fall election for county officers and state representatives. Randolph county has already circulated a petition for pledged men to support the new movement and has secured a sufficient number of the signatures of representative men of the county from both the old parties to insure success.

The women of High Point are making a determined attempt to close the dram shops, with some encouragement, as the new mayor is their friend, and they have an old ordinance and a state enactment in their favor.

The Greensboro W. C. T. U. has the devoted in its rank and file who are rich in many qualifications of heart and brain, and are making their influence felt near and far. HENRIETTA G. MOORE.

RHODE ISLAND.

WESTERLY.—The W. C. T. U. of Westerly is mourning the loss of its first honorary member, John Hobart Cross. This organization has not a large number of honoraries, but when one of their number dies who was so helpful to the organization as was Mr. Cross, the members cannot help feeling a bereavement as great as in the death of an actual member. The union received substantial aid in many ways at his hands, and, indeed, I think, owed its very existence to him. It adopted resolutions expressive of its grief and sympathy at a recent meeting, and on Sunday, May 25, united with the other temperance organizations of Westerly, in a meeting for public testimonial to Mr. Cross' worth. At this meeting which was largely attended, twelve tributes were paid to the memory of the departed by those intimate with him either in temperance service or in some other department of moral or Christian activity for years past; a series of testimonials remarkable for their justness, honesty, eloquence and variety, and especially impressive by reason of the variety of the relations of the speakers to the deceased.

The union lately petitioned the town council of Westerly, which, as stated in a former letter, has tolerated the liquor traffic for many years, with a regular no-license vote staring it in the face, to stop the sale of strong drink in the town; but there is no sign as yet, that anything was done with the petition, except, as one of the members of the union suggested, the council "put it under the table!"

The union has lately distributed 600 copies of the Rev. Dr. Herrick Johnson's expose of the high license delusion. E. R. C.

TEXAS.

AUSTIN.—The W. C. T. U. has just passed its third anniversary, and today occupies a vantage ground superior to any we have enjoyed before.

For two years a reading room has been sustained, offering one place of resort where no harmful allurements and associations would confront citizens and strangers. Sometimes it has seemed that we were at the end of our resources, and that the reading room, born of faith and love, must be abandoned, but there have been a few noble souls to stand by, and through their aid not only "are we all here alive this day," but the reading room still lives.

We have made a canvass of the city for regular monthly contributors, and have now, if all the pledges are met, a monthly revenue of $51, which it is believed will soon be increased. By actual record 10,233 visits have been paid to the reading room during the last year, over 5,000 during the last three months. We believe the enterprise is gaining in the confidence and affection of our citizens and trust that long before another annual meeting some of our citizens whom Providence has made stewards of large worldly wealth will place this institution beyond the reach of future straits by an ample and permanent endowment.

MRS. S. C. DAUGHERTY, Treas.

NOTES FROM SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

The gospel service of song on Sunday afternoon at Santa Barbara is an interesting feature of their work. A choir of young people under the leadership of Miss Alice Huse, state superintendent of Juvenile Work, stand around the organ in the W. C. T. U. reading room. The street door stands open and gradually their clear young voices in the familiar notes of the gospel hymns draw in a room full of people young and old. Children linger round the door, and young men yield to Mrs. Sawyer's smiling welcome and come in to take the seat and hymn book offered by some lady of the W. C. T. U. Carriages and wagons stop in the street that their occupants may listen, and the sidewalk on the opposite side gives room to many who go away to sing softly, "I need Thee every hour," "Yield not to temptation," and other blessed words that have fallen, like good seed, into their hearts.

Carpenteria is a live little union. Nothing escapes the notice of its active president, Mrs. Hogue, and its secretary, Miss Dorcas Wheelock, whom some of us met at our recent convention. When saloon keepers try to get a bill through the legislature taking the right to restrict the liquor traffic from the supervisors, little Carpenteria, being on the watch tower sounds the note of alarm and straightway Santa Barbara county unions send a counter petition.

The Ventura union not knowing after their organization exactly how to carry on their meetings, bethink them of the women of the Bible, so they assign certain books to certain members and have live meetings well attended.

Hueneme had only an hour of Mrs. Leavitt's time last fall but if we may judge from the earnestness with which they question, "What shall we do?" that hour was well spent. Their special effort is for the children in the Band of Hope under the charge of Mrs. Annie Linn.

Santa Paula has not yet organized but it will now do so with earnest temperance women reading THE UNION SIGNAL and Miss Willard's "Women and Temperance." We are grieved to learn of the sudden death of Mrs. Frick, president of the W. C. T. U. of Lompoc.

MARTHA HATHAWAY, Pres. W. C. T. U., So. Cal.

PENNSYLVANIA.

TIONESTA.—We have good news to report from Tionesta, Forest county. Five weeks ago our union engaged J. McConnell to deliver a series of lectures. The meetings continued several weeks. The results are as follows: Ten new members for the W. C. T. U. and the creation of a public sentiment that caused our county court last week to refuse to grant any licenses, not only in this our county seat, but in the entire county. There is but one house in Forest county that has a license to sell liquors. We are greatly encouraged and realize that the W. C. T. U., of Tionesta has not struggled in vain.

L. M. COBB, Cor Sec.

MISSOURI.

SPRINGFIELD.—The W. C. T. U. and Band of Hope were favored recently with Mrs. Nellie Bayley's chalk talks, in connection with some entertainments given for benefit of the Band. Mrs. Bayley's talks, pictures and winning address, are weighty arguments and strong persuasives for temperance.

A more wide awake W. C. T. U. or more interested Band of Hope—three hundred and fifty members—than Springfield has, could not be found. They will yet be a power in this beautiful little city, which is only disfigured by its numerous saloons and beer gardens and the drunkenness consequent upon their presence.

P. E. BALLARD.

MOUND CITY.—Mrs. Belle Downey, our efficient and great-hearted district president, has been organizing in Atchison county. She formed unions in Rockport, Tarkio City, Westboro, Fairfax and Watson. She went at her own expense, depending upon the collections for re-imbursement. If our district organizers could be relieved of the anxiety such a mode of work brings they could work better and more work would be done. The Mound City union is making an effort to furnish a reading room. I organized a Y. W. C. T. U. recently that will be a valuable ally. The young ladies made their first appearance before the public as an organization last week; a very pleasant entertainment at the M. E. church netted them sufficient money to start with their rent paid and something toward furniture. They talk of bringing C. J. Holt here for a week's work. We miss a great element of power when we overlook our girls.

LAURA C. COCHRAN.

FIRST DISTRICT CONVENTION.

The W. C. T. U of the first district met in convention in Macon, May 14, our state president, Mrs. Hoffman, presiding. Fifty delegates were present and many visitors. District and county officers were elected, the temperance work was discussed in all its phases; Hygiene and Heredity, Educational and Evangelistic work, Reform in Dress and the proper care of the body, were strongly urged by Dr. Bessie Cushman. The question of dramatic entertainments in connection with the work of the W. C. T. U. was ably discussed, and it was decided that human nature would take a limited amount of lecturing and a considerable quantity of entertaining.

A good, healthy, moral drama, properly conducted by the W. C. T. U., was approved of as a means of raising funds. Our worthy and loved state president delivered an able address the first evening to a crowded and appreciative audience. The second evening Rev. T. D. Wallace, of Hannibal, entertained a large audience with an eloquent address, "Queen Esther's plea for Liberty vs. Haman's License; or, The W. C. T. U. vs. The Liquor Traffic." This was the first convention of women ever held in this district, and it was a grand success; we urge all the mothers and sisters in our dear native land to unite with the W. C. T. U. if from no other motive than the great benefit it will be to themselves.

We adjourned with perfect faith in the ultimate success of the work as our trust is placed in "Him who doeth all things well."

MRS. O. V. EGGLESTON, Cor. Sec. W. C. T. U.

NEW JERSEY.

GLEANINGS BY R. P. PENFIELD.

PEMBERTON.—The opening of a quart saloon in this town has been the means of bringing desolation and sorrow to many homes. Drunkenness has increased to an alarming extent. We have no licensed hotel, but the jug business is doing fearful work.

NEW BRUNSWICK.—New Brunswick is full of rum but an "Ark of Safety" organization, composed of men and supported by nearly all the ministers in the city, is holding meetings each Sabbath at 4 p. m. and much good is being done by them. Mabee and English are here and with their earnest speeches and sweetest songs, are compelling drunkards to come into the kingdom.

—It is our candid opinion that the rum traffic in New Brunswick is doomed! In addition to the other workers in this good cause, Miss Willard gave our people one of her best speeches. In the evening of the same day Mrs. Buell, of New York, addressed with great acceptability a good audience in the First Methodist Episcopal church.

—The Ark of Safety is moving for a new and more commodious building in which to hold its increasing and interesting meetings.

CLAYTON—Has two or three jug shops in which liquor is sold contrary to law. It is the purpose of our people to pulverize these sinks of iniquity. Prohibition is their war cry. * * * There was a square fight between the anti-temperance and temperance elements at the town election, the temperance party winning. A W. C. T. U. has been organized by Mrs. Downs, state president.

BOONTON.—Has enjoyed a series of temperance meetings which have been a grand success. The pastors, including the Catholic priests, are a unit on this question and mean to carry it to the ballot box. The W. C. T. U. organized by Mrs. Washington two years ago is doing a large amount of practical work. Through their efforts a large reading room, supplied with the leading dailies, weeklies and monthly periodicals has been opened. The library of the old Y. M. C. A. has also been added. It is through this and kindred instrumentalities that one Sabbath school alone has had an increase of between seventy and eighty scholars within a year.

CHESTER.—Shares in the blessing coming from the labors of Major Scott and his excellent wife.

Washington, Wrightstown and Hackensack voted for no-license. Temperance mayor elected by a majority of one hundred and forty.

ILLINOIS.

The state convention of the Prohibition Home Protection Party will be held in Bloomington on Wednesday, June 18, at 10 a. m. The object of the convention will be the selection of delegates to the national convention to be held at Pittsburgh, the selection of an electoral ticket for Illinois, a new state central committee, to nominate candidates for state officers, and for the transaction of such other business as shall to the convention seem appropriate.

Each local temperance society in the state, whose members are in sympathy with the purposes of the National Prohibition Home Protection party, may send one delegate, male or female.

Each local W. C. T. U. is thus entitled to elect a delegate who shall represent it in this important convention. Let this be understood.

DEPARTMENT OF HEREDITY IN ILLINOIS.

No systematic work was done in either heredity or hygiene by the Illinois Union till a year and a half ago. At the state convention at Carlinville Dr. Lucinda Corr was elected Superintendent of Hygiene. At a meeting of the state executive committee the March following she was requested to take charge of the Department of Heredity also, as no lady had been found competent to take that place, and Dr. Corr had proved herself so efficient a worker in the one department as to convince all that she could manage the two. This she has done during the past year and a half with marked efficiency. Her work has been laying foundations. Believing that they must both rest on a better understanding of anatomy and physiology she has prepared a series of outline lessons for blackboard instruction by which our workers can become better acquainted with the fundamental principles of anatomy and physiology underlying both hygiene and heredity.

In connection with the National superintendents of these departments she has worked for a state Normal Institute for the study of hygiene and heredity. This will be held in August at Lake Bluff, Ill.

The work of the two departments has increased so as to become too much for one busy woman. The National Superintendent of Heredity, Dr. Mary Weeks Burnett, resides in Illinois, and she has been requested by Dr. Corr and myself to relieve Dr. Corr in that department for the rest of the year, particularly by taking charge of the Normal Institute. Inquiries concerning it can be addressed to Dr. Burnett, Central Music Hall, Chicago.

MARY ALLEN WEST.

JOLIET.—Our district convention held here in March, is already bearing fruit, for we have two promising Bands of Hope organized. Another will soon be added to the number, and a decided impetus has been given to the work in general.

Captain Linscott has just left us and I cannot allow the occasion to pass without a public recognition of his services.

Of the lectures there seemed to be but one opinion and that most favorable. They were a clear, logical and forcible exposition of "citizenship" as viewed from a Christian standpoint.

The children's meetings, too, were a success and the popular lecture which closed the course brought out his ability as an observer, orator and actor in a very pleasing way.

MRS. H. N. MARSH.

MARISSA.—The people here began the fight for no license some seven years ago, at the time of incorporation, and though often defeated have kept it up ever since. This year men and women both rallied to the support of right against wrong, and getting good workers to their aid, the right triumphed. At the last election not a license candidate could be found, and prohibition made a clean sweep; the women worked from early morning till ten at night, giving every aid in their power,—not the least being warm coffee and good eatables. The Ladies' League, of over seventy members, (now the W. C. T. U.) still continue their Saturday night suppers to the Prohibition Club, and all are doing grand work for the cause.

M. C. M.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—Unions have been organized at Warren and Jo Daviess, by Miss Addie Goodrich; at Toulon, Wyoming and Monica, by Mrs. C. H. Smith; at Sibley and Strawn by Miss Emily Shedd.

—Mrs. L. S. Rounds organized a Y. W. C. T. U. at Mt. Vernon, last week following the convention of the 9th district and spoke also at Opdyke and Carmi. Engagements are being made quite rapidly for her by Miss Hood at headquarters.

—One hundred thousand leaflets for the use of organizers and workers have been printed since last October by the state literature committee. Several new ones are now in press. To all Illinois unions they are sent for cost of mailing 15 cents per 100. Send your orders to 161 LaSalle street.

—Mrs. M. Anna Smith, superintendent press work for Illinois, having returned from her absence in the south, wishes to have reports of the temperance column, and of the reception of bulletins from all the secretaries of the unions of the state. Please address, Mrs. Smith at 3634 Ellis Park, Chicago.

—Lee county W. C. T. U. held a convention at Amboy Tuesday and Wednesday of this week; and Du Page county held its second convention for the year at Downers Grove on Wednesday. Miss West was present at Amboy, Mrs. L. S. Rounds at Downer's Grove.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

AN "Antiquarian Museum" netted the Hoopeston (Ill.) W. C. T. U. thirty dollars.

ROCKFORD and Paw Paw (Ill.) unions report earnest and interesting meetings May 27.

THE Illinois state Congregational association, at its session held in Peoria last week, heartily endorsed the work of the W. C. T. U. and pledged cordial co-operation.

THE W. C. T. U. of Dansville, N. Y. has districted the whole village, appointing members to each district to canvas, going to every house, asking every woman to join the union.

THE little village of Sanford, Fla., has two Bands of Hope, one white and one colored, numbering nearly fifty each. Through the efforts of temperance workers, Florida now has local option.

MISS L. M. VON FINKELSTEIN lectured in eastern costume, on "Intemperance in the Holy Land," under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., on Sunday April 27, at Masonic Hall, Washington.

THE annual meeting of the Ohio W. C. T. U. will be held in Cincinnatti, June 18, 19 and 20. Miss F. E. Willard, Miss Henrietta G. Moore and Mrs. Frances E. Harper, are expected to be present.

THE Illinois state Sunday school convention of the Campbelli e church enthusiastically passed a strong resolution favoring temperance teaching in the Sunday school and commending the labors of the W. C. T. U.

MRS. HARRISON, state president of Tennessee, reports that the different papers of the state are soliciting notices of temperance work. There were twenty temperance sermons preached in the state on the crusade anniversary.

A CALL has been issued by the Iowa State Temperance Alliance for a mass meeting of the friends of law and order in the county seat of each county in the state on June 27, in order to perfect the machinery of enforcement.

A "WHITTLING and Molding school" for boys is talked of by the Minneapolis W. C. T. U. The union is about opening a reading room near the Manitoba depot where gospel temperance meetings and Sunday schools will be regularly held.

LENA (Ill.) is rejoicing over the glorious result of a series of gospel temperance meetings held by their district president, Miss Addie Goodrich, assisted by Mr. Thomas E. Murphy. Six hundred and thirty pledges were taken, a saloon keeper being the first to sign the pledge and wear the blue.

MRS. WOODBRIDGE lectured in Dr. Swift's church (Presbyterian), in Allegheny, Pa., recently on Sunday evening, "being the first instance," says the state president, "I ever heard of a temperance woman being in a Presbyterian pulpit on Sabbath. A collection of two hundred dollars was taken.

VERY effective temperance work is being done in the Philadelphia almshouse, by a committee of twelve W. C. T. U. workers. One of them writes: "We had fifteen conversions last month, and the men follow up our meetings, after they leave there, so changed from sick, sinful paupers, all energy and almost all hope gone, to well dressed, hopeful Christians, we don't recognize them, until they come after the meeting, and make themselves known.

CARLINVILLE (Ill.) W. C. T. U. offered prizes the past winter to the pupils of the public schools for the best examinations in, and essays upon alcohol and hygiene. Classes were organized in three rooms. The examinations occurred May 9 and the prizes were won by three little girls. A boy of fourteen won the essay prize. Each of the other competitors received a bouquet in appreciation of the faithful work done.

THE 1st, 3d and 4th Y. W. C. T. Unions of Philadelphia had a delightful pic nic in Fairmount park May 24. Seventy-five were seated at two long tables. A better acquaintance among the various unions was the object in uniting thus. The unavoidable absence of the 2nd union was a matter of general regret. It is hoped that another year will see the whole Y. W. C. T. U. family of Philadelphia together and not one missing.

UNIONS have been formed at St. Augustine, Waldo, Archer and Palatka, Florida. Of this latter place, the state president, Mrs. J. L. Lyons writes: "This is an important, growing town, but not on the alert with respect to the temperance question. Public opinion strongly upholds the saloon." The union in Ocala, Florida, has, by persistent effort, seconded by prominent citizens, kept the saloons closed for months, under the new option law. The union at Archer, Florida, writes the corresponding secretary, has been suspended for a while, and we are doing all we can to keep it out.

FLOWER MISSION.

DEAR SECRETARY OF N. T. UNION:—When our National superintendent asked me less than one year ago, to be state superintendent of the Flower Mission work of Michigan, I hesitated because I felt that we had hardly time to use the agencies already in motion; and the trial of new machinery especially in northern Michigan looked discouraging. But when I learned no research into scientific truths was needed, as it was only another way of carrying the gospel of love, and a few new attachments were all that was necessary, and the same mighty steam engine that is moving the whole train of the W. C. T. U. work would halt long enough to take "all aboard" who are trying to preach deliverance to captives in sin, I accepted. Since my appointment I have written to unions in all parts of the state and received many letters of inquiry and some of encouragement. Nearly all the district presidents have appointed superintendents for their districts, and much is being done in the way of carrying bouquets and (in some cases a growing plant) to those shut in by sickness.

I urged each district superintendent to ask their representative in congress for flower seeds from the agricultural department at Washington, for this purpose. I know some have kindly responded when asked to raise flowers for this special work. One little five year old boy whose sister (now in heaven) was a helper last year, expects to supply a city hospital with bouquets all summer. We are glad there is one department of work in which it is not essential to look to the wise and far seeing for help and co-operation, but can enlist the interest of the little ones, thus unfolding the active nature of the child as nothing less than the kindergarten can do effectually. In our state prison at Jackson and in many of our jails last year, every prisoner received a bouquet and scriptural text on prison day. The districts in which these prisons are located have promised to take care of them this year, and we hope the 9th of June every one "barred in" from God's sunlight in Michigan will be remembered, and that those in charge of the services will impress upon them not only that it is the birthday of our beloved National superintendent, but it is her especial wish that they should be thus remembered and her prayer daily is that they may know "There is a Father in heaven who loves those who trust Him." And if they accept this offering as a mercy, not as a right, it may bring to mind some tender memories of mother's garden in childhood days; and the scripture text may remind them of prayers at father's fireside; and many souls may be liberated by this labor of love. If so, we will humbly say "Oh Lord, not unto us but unto Thy name give glory," and of such may it be said,

They have carried the living water
To the parched and thirsty soul.
They have said to the sick and wounded,
"Christ Jesus makes thee whole."

THE Elmira Advertiser publishes the following interview with a chemist of that city: "It is stated that you have found the highest-toned grades and forms of tobacco to be adulterated with opium," said the writer interrogatively to the doctor. "Yes sir," replied the scientist, "that is in a measure true. Not long ago, I collected, by purchase of reputable dealers, a dozen packages of the most prominent and high priced cigarettes to be had. These I forwarded to a Pittsburgh chemist to be analyzed with special reference to the opium which public opinion had only half led me to believe might be found in them. With them I sent some cheaper grades of cigarettes. The result of the analysis was to me an astounding one. The chemist found that in all the standard brands of cigarettes there was a considerable quantity of opium! Now, the effects of opium smoking, eating or absorption in any form are generally known to be very dangerous, and, if carried to the extreme, deadly. Hence I need not dwell upon the significance of the discovery. So much for the best cigarettes. The poorer ones also were tested with reference to opium, but were found to be devoid of anything so expensive. In them there were found quantities of various vile drugs mixed with refuse tobacco of the most unwholesome sort. Take these facts, in addition to the well recognized narcotic effects of the purest tobacco, and they indicate such dangerous practices and habits as ought to be corrected without delay."

AN investigation of the status of the naval officers of the Asiatic squadron of the United States Navy, with reference to intemperance, instituted by Secretary Chandler a few months ago, has brought to light a most disgraceful state of affairs, and several officers have been detached from the service and ordered home. Ex-Commander Mullen, who commanded the Ashuelot when she was lost, sacrificing nearly a dozen lives, was reported repeatedly drunk, and to have been drunk at the time of the loss of the vessel and of the men under his command. He has been dismissed from the service, but that does not restore to life the sacrificed men, nor to the government the vessel for the loss of which he is responsible. Another officer is reported as getting drunk, and as using "insulting and profane language" to the chaplain, and at another time as becoming intoxicated and offering to "whip the chaplain." Another, "a lieutenant-commander," was brought to the "verge of delirium tremens" by "excessive and prolonged indulgence in alcoholic stimulants." Still another, a "master," was frequently intoxicated, and once "was so drunk that the quartermaster was unable to awaken him for a night watch." Others are mentioned in this report among the officials of the Asiatic squadron whose shameful drunkness was both perilous to the lives and properity entrusted to their care and thoroughly disgraceful to the American navy represented by them. Total abstinence from all intoxicating beverages should be an imperative condition of the American naval service, alike among officers and seamen.—National Temperance Advocate.

We append the testimony of Gen. C. H. Howard, because of the esteem and confidence in which he is held, not only by his many friends, but also by the thousands who know him as the recent editor of the Advance, and hence know that only deserved merit alone can influence him in the following statement:

CHICAGO, Ill., March 4, 1884.

DR. F. L. PEIRO—Dear Sir: It gives me great pleasure to state that Mrs. Howard's health is permanently restored. Last summer she began the use of your excellent Oxygen treatment by your advice So gratifying have been the results that it seems to be not less than a simple duty, as a debt of gratitude, to make this statement. Very respectfully yours,

C. H. HOWARD.

"I HAVE made a thousand dollars during the last three months," said a saloon keeper, boastfully, to a crowd of his townsmen. "You have made more than that," quietly remarked a listener. "What is that?" "You have made wretched homes—women and children poor, and sick, and weary of life. You have made my two sons drunkards," continued the speaker, with trembling earnestness; "you made the younger of the two so drunk that he fell and injured himself for life. You have made their mother a broken-hearted woman. O, yes; you have made much—more than I can reckon up, but you'll get the full count same day—you'll get it some day!"—Selected.

IT has been discovered that a citizen of Cincinnati who fell dead in a railway car the other day was poisoned by tobacco smoke. He was an occasional sufferer from heart disease, and the trouble was so aggravated by the suffocating smoke of the car that he died after breathing it a few minutes. The car in which he rode had only one compartment for men, women and children, and the smokers were allowed full sway in it. Two other passengers were overcome by the tobacco fumes.

GENERAL BUTLER has stopped smoking. The radical change of habit is adopted by the advice of his physician. The general's capacity for work has always been something enormous, and with the advance of years he shows not the slightest desire to reduce his hours of labor, but he feels a loss of vigor, and is willing to sacrifice any habit that is calculated to weaken his powers. He is nothing of an invalid, however.

MR. JAMES C. YOUNG, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, president of the North Western Loan and Real Estate Investment Co., offers some choice investments to our readers. He can give figures from which handsome profits can be realized. His financial standing is beyond question, and we cordially recommend any of our friends who desire to invest large or small sums to communicate with Mr. Young.

THE W. C. T. U. National Anthem, "For God and Home and Native Land" should be used at all W. C. T. U. meetings and conventions. Miss Willard hopes to hear it wherever she is invited to speak. The price has been reduced to 10c. for single copies; fifteen copies for $1.

THE brewers and liquor dealers of New York city, at a large meeting, unanimously voted not to vote for any man on their party ticket who favored prohibition in the slightest degree.

Surface Indications

What a miner would very properly term "surface indications" of what is beneath, are the Pimples, Sties, Sore Eyes, Boils, and Cutaneous Eruptions with which people are annoyed in spring and early summer. The effete matter accumulated during the winter months, now makes its presence felt, through Nature's endeavors to expel it from the system. While it remains, it is a poison that festers in the blood and may develop into Scrofula. This condition causes derangement of the digestive and assimilatory organs, with a feeling of enervation, languor, and weariness—often lightly spoken of as "only spring fever." These are evidences that Nature is not able, unaided, to throw off the corrupt atoms which weaken the vital forces. To regain health, Nature must be aided by a thorough blood-purifying medicine; and nothing else is so effective as which is sufficiently powerful to expel from the system even the taint of Hereditary Scrofula.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

The medical profession indorse AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, and many attestations of the cures effected by it come from all parts of the world. It is, in the language of the Hon. Francis Jewett, ex-State Senator of Massachusetts and ex-Mayor of Lowell, "the only preparation that does real, lasting good."

Signal Notes.

It is said that only one of the ninety-two counties of Indiana allows the sale of intoxicating liquors at its annual fairs.

The scoffers at prohibition are circulating this: The march of total abstinence in England has been interrupted for the moment by the farmers of Wiltshire. They have clubbed together and presented a purse to the man who, a little while ago, proved that he could pitch more wheat with the aid of beer, than an opponent who drank water.

A saloon at Danville Junction, on the Chicago & Eastern Illinois, was located so near the track that train men found it altogether too convenient to run in and take a drink while their trains were stopping. Superintendent Lyford hit upon a plan to get rid of the nuisance. He ordered a tight board fence, ten feet high, built not only in front of the saloon, but for quite a distance on both sides parallel with the tracks.

A recent report of the New York Asylum shows that out of 254 patients admitted, over 77 per cent. were drinkers. The report of the Pennsylvania Hospital for the Insane for the year 1883 in a table showing the causes of insanity in 8,852 cases attributes to intemperance 838—a far larger than are attributed to any other specific cause. It is easy to believe that a large proportion of cases assigned to "loss of property," "domestic difficulties," "want of employment," etc., might be traced to the influence of strong drink.

"So long as dealers make whisky that will burn a hole in the floor, so long will there be a protest against using it and laws to crush out the sale. * * The present rage for temperance is a protest on behalf of the human stomach, and is caused solely by the outrageous stuff put on the market and sold under the head of wines, brandies and whiskies. * * * Formerly whisky was made out of grain. But now it is different. * * Rhine wine is tartaric acid and diluted alcohol. Sweet wine is diluted alcohol and glucose. Beer is soda and aloes, and whisky is raw fire and delirium tremens. * * It is a poison direct, immediate and lasting."—Peoria Journal.

A medical journal draws attention to the relative amount of evil caused by whisky-drinking, and by beer-drinking, and without advocating the former, pronounces against the latter as the more injurious of the two. "A whisky drinker," we are told, "will commit murder only under the direct excitement of liquor; a beer-drinker is capable of doing it in cold blood." It is not quite clear that the distinction thus made is of any particular value, but from the context it would seem that the main point of the argument adduced is, that whereas spirits are presumably taken occasionally only, beer is regarded as a constant beverage, and thus has more continuous and unbroken opportunities of doing mischief.

Miscellaneous Selections.

CIVILIZED BARBARISM.

From one issue of the Charleston Times, we clip the three following notices:

TAKE NOTICE.—"I warn all keepers of saloons and other people, not to sell or give my son, John Wynne, any intoxicating drinks. I will prosecute any one who sells him intoxicating drinks.
MRS. H. F. WYNNE.

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.—Take notice that I am determined to prosecute any one selling or furnishing liquor directly or indirectly, to my son, Frank Cox, to the extreme limit of the law.
E. V. COX.

NOTICE.—All persons are warned not to sell my son, James Crew, any intoxicating liquors Those doing so will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law. MRS. GEORGIANA CREW

Be it known that these notices are published in a civilized community, by anxious and agonized parents, in a forlorn and desperate hope to save their children—from what? Why, from legalized death traps, deliberately set by authority of a civilized government, and cunningly baited by the trappers who are sold the privilege of catching and destroying the people for the sum of $100 a year. If anybody says these trappers are not allowed by the law to catch the boys, we answer that those granting license to saloons, know full well that saloonists will sell to anybody that can pay. If this be a civilized country, then we say it is a civilized barbarism that compels mothers to resort to the courts to protect their boys from legalized death traps.

IT is the evident that the liquor question is soon to engage the attention of the whole country as never before. The New York Observer, a very solid, staid and conservative paper, in its last issue remarked upon the subject as follows: "But it is well for the politicians to understand that the alcoholic issue is coming, and they will have to meet it. The pecuniary, material prosperity of this country, not to speak of morals, is as truly involved in the alcoholic traffic, as it is in the tariff or bank questions. We might safely affirm that the wealth or poverty of more people is concerned in the temperance question than in any other. Statesmen must consider this fact. It is madness to ignore it, or to oppose inquiry that tends to its intelligent consideration."

PATCHWORK and Crazy Quilts are the latest Craze, and ladies will be glad to learn of any economy in this Art Needlework. We have just been shown an ounce package, of "Factory ends called 'Waste' embroidery" good silk, beautiful colors, and in quantity as much as is obtained in from 75 to 100 skeins of regular goods. These factory ends can all be used, and are highly prized for their economy. Any of our subscribers that say they are readers of THE UNION SIGNAL may obtain a similar package, by forwarding 40 cents to The Brainerd & Armstrong Co., 621 Market street, Philadelphia.

I challenge any man who understands the nature of spirits, and yet for the sake of gain continues to be in the traffic, to show that he is not involved in the guilt of murder.—Lyman Beecher.

ALCOHOLIC DRINKS AND NARCOTICS.

The only Temperance Physiology that Answers fully the Requirements of the new Law in the Several States.

—BY—

J DORMAN STEELE, PH. D.

EDITED AND ENDORSED by the W. C. T. U. under direction of Mrs. MARY H. HUNT.

This work contains all the excellent and popular features that have given D. Steele's Fourteen Weeks in Physiology so wide a circulation: with carefully-prepared sections upon the Physiological Action of Alcohol, Tobacco, Opium, etc. These are scattered through the book as each organ is treated. This subject is examined from a purely scientific standpoint, and represents the latest teachings at home and abroad. While there is no attempt to incorporate a temperance lecture in a school book, yet the terrible effects of these "Stimulants and Narcotics," especially upon the young, are set forth all the more impressively, since the lesson is taught merely by the presentation of facts that lean toward no one's prejudices, and admit of no answer or escape. In this edition unusual space is given to the subject of Ventilation, which is now attracting so much attention throughout the country. 300 pages, 12mo., half bound, illustrated. Specimen Copy, postage prepaid, $1.00.

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 24. CHICAGO, JUNE 12, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

How much better is a man than a sheep? and yet the Republican party platform lays great stress on the protection of sheep-growing interests, and has not a word of sorrow or animadversion for man-destroying interests.

THE brave word from Governor St. John is, "God reigns, but it is the saloon and not heaven that rejoices over the Chicago convention. By my voice and vote I shall, so far as lies in my power, resent the insult offered to the temperance people by that convention."

FIFTEEN hundred women voted during the past year on school questions in Michigan, and only two met any opposition to this exercise of their rights and privileges. This fact was brought out at the state W. C. T. U. convention last week, which is spoken of as most harmonious and successful. A full report will be given next week.

GENERAL BOOTH the commander of the Salvation Army is about to organize the Salvation Navy. He has secured a yacht in which he proposes to coast the Mediterranean and "bombard the sailors." At a recent rally of the Army in Exeter Hall, London, it was stated that the people on the platform represented 5,000 years' drunkenness and an expenditure of $650,000.

A FASHION of speech in some quarters, when referring to the workman who does not appear on a Monday morning is, "He's got the Monday blight." That is the correct term—the blight—and pity of pities is it that so often it is not merely the "Monday blight," but the blight of a whole life. Good friends, what are you doing to dispel this blight? Blight of body, blight of brain, blight of the spirit which is to live forever.

DURING the agitation which preceded the passage of the married women's property bill in England, grave fears were expressed that separate funds and power over her own earnings would destroy woman's devotion to husband and home. Some benevolent persons, men and women who have been interested in helping working women to save and invest their earnings write to the Englishwoman's Review, that this is far from being the case, and that the women not only deposit for themselves but frequently ask to be allowed to have a depositor's card for their husbands also. To one such applicant the manager replied: "Certainly if you wish, but I thought he used you badly." The woman answered, "I can't say he's been as good a husband as he ought to be, but I don't like taking out the money at Christmas, and nothing for him, so I'll pay the same for him as for myself."

The womanly heart can be trusted. Its nature can no more be changed by legal enactment, than a new note can be legislated into the song of a bird, or the fashion of its nest changed "by act of Congress."

A GOOD story comes from Sandwich, Ill., in regard to the chart showing the proportion of money spent for liquor and tobacco, in relation to that spent for other and legitimate uses. The ex-mayor of Sandwich sent his agent into the country to do certain work if he could, but even if he did not get it done, he was urged to come back in time to vote. He did so, saw a chart, went with the ex-mayor and voted. Imagine, the latter's surprise, when it came out that he voted the no-license ticket, and gave the reason, "The chart changed my mind." The ex-mayor replied, "If I had known you would have voted in that way, I'd have sent you so far into the country you would not have got back to vote."

A STRIKING instance of "the law's hidings" is found in the experience of the Law and Order League of an eastern city. A rumseller was arrested for illegal sales and summoned for trial. His counsel and physician testified that he was too ill to appear. Later he was summoned again, and this time a policeman testified that he was very infirm, even imbecile, and could not be brought to trial. Whereupon the attorney for the League said, "Do you mean to say that he belongs to the class we call idiotic?" The chief of police replied, "I do." Yet this same "idiot" has filed a petition for a license this year. The chairman of the overseers of the poor has also applied for a license, also several convicted persons, some drunkards, and one convicted woman. The temperance people are anxiously waiting for the action of the selectmen.

JUDGE ROGER S. GREENE, in giving the charge to the grand jury in a certain county of Washington territory, said: "The number of courts holden by me, since our laws that put women on her present political plane became operative, is seven, at six of which women served on both the grand and petit juries, and as to the manner in in which they performed jury duty I have yet to hear from any one who, by actual presence in court and intelligent following of what was going on, became qualified to pass an opinion, a single adverse criticism or any word but praise. Heartily, I concur in what thus appears to be the general judgement of competent observers. Even though it be granted that the female jurors who have served hitherto are, in intelligence, above the average that may be expected, this fact is counterbalanced by two others: First, that in selecting from the entire panel parties at every term have shown a decided preference for the women as jurors; and second, that no grand jury ever in session in this territory has done prompter, cleaner, better work than those which have sat in this district during the last six months."

IT would seem that the southern women are to have all the historic honors on the suffrage question. Some time ago we made mention of Margaret Brent, who, more than two hundred years ago petitioned the courts of Maryland for the right of personal suffrage, and now a correspondent of a North Carolina exchange tells of a woman in that state who in 1848, actually voted. It was Mrs. Edmund DeBerry of Montgomery county, widow of the Hon. Edmund DeBerry, for a number of years a representative in Congress, and she cast her vote for Taylor and Filmore. Only a few Democrats voted at that time. Late in the evening—after all the Democrats had returned home, the managers of the polls (all Whigs) sent for Mrs. DeBerry and told her for the high regard and respect they entertained for her late husband, they wanted her to vote, and she did so; but the transaction was kept a secret from the Democrats.

"Now's the day and now's the hour" to circulate the voter's pledge. Here it is:

We, the undersigned, realizing that the homes of this nation are unrepresented save through us, do hereby pledge ourselves to God, to our honored countrywomen, and to each other, that for the protection of the home, from the curse of the saloon we will henceforth vote only for those candidates for office, local, state and national, who stand upon a platform demanding the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, and who are committed by character and public pledge, to the adoption and enforcement of prohibitory law.

Cut this out, and paste it in a little blank book and steadily work to secure names. Specially seek those of young men just reaching their majority. Our hope is in them; they have had the education of these ten wonderful years since the crusade. Then report all names to the recording secretary of your local W. C. T. U. and let the names be placed upon the Voters' Roll of Honor. The individual voter is the fountain head of power whence come presidents, vice presidents, congressmen, legislators, and municipal authorities. We can thus recruit a constituency committed to the proposition, "The saloon must go."

THE SWORD OF THE LORD AND OF GIDEON.

INSCRIBED TO THE W. C. T. U.

MRS. E. D. HUNDLEY.

Soldiers, in this earnest battle,
Buckle on your armor bright,
Prayer and work must go together,
If we vanquish in the fight.
Paul must plant, Apollos water,
They their labors must not cease,
Then to prayer and faith awaiting,
God, himself, gives the increase.

Gideon's sword must flash and glitter,
Gideon's arm must brave the foe;
Then the Lord through grace will strengthen,
By our work our faith we show.
And though often faint and weary,
Drooping from the dust and glare,
We should never flag nor falter,
Till the victor's crown we wear.

Forward, then the temperance rally,
Alcohol, in all his might,
On ten thousand fields is tenting
Ready to contest the fight.
Fling abroad our snow-white banner,
Let its folds be seen afar,
Gleaming, where the foe is thickest,
Like the white plume of Navarre.

WHO RULES?

ANNA E. DICKINSON.

"Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty:" repeated here a million times, a million times forgotten.

We are fond of talking of ourselves as a peculiar people, favored of God. Yet be sure there is no reason why we should receive aught at the hands of the great Captain beyond any other division of his vast army.

There is no such thing as a free gift in nature. That that we have we must toil for. Even this body of ours, the first of our possessions, the last of our renunciations, cannot survive for a day without our own will or effort, even though there be others a plenty to serve it.

Fortunate in beginning our career where nature was fresh and liberal, fortunate in establishing a government away from old-time laws and traditions, untrammelled by dead weights and precedents, fortunate in the fatherhood of men who knew the right, and, knowing, dared maintain through poverty and blood and death,—fortunate in all these, yet these alone will not suffice to make us strong in the present, nor secure in the future.

We cannot, if we would, be pensioners upon the dead. The same arts, or greater, that did gain a power, must it maintain. With nations, as with individuals, there is no such thing as standing still. Advance or retreat is the law of nature: as one climbing the heights of Shasta finds ice, a sure foothold for the time he needs to reach up higher, and no more; firm vantage-ground if he does but use it for climbing, for renewed efforts; melting snows, and shifting, treacherous foundations, if he attempts to remain.

Since men died to establish a republic, men must live to preserve it.

Freedom exacts its price. Rights have their equivalent responsibilities. Liberty imposes obligations. We will be our own sovereign. We must, then, govern, or meet the fate of all governments without a head, or with a head that yields its duties to favorites who may or may not be inefficient or corrupt, but who certainly will be careless if they are sure they are unwatched and unregarded by their chief.

Who governs America today? The people? Nobody believes it. It is governed by the politicians whose trade, whose business, it is. Men of education, of intelligence, of ambition, are too busy about their own personal gains and gettings and spendings to hew the planks of platforms, or to investigate the character of those who are to stand upon them, or to see that the platform is rightly supported.

It is something to make a good law: it is more to see that it is executed. It is something to secure a good servant: it is more to watch that the work of that servant is well done, and that the commendation of "Well done" and the condemnation of "Ill done" be alike spoken in due season.

This man will be a sovereign in a land where the people rule, yet he will not go to the place where government is made. For government is not made at Washington, at Albany, at Atlanta, at Springfield, at Sacramento. It is made at the primary meeting.

"No," says this fastidious citizen. "It is asking too much of me to go to that villanous place, to be elbowed by the rabble, and to be bullied by the pot-house politicians who will be in full possession. I have not the time to spare, even had I the inclination for such companionship. I have my bank, or my office, or my fields, or my shop, or my ledger, or my factory, or my profession, to look after. When election day comes, I will do my duty,—if I remember it,—and vote, if, by chance, there is a decent man on the ticket."

Meanwhile the "villanous place" is crowded by the ignorant if not the vicious, by the uninstructed foreigner, or the unenlightened American,—material for "repeaters" controlled by unscrupulous holders of public trusts.

Meanwhile the platform, built by these hands, is full often builded of rotten planks, or of wind that has a semblance of solidity.

Meanwhile plans are laid, and men selected, that will control banking interests, mechanic interests, manufacturing interests, farming interests, professional interests, directly or indirectly all the interests of the people of the land. And, when election day comes, the intelligent and tax paying citizen has no more freedom of action than the galley-slave chained to his oar. Chained by this machinery of party, he votes a straight ticket,— votes for measures his conscience condemns, and for men he despises or distrusts,—or he scratches his ticket, or bolts. That is, he foregoes his right of citizenship, is without voice or representation in the incoming government and man.

He prostitutes his vote, or he loses it.

Or, he does not so much as take it into his hand, or even remember it. He has not the interest to touch it at all. "Election day! forgot all about it."

"Vote? No. I've been too busy."

And having forgotten, or been too busy, to take care of his own rights and interests, when laws curtail and taxes press heavily upon these same rights and interests, he cries out against the iniquities of the politicians, and the ignorance of the voters; and wonders whether, "after all, republican institutions are not a failure."

So far as they are to be supported by, and to live through him, they certainly are.

The republic stands like the image seen in the king's vision,—in brightness, excellent; in form, terrible; its head of fine gold; its body and its limbs of silver, of brass, and of iron, its feet part of iron but mixed with miry clay.

And what was the fate of the image when a weight fell upon these feet,—poor, weak, uncertain feet,—heavier than they could bear? They broke in pieces; and with them the clay, the iron, the brass, the silver, and the gold broke in pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing floors.

If the statue of America is to stand, it must be upon feet of granite planted on everlasting foundations. If it is to stand secure, it must be by the fine gold of thought, the silver of purity, the brass of endurance, the iron of solidity taking the place of the mire and the clay. It must be sound from toe to head, genuine all through.

TEMPERANCE IN THE ARMY AND NAVY.

MRS. SARAH A. MCCLEES.

To the ordinary observer the sphere of the civilian and the military man seems as remote as the distance from the center to the circumference of the globe.

The newspaper reader, if a business man, engaged in trade, in the "piping time of peace," passes over the items headed "Army and Navy News," to revel with delight amongst the market quotations and price lists. The politician cares only for the doings of the legislature, or the congress at Washington, the nominating committees and conventions. The women read "the fashions, the marriages and deaths." Who then cares to know or pauses to consider the significance of such items as these clipped within a week from the daily papers:"

Lieut. ——— of the United States navy has been suspended for a term of two years on a charge of drunkenness." "A general court martial has been appointed to meet at Willett's Point, New York Harbor for the trial of such prisoners as may be brought before it." "A naval court martial has been ordered to meet at Norfolk Navy Yard next Tuesday for the trial of Lieut. ———" on certain charges, etc. *"A meeting in New York city to promote the interests of the Home for ex Confederate soldiers, attended by General Grant, and other Union officers of the late war." "Captain Mellville, of the recent Arctic Expedition preserves a bottle of whisky and carries it through all the perils and hardships of the journey, and now is puzzled to know what to do with it."

But there is a large and ever increasing number of thoughtful people who are watchful of passing events as indicative of the onward march of moral ideas; multitudes of my own sex, I am proud to say, who are interested in more than dress, and weddings and funerals, important and grand and solemn as are the events of marriage and death—for our Christian home women do not represent a class, they stand for humanity, and it may well be said of these true reformers as the orator Curtis said the other day of Wendell Phillips: "It was not an oppressed race alone that he plead for. It was wronged humanity; it was the victim of unjust systems and unequal laws; it was the poor man, the weak man, the unfortunate man, whoever and wherever he might be." The same comprehensive philanthropy which induced this honored man to espouse the cause of the weak and the oppressed and suffering everywhere, has led the beloved president of the N. W. C. T. U. to devise methods of reaching everybody in every part of our boundless domain. To use Miss Willard's own graphic language:

"Two years ago, in the home of Mrs. J. C. Johnson, of Memphis, Tenn., who was, at that time, president of the state W. C. T. U., I met a niece of Mrs. J. who was also a near relative of General ———. I was speaking of the many different departments of the National Union, its work for railroad employes, foreigners, etc., when this beautiful and accomplished young lady exclaimed with earnestness and emotion, 'Oh, I wish you'd add another department for the soldiers! My brother is a soldier.' The thought had long been in my own mind, and I endeavored to enlist the young lady in active work along this line, and through her to secure the co-operation of influential people connected with the army and navy. But this not proving practicable I recommended in my annual address, at Louisville, the appointment of a superintendent for the department of Gospel Temperance Work among Soldiers and Sailors. It seems like poetic justice that a pure and gentle girl, tenderly interested to protect her brother from the bad habits so often induced by army life, should have been the procuring cause of this beneficent department of the W. C. T. U."

It requires but little investigation to convince even the superficial observer of the necessity for temperance work amongst these classes. Any resident of a town in the vicinity of a recruiting station, military or naval post, ship or Bethel, will tell you that "the ravages of drink amongst the soldiers and sailors are terrible." Newspaper reports of the condition of national homes for the battle-scarred veterans show that "while strong liquors are forbidden, rations of beer are furnished, that many do nothing but play cards or checkers, smoke tobacco, spin yarns and drink beer day after day." As a consequence, disgraceful scenes of disorder and drunkenness are of frequent occurrence.

The monotony of army life in time of peace, and the temptations induced by idleness and lack of incentive to noble living, are strikingly set forth in the simple language of some of my "boys in blue" in the far away territories. To quote from letters received thanking me for valentines sent to them last February: "It really does one good to think that some one is looking after our interests. I am sorry to say that drinking is so very prevalent among army people. If any excuse can be made for the use of what produces such demoralizing effects, then they of all people are most excusable, especially those that are stationed in a country like this (Arizona) with no comforts, and nothing to attract attention from one's own self."

Another from the same territory, but stationed at a different fort, writes: "I believe what you say of alcohol. It is the means of all sin and crime; it causes the soldier to sell his clothes and boots, to borrow and steal, to blaspheme and curse his comrades; then follows desertion. I may tell you there are only two total abstainers (a German boy and myself) in the whole company. There are a few who are termed moderate drinkers, but I have no better opinion of them than of the others who are guilty of destroying the reason given them by God. I have been a total abstainer since the day I left my dear old home in bonnie Scotland." Then he praises God for the special grace conferred upon him in the power to resist temptation.

Another says: "It is a good thing for some one to take the temperance work in hand for there is plenty of work to be done." One tender-hearted fellow who hadn't forgotten his mother's caresses before the romance of gleaming guns and martial tread, of beating drums and loud huzzas tempted him to follow the flag, says: "It makes me glad to know that some one thinks of us soldiers and sailors." A Swede in broken English and bad spelling utters his convictions bluntly thus: "I belief your letter, it's true! I don't drink myself, but I'm sorry it's only one in fifty that do not drink. It's true that alcohol destroys the soul and there's no strength nor life in it. I agree with you!" God bless these brave lads. Somebody at home is praying for them! But some most zealous Christian workers are not convinced of the necessity of any efforts on this line beyond the men who guard the outposts and the seaboard, forgetful that the liquor curse has visited the citizen soldier and the veteran at our doors as well. "A young man with an empty sleeve was arrested and brought to trial before a judge of the court in one of our large cities. He said he was a sergeant in the United States cavalry, and as he drew out of his pocket a half empty whisky flask he said,' 'In Sheridan's raid in the valley of Winchester, when our commander came down to rally us I swung out that arm, and the shot of the enemy carried it off.' And then holding up the bottle he said, 'The only enemy I have ever met who has conquered me is that.'"

Some argue as a reason against any effort on behalf of volunteer associations, that the military orders prohibit the sale of spirituous liquors within the encampments of such troops. And that is true. So stringent were the regulations at Peekskill, in our own state, last summer, when the famous Twenty-second regiment encamped there for drill and instruction, that, to the honor of the officers be it said, they not only prohibited the sale of "spirituous" liquors, but also wine, ale and beer; and none of these liquors, not even tonics, could be used, except upon the prescription of the post surgeon. The same newspaper article, however, gives the following triumphant account of a siege of the enemy, by open batteries, which he knew would render futile all the prohibitory orders within the citadel: "Dealers in liquid refreshments are laying in large stocks of beverages, and are indulging large expectations. The pyramid of empty beer kegs in front of the Hudson Avenue House, trophies of last year's interchange of courtesies with the troops, has been gorgeously painted with the national colors, in honor of the National Guards of the state of New York." The sequel to this was found a few days later in the disgrace of a gentleman who was drummed out of the encampment for drunkenness, and as his social position was unquestioned, he brought suit for a large sum of money against the officials for the publicity and exposure. Proof could be multiplied to almost any extent of the evils of intemperance in our army and navy by this plain method of presenting facts of recent occurrence. Look, for instance, at the shameful departure from sobriety amongst the officers of the navy connected with the Asiatic squadron last year, which resulted not only in the loss of the fine ship Ashuelot, but in the sacrifice of nearly a dozen human lives, and in the humiliation and expulsion from the service of several officers. During the investigation an amusing explanation was given by a brother officer of his bad habits in speaking of his frequent fits of intoxication as an "idiosyncracy," which reminds me of a certain captain's testimony with regard to the assistant engineer, who drank deeply for several days, and he says, "I was obliged to remonstrate with him, and order the wine-boy not to supply him with anything from the wine mess."

In former days, before esthetic culture gave refined names to sensual indulgence, we read that on the 10th of April, 1803, the United States squadron, under Captain Morris, sailed for Tripoli, when a heavy explosion was heard not far from the magazine, "just as the music had been beating to grog." We have banished the grog and taken to wine and when "high license" prevails in New York, I suppose the poor man will be deprived of his rum, but the rich man will still sip his champagne!

That there is necessity for specific temperance work as well as evangelistic effort is shown by the admission of those who have been longest engaged in the work of evangelism in large cities. The New York Port Society, for instance, after sixty-five years of effort declares the liquor traffic to be the greatest obstacle to its success. Hear the wails and discouragements of all Christian workers until temperance is combined with gospel preaching:

Miss Cotton, afterwards Lady Hope, author of "The Coffee Room," when despairing at the lack of response to the appeals to the men in her audience said, "Why is this hardness of heart? Why will you not come to Jesus?" A man cried out, "Oh! ma'am, it's the drink, it's the drink." Yes, it is ever the drink, that lies and deceives and lulls the souls into fancied security; that sings a siren song of peace and safety.

At the first it sings, "Drink and be merry, drink and drown dull care, drink and rejoice in all the good things God hath given thee to enjoy." At the last it sings in cruel mockery, "Drink deeper, for the cares will not drown. Drink ever, until the waters of oblivion put out the fires that first glass kindled! But in that hopeless picture the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched!"

The limits of such a paper as this, forbid a tribute of praise I would like to render to the distinguished men of the past and present history of our country, who have filled positions of trust in our army and navy. Men with the highest principles of honor and purity; men, who won for us the place we now occupy as a republic amongst the proud monarchies of Europe, and the splendid but decaying empires of eastern magnificence.

To those who fought on the seas, and defended the soil from foreign invasion with such bravery and patriotism, is due the homage of grateful hearts in this wonderful 19th century. We owe to these loyal defenders the priceless heritage of liberty which we and our children enjoy, and now, what more of homage and respect shall we as women, mothers and educators, not owe them in this time of our country's peril, when, in the peaceful period since our civil strife, these brave soldiers have faced a more cruel foe than "war's horrid front." They have been learning to dread the encroachments of that stealthy enemy who has entrenched himself within the citadels which they had thought impregnable because of the banishment of distilled liquors. They are now ready to give us the aid and co-operation we seek. A valiant officer, noted for his scientific exploits in astronomical observations, as well as for qualities of seamanship, said to me not long ago, while regretfully admitting the prevalence of drunkenness in the navy, "Nothing can save the victims but the transforming grace of God, through our Lord Jesus Christ." This testimony and the respect shown to the chaplains, proves the deep, religious tone which stirs the hearts of officers in the training squadron who seem to realize the responsibility of the trust committed to them, in the care and education of the boys under their control.

Besides this testimony, so in harmony with our views of the necessity of Divine power for casting out the demon of intemperance, a letter from the commodore of the squadron written on the flag-ship, stationed at Newport, says: "You will be glad to know we have a temperance organization on board, and we thank you heartily for your efforts on behalf of our boys."

A brigadier general of one of the great divisions of our United States army sends, through his adjutant, this cheering bugle note: "Your excellent association is working out a grand problem, and that you may meet with the success your efforts deserve, is not only the wish of General C——, but is that of all the officers under his command."

The captain of a ship just sailing for a foreign port writes, "This is truly a most valuable field amongst the boys, and is heartily appreciated by them. I am going to sail for the West Indies in a few days, and I am sorry to say that where wine is so cheap, only one cent a glass, the temptation for the boys is so strong that many give way. Sincerely wishing God's blessings on your noble work, I am etc., etc."

The chaplain of the flag-ship writes, "It gives me pleasure to return thanks for your kind interest, and that of your society, in sailors, and boys in training for the sea." The commander of another ship just starting for Lisbon, says, "Through me the boys wish to express how deeply indebted they feel towards you for the kind remembrance."

These "open doors" invite the entrance of the Christian temperance women in all the states and territories. There is work to be done, amongst the 7,000 seamen who navigate our great lakes, who, according to the testimony taken by the senate sub-committee on labor and education, spend their wages and degrade their manhood in the rum shops. There is work for our sisters in the south amongst the veterans in gray, who will soon be housed in comfort unalloyed for the remainder of life if the rum fiend is excluded.

Were time allowed, I could show the successes attendant upon the endeavors of a little more than a year in this department. What marvellous results have followed the work set in motion about sixteen years ago by Mrs. Caroline Fyffe, of England, and Miss Agnes Weston, for soldiers and sailors.

The story of the latter's efforts reads like a romance. A young lady of good birth and superior education, but skeptical in her religious views, stopping her ears and closing her eyes when compelled to go to church. After the conversion of this self-willed girl, she began to go about doing good, putting as much energy into the work for Christ's service, as formerly in the world. Sunday afternoons saw her devoted to laboring men, and amongst them she discovered, what all Christian friends have found the great drawback to be, intemperance. Consequently pledge-taking was introduced.

In 1868 her letter was written to a Christian soldier en route to India to join his regiment. When showing it to a seaman, he said, "We poor fellows have no friends. Do you think that lady would write to me? I would give anything to receive a letter like this." She wrote to him, and, in return, he inclosed the names of several sailors who wished letters.

NOTES FOR A WEEKLY BIBLE READING.

BY A PRESS SUPERINTENDENT ON HER OWN GROUND.

Psalm 68: 11. The Lord gave the word; great was the army (marg.) of those that published it. An old commentary says it is a singular fact that the word "published" is in the original rendered feminine, alluding to women joining in the songs of praise after victory. Ex. 15: 1 and Judges 5.

In ancient days when the diffusion of knowedge depended on the uncertain oral tradition, and on the hand-written word, great care was taken as to the writing, hence the institution of the scribes. Amongst other things their business was to transcribe the "roll of the law" so carefully that every letter was counted. Ezra was at once the "restorer and reformer" among the scribes after the captivity (Ex. 7: 6). Naturally enough the disseminators of knowledge who wore the "inkhorn at the girdle" (Ezek. 9: 2), became teachers of the people and the interpreters of the law. So Herod inquired of them (Matt. 2: 2) what they knew of the birth of Christ.

This superiority must have lifted them up with pride, for our Lord coupled them often with the Pharisees in denouncing "woe," (Matt. 23). In early Christian days the apostles were their own scribes, except indeed St. Paul, who employed others to write. (See the end of his epistles.) This was probably from some physical infirmity, in connection with his "thorn in the flesh." Now the epistles were open letters, for the most part written to the whole body of Christians in certain places, and had doubtless copies made of them at once for the sake of their free distribution (1 Thess. 5: 27). Several of these epistles contained news of the churches, besides the apostolic exhortations, reproofs, consolations and encouragements. For more than half this Christian era learning was solely in the hands of the church. The monks alone could copy out the manuscript books, and they alone could understand the dead languages in which they were written. They were indeed "dark ages" and the monks would fain have kept dark longer still, hiding their own "light under the bushel" of their monastaries.

But with the invention of printing a new era began, the era, when according to the prophet Daniel "the time of the end, when many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." (Dan. 12: 4.)

Now as the "preacher" said long years ago "of making many books there is no end" (Ecc. 12:12) and added to that there is no end to the reproduction of these many books, how essential that this preaching or teaching through the eye should not only be with acceptable words, (marg. 'words of delight') but that that which is written should be "upright," even words of truth, like goads and as nails fastened by the masters of assemblies, but given from one shepherd, (Ecc. 12: 10 )

In this latter day books seem to be resolving themselves very much into the more ephemeral reading of periodicals and newspapers. About 10,000 newspapers are published in these United States to be read by hundreds of thousands of thinking men and women. What hammers to drive in nails! What strong moulds to shape public opinion! What levers to turn it! How important to "possess this field," to have the temperance corner always ready in which to point to the hard fact, to reason out the solid argument, to tell the harrowing tale, that will make even the strong man weep, or narrate the lively anecdote to captivate the careless boy or girl, and so to go on sowing seeds of temperance truth, that will germinate and bear fruit, may be many days hence. God in His wisdom chose Ezra as his scribe and interpreter when the Hebrew language was becoming corrupt or forgotten, and so to preserve His written oracles for us. Now when whole peoples seem likely to degenerate and become nations of drunkards, God in His wisdom put it into the hearts of our W. C. T. U. women to "hold the fort" for temperance in these many newspapers, and into the hearts of their editors to permit and even welcome their entrance.

Let us make good use of our opportunities.

RUSSIAN TEA DBINKING AND GERMAN BEER DRINKING.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Nearly eleven months have elapsed since we landed on this side of the Atlantic, yet our interest in the temperance question has not waned a particle. All along the way, in every country which we have visited, we have watched the habits of the people, in this particular especially. On our way to St. Petersburg, from the time we left the German frontier, we discovered that the tea drinking custom was far more prevalent than the beer; in fact we failed to see beer at any of the restaurants where we stopped for luncheon in the two days' journey from Berlin. On two occasions we saw infinitesimal wine glasses filled and emptied, and we have seen the same proportions drank at our hotel; but, having watched the different phases carefully, we have come to the conclusion that tea drinking is largely substituted for beer and wine drinking in Russia. At the first station on the frontier we observed the waiters running to and fro with a liquid steaming hot, in tumblers, without foam, and very shortly caught the fume, which was tea like, and then we remembered that Russia claimed the art of tea making. The tea is served in tumblers with sliced lemon with lumps of sugar without milk, unless desired. The odor is appetizing and when one has drank of the tea once there is a strong and almost irresistible temptation to try it again. In walking through the streets of St. Petersburg, continuously one sees the teapots being carried hither and thither at breakfast and luncheon time, and the delicious odor which is emitted makes one thirst for that which does not inebriate at least. Being under restriction regarding self indulgence in the delicious commodity, doubtless the thirst has been tenfold, and we have broken the limits and drank tea in Russia without the baneful result of becoming intoxicated. We have been led to understand how irresistible must be the temptation to the reformed inebriate to break his pledge when he gets the odor of the stimulant that he has loved so much. Now having watched so minutely the different habits of the different countries, we have concluded that tea drinking is a good custom for Russia, and that there must be far less drunkenness on this account, and if good for Russia and obviates so much inebriety, why not good for other countries, when we consider that it is a harmless beverage, generally speaking? The coffee system in America has not been adopted as thoroughly as desirable, but has doubtless accomplished much good, but there is a great deal in the appearance of things. Tea, smoking hot on a chilly day, served in a tumbler, having been properly drawn, on a clean tray with sugar and lemon, is very attractive, and the odor far superior to rum punches and brandy smashes. The kutschers of the droschkens in Germany are continuously under the influence of beer and are positively stupid and bloated, beside lubberly, while the same in Russia are bright and agile, notwithstanding their cumbersome dress which is a tight fitting waist with long skirt gathered or plaited in at the waist like an old lady's dress. Under this is lined with sheepskin, and thus rendered quite bulky. A fancy belt is worn around the waist, and on the head a low hat with curved brim or a turban. On seeing these in the back one is led to believe that they look like fat huckster women. It is very laughable to see them sitting on the low seat of the vehicle awaiting a call and when it comes to see them jump up and gather up their skirts, drive around, take you in, after the bargain is made, there being no restrictions or cab system in Russia, and drive off at railroad speed, as though they were striving to get out of gunshot range. These men compose the most ludicrous sight in St. Petersburg. There are other sights which excite, not laughter, but commiseration, of which we have not time to write now.

We have seen iced tea served in tumblers in America, but believe much of the odor is lost in the process of cooling, and thereby some of the flavor, but tea making has not been a hobby as in Russia. It has been a delight to us to get out of sight of the flaunting beer cup, and one having never seen the habits of the two countries could scarcely realize how impressive the contrast. There doubtless is a great amount of drunkenness in Russia, it would be strange if there were not, when the statistics tell us that wine is drank, but in the five or six days that we have been here we have not seen an intoxicated person, and this we attribute to the tea custom. We have only seen two of the kutschers asleep on their droschkens, and the number of these is legion, while at Berlin they fall asleep about as soon as they arrive at their stands. We have asked for the poor quarters and have been informed by the Swedish consul that there were none, but that the poor lived or were scattered here and there. The weather has been delightful, until today, which is rainy, reminding one of beautiful October days in America. It doubtless owes some of its charm to the fact that we left March weather at Berlin.

St. Petersburg is a fine and imposing city and from the top of the great cathedrel the view is grand. The Neva adds greatly to the sight, with its branches running in many directions. The Czar's palace is situated on its border and presents a commanding appearance, and so are many of the churches and public buildings, and a prospective view gives a very picturesque scene, very like Venice.

The Neva is open, but not all the way to the Baltic' which we regret. We are obliged to go to Stockholm via Helsingfors in Finland, and thus add expense to our journeyings, but shorten our sea voyage. Possibly before we shall have arrived we shall rejoice, for sea life at the best, to some, is poor enough. Of Sweden, Denmark and Norway we may find time to write in the future. While we esteem it a great privilege to view the land on this side the water, yet we count the days that bring us a day's march nearer our earthly home, and to the land of the free and the home of the brave. The oppression of the poor in Europe has led us to a greater appreciation of a land of freedom, and we do not wonder that they flock to the new world, and could they realize what freedom is, America would not contain the overflow.

HYGIENIC COOKING.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL.—Will you allow me a few words in view of the cooking receipt and the prospective cook book of our union?

Some years ago a friend loaned me a "Temperance Cook Book," published by one of our unions, and far less harmful would it be for most families to have wine jelly, or wine sauce put before them occasionally than ever to use many of the preparations noted therein. Pepper, mustard, vinegar, pickles, etc., with rich dishes of various kinds, appeared upon its pages so frequently, that good health and temperance could not possibly be the lot of those who habitually use its receipts and some of THE UNION SIGNAL receipts, I regret to say, bring this book to mind.

Miss Julia Colman in "The Problem of Thirst" says: "Another thing women could often do, but I am afraid they seldom think of it; they could provide food that is not thirst-provoking. How often it happens that women who send out their loved ones with an agony of prayer that they may be kept for the day, also send them with a breakfast that will make them almost frantic with thirst before they get to the first tavern; while it is very likely that no thought has been given either to the cause of the thirst, or to the means for assuaging it. * *

'Suppose we should find out, as one of the results of this agitation about the drink question, that our habits of eating, or rather of seasoning, have the effect to make everybody more thirsty, more likely to drink and less capable of resisting temptation, do you think it would be worth your while to act upon it and use less salt and other thirst-producing condiments?"

And what Miss Colman writes, we hear from all those who have seriously considered this question in this connection. Rich dishes, condiments, high seasoning, salt foods are so many pitfalls in the path of him who would lead a temperate life. And should not we who advocate temperance, use the word in its broadest sense? Should not "plain living and high thinking" be the aim of our workers?

Not the "plain living" that would make our tables unattractive and our dishes unpalatable; heaven forbid. But food selected for its nutritive qualities (not to please the palate and eye only), well and simply prepared, well-cooked and well-served.

Why should women spend hours of precious time and untold means and strength in concocting troublesome dishes that are, as a rule, only so many provocatives to indigestion, and intemperance in diet at least, with their countless attendant ills? Should not the temperate use of time, of health, of means, of everything be the aim of our workers? "A wicked waste of time" would apply to many dishes in common use, as well as to the salad of carefully molded turnips and carrots and beets etc., that we have just learned of in "Lectures on Cooking." And a "wicked waste of God's precious gifts" would apply to many of the forms into which some of them are frequently tortured and served.

And why spend so much time in preparing extravagant, harmful desserts when wholesome fruits and nutritious nuts have been showered upon us with such a lavish hand?

Would that our unions would take more interest in this subject of healthful living, a subject that comes home so closely to every one of us! Some of them are doing noble work; Michigan for instance, with Mrs. Dr. Kellogg in the van, but many of them know scarcely more of the subject than that hygiene and heredity have been added to our other departments of labor.

Mrs. Kellogg, our national superintendent of hygiene, a most reliable authority on all such subjects, is at present conducting a department in that most helpful of magazines, Good Health, called "The Cooking School," wherein have appeared excellent directions for wholesome breads of various kinds and where other good receipts for palatable, healthful dishes will undoubtedly appear from time to time.

If it were possible for Mrs. Kellogg and Dr. Mary Weeks Burnett, national superintendent of heredity, to superintend the preparation of a cook book for our union and our workers would use it in their homes, they would not so frequently be helping to destroy with one hand what the other is bravely trying to build up, healthy, wholesome physical bodies with no desire for artificial stimulation of any kind.

Yours for the cause,

MARGARET A. LAKE,

NOT CONNECTI-CUTTINGS.

MID SCENES OF OLD.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL.—Returning to the scenes and associations of sunny seminary days, I am reminded that years of life have more than doubled since the golden medal suspended upon a prophetic white ribbon, was presented by our beloved principal. The name of seminary and the date was engraven on the one side, my name and the motto "Excelsior" upon the other. We were told that the duties of life, would be measured by ability and opportunity, and were bidden to go forth and do what we could.

What changes the flying years have wrought! Some of the merry school girls of those days, now silver-haired, reign as queens in the homes where I am entertained. Many, including a beloved sister, have gone "beyond the river." Some have tasted the bitter sorrow into whose homes the "Piasau" has entered; and, tell it with shame and sadness, one of the brightest of our number, is a confirmed inebriate today.

I have filled appointments in the following places: Scottsville, Mumford and Wolcott, where anti-license prevails; a result, largely due to the efforts of the women.

At Charlotte, where seventeen saloons are arrayed against two churches, where a W. C. T. U. was recently organized, and is working bravely, even though sometimes wounded in the house of its friends.

At Spencerport, where a cheery union falters not, where the W. C. T. U. and the Band of Hope are to have an honored place in the procession on decoration day. Could anything be more oppropriate and inspiring?

At Greece I was delighted to present our cause in the church in which I made a profession of faith, and received the hand of fellowship into the church of Christ.

A union less than a year of age is doing nobly here. A temperance school, literature distributed, school books furnished, mass meetings held are included in their work. Some of the members, farmers' wives, in addition to church work, temperance work, not forgetting the care of completely ordered homes, are finding time for the Chautauqua course. While food for the body, in this magnificent garden county of western New York lies in fields of gold all around them, they must and do have food for heart and mind. This is perfection of country life.

At LeRoy a new union organized by Mrs. Decker is preparing for earnest work.

Last evening in the First Baptist church in Rochester, I reviewed the proceedings of the national brewers' convention held here last week. Doubtless you have a report of their proceedings. There was less of denunciatory language against "temperance fanatics" than in reports of former years, when Frederick Leauer, their deceased honorary president, pronounced the crusaders "roaring lionesses going round seeking whom they might devour." A monument is to be erected in memory of their champion, who it is safe to say, has gone where crusaders will trouble him no more.

Monroe county convention occurs on the 28 h and 29th. The fact that it has twenty-five unions, gives proof of faithful work. Leaders have organized, and conventions have brought together, instructed and strengthened the unions for local work. I have never visited a county where this was more evident. We need more county work.

The first week in June I go to Pittsburgh, then to New Jersey where our oldest daughter graduates June 12, then home to my silver wedding, to which all crusaders and W. C. T. U's. are cordially invited.

"AS ITHERS SEE US."

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I sent a copy of the manual I brought out for the foreign work in Illinois, to the Staats Zeitung, Chicago, the leading German newspaper of Illinois. I was rather surprised some days after to find that a column of editorial matter had been given to the manual, myself, and the W. C. T. U.

The editorial said it was correctly stated that "foreigners held the balance of political power in Illinois." It made very merry over the belief held by the W. C. T. U. that the Germans could be won to their ideas and grew bitterly sarcastic at the idea of a "leader" arising in Illinois to lead the German hosts, and sneered at the Germans who had already declared themselves for total abstinence and prohibition, but its utterances closed with the following significant passage:

"But this matter has a serious side to it. We can no longer remain with our eyes closed to the danger which threatens us from the ceaseless energy and tireless activity of the prohibitionists, and particularly from the efforts of the women prohibitionists. The work of these women is thoroughly systematized, and they labor not only for the conversion of the Germans to their doctrines, but for the Irish, Scandinavian and other nationalities, and of them all, no nationality is in such danger from the allurements of these women as the Germans."

I felt moved to make a response to the Staats Zeitung but to this date I have seen nothing of the letter in its columns, although fair play would seem to have demanded its publishment. I give the letter to our National organ thinking it may serve to point some future moral.

EFFINGHAM, ILL., May 19, 1884.

EDITOR STAATS ZEITUNG.—Dear Sir: Having seen your article in regard to the W. C. T. U. work, Manual and myself, I feel moved to make a few remarks which I have no doubt you will insert in your paper as I desire it. Of myself it may interest you to know, that although a native American, my family on every side but one is of Teutonic extraction.

The invitation which the W. C. T. U. constantly extends to unbelievers in "total abstinence" and "prohibition" doctrines is always this: "Come, let us reason together."

The great law of which the W. C. T. U. seeks fulfillment is: "Love the Lord with all thy heart, and thy neighbor as thyself." Herein is found our object and the incentive to our labors.

The "liquor traffic," is at this date the greatest obstacle and hindrance to the fulfillment of this law, upon which we are told "All the laws and prophets hang;" hence we attack it with all our powers.

The student of history finds passing through the ages a law of steady progression and growth. Some call it 'Fate," others "Destiny," yet others, "The will of God." But by whatever name this law is known, it is persistent, steady, irresistible, inexorable, fulfilling itself. "Vassalage" fell before its clear light; "serfdom" vanished in its pure ether; "monarchies," crumbled into ashes before its splendor; the shackles of human slavery, were melted by its fervent heat. And now the "liquor traffic," by the action of the self same law is going to its inevitable end! The hand of man is powerless to arrest its destruction.

History, science, law, labor and religion are on our side. Each interrogated says "No!" to the drinking of alcoholics, be they of beer, or of fluids stronger in the portion of alcohol they contain. We should decry the Teutonic brain and heart were we to do otherwise than say, "In time they too will see the truth." "They have not as yet studied this subject as we have."

Nature interrogated will answer the German and American alike. History will repeat the same facts to both. Science will deliver the same truths to each. Labor, law and religion cannot deceive either. The higher nature of each will question the "liquor traffic." The brain of each will grasp its import to the race and its relation to the nation. The social hearts will vibrate in unison, and German and American will grasp hands and bid the traffic in alcoholics "Go!" and the law of fate, of "destiny," the "will of God," inevitable, irresistible, will be established. ADA H. KEPLEY.

A LOVING TRIBUTE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Please allow me through our paper to give tribute to the memory of Mrs. L. B. Barrett, for so many years secretary of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. She passed out of this life from her home in Somerville, May 23, after a few weeks illness, but she left a record of faithful service behind her. All through our state, her name has been a household word a synonym for loyal, generous, unfailing love to the temperance cause.

Those who know her personally have lost a friend in the highest sense of the word, a friend most sensitive in honor, chivalrous and faithful. She was a woman; with the artist's nature but of most practical life. Her brush wrought flowers, her pen wrote the signal service of our work in this state, her words were courage, her life was inspiration. No praise for her can be overdrawn; she was "a living epistle." "Give her of the fruit of her hands, and let her own works praise her in the gates."

After an intimate knowledge of her work and the gift of her friendship, I desire to lay this simple tribute of love upon her memory. Again the alabaster box is broken but the odor of the ointment shall fill all our state. And it was broken at the Master's feet.

Yours sincerely,

LOUISE S. BAKER.

MISS WILLARD'S ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

To the White Ribbon Army:—DEAR SISTER SOLDIERS—Our little Dane, Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, has proved potent in her determination to interest you in some "work shop" furniture which has only arrived and I wish you could see how wonderfully convenient, comfortable and helpful, the "new arrangements" are. Indeed I reproach myself for having a real "Wooton desk, as handsome as Lucretia Garfield's," and, as a choice was given me between a chair and sofa, one of the latter species was selected, and is so fine that I have put it in the parlor where all comers might behold the added fitness that its comfort lends to "Rest Cottage," the name of our "sweet home." Dear, generous hearts, I thank you and so does mother and "my right hand" (as Mary Lathrop has aptly christened "our Anna Gordon"). But know all women "by these presents," that I will not permit you to spend any more money on yours ever, affectionately and faithfully,

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

P. S.—Miss Effie Kilbourne, of THE UNION SIGNAL staff of helpers, in publishing department, has worked out by correspondence, the problem of causing all this to come to pass, and she it was who sent me the motto that adorns the desk-front and meets my frequent gaze; "From the White Ribbon stations all along the line."

A NEW ACCESSION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I know you will rejoice to herald he coming of Mrs. B. Pearson, that gifted officer of the British Woman's Temperance League (Margaret Lucas president) whose testimonials from Rev. Charles Garrett, J. H. Raper and other leaders in England I endorse. Let us do all in our power to give her a downright American welcome. Mrs. Buell is advised of her coming and New York ladies will not be backward I am sure in testifying our cousinly regard. I hope to be in Chicago when Mrs. P. arrives if my itinerary will permit, and to welcome her to our annual meeting at St. Louis, Oct. 20.

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

REV. DR. and MRS. A. J. GORDON, of Boston, sailed last week for Liverpool, expecting to take their vacation of several weeks mainly in England. Let English temperance workers take notice.

HAWKS OR DOVES?

If words
Were birds,
And swiftly flew
From tips
Of lips
Owned, dear, by you;
Would they,
Today,
Be hawks and crows?
Or blue,
And true,
And sweet? Who knows?

Let's play
Today
We choose the best;
Birds blue
And true,
With dove-like breast!
'Tis queer,
My dear,
We never knew
That words,
Like birds,
Had wings and flew!

KINDERGARTEN TEMPERANCE LESSON.*

MRS. V. J. KENT.

Jno. 5: 39. Prov. 27: 12.

What have you on your lesson card today? What kind of a book is it meant to be? (Teacher read Jno. 5: 39.) What does search mean here? These were Jesus' own words, and He then meant for the people to whom He was preaching, to search their own writings, in which they believed, and which told about His coming to the earth, and see if His words were not true, for there were some people in those days, as well as in these, who did not believe in the words of Jesus. What does it mean to search? (Wait for answer.) Did any of you ever lose a ball, or a marble, or a top? I have seen little boys when they have lost such things in the street, get down and crawl under the sidewalk, and sometimes even pull up the boards, if they were able, to look for them, and even if should get covered with mud, or dust, or sand, would not care if they only found what they lost. They searched.

Did any of you little girls ever lose your picture book, or slate pencil, or some pretty beads, or your thimble, or some of your doll's clothes, or anything you valued very much, and look up stairs and down stairs, and all around in boxes and baskets, under the bed, and behind bureaus and trunks, just as faithfully as you could? Well then, you searched for it. These people that Jesus was talking to when He said, "Search the scriptures," had not been reading as carefully as they ought, and did not fully understand what they read. It is not well, or even safe, to read God's word hastily, or only a few words here and there, that your eyes may rest upon when you open the book. In the Bible we are told what we are to do, and be, but we must search to find it out, or have some one to do so for us if we are too little to do it for ourselves. There are wonderful things in God's book; beautiful prayers, beautiful promises, warnings, advice, commands, all of which we should read and understand as soon as possible. There are also in it stories, more beautiful and wonderful than any fairy stories, and all true, too.

On the other side of your lesson book you see is written, "Look not upon the wine when it is red." Some one, in searching the scriptures, found this verse, it was written by a very wise man, said to be the wisest man that ever lived. Why do you suppose this was written? Does it hurt anyone to just look at a thing? Would it make any of you sick to simply look at unripe fruit or vegetables, or a bottle of poison? Not if that was all you did, and then turned away without touching them. But it is unsafe for anyone, even to look on anything that is hurtful, because sometimes such things look pleasant and pretty, and may lead us astray. I once heard of a little boy, who in passing through a room in which a large dish of fruit stood on a table, just stopped to look at it. He thought it was so pretty, and really must be very sweet and ripe; how nice it must taste; how he longed to try it. It was not his, and he well knew that it was not meant for him to eat them. He walked around the table and kept looking until he put out his hand and took some, and became a poor little thief. Poor, foolish little boy! He felt very sorry and ashamed after he had taken it, and had a sad, sorrowful time of it before he could feel right and happy again. His first wrong step was in looking so long. If little children look at fruit which is unfit to eat, and keep looking at it until they fancy it is not so bad after all, and eat some, they will be apt to suffer for it. Our lesson says, "Look not thou upon the wine." Wine is generally of a pretty color, but it is a very dangerous thing to even look at, and the "wise man" tells us what happens to those who keep looking at it, they come to great sorrow and misery. Then there are several other things that don't look quite so pretty as wine, but are as dangerous to look at, that come in bottles and jugs and barrels and casks. Sometimes we see them in wagons and windows, on sidewalks and standing by doors. Some are marked XXX, which I believe means that the contents are extra good.

Can you children, tell me the names of some of these dangerous things? You understand, I hope, why it is not safe to even look on these things. It makes some people want to taste them, just as the little boy wanted to taste the fruit. Then if they taste them, they want more, and it makes them sick and unhappy, and cross and wicked; makes them treat their wives and children unkindly, and if they continue to use these dreadful things that come in these—what did I call them? they get poor and wretched, their families cannot have nice homes, or good clothes like those who do not use such things. I have even known of fathers and mothers who would learn to love this wicked stuff so that they would sell their clothes and their little children's clothes to get a little money with which to buy it. Would you think that anyone would even want to look at anything that could do so much harm? I don't like to see children looking in saloon windows, or little boys climbing up on the barrels outside, or standing near one of those dreadful places. Sometimes saloon keepers put beautiful flowers in their windows and trees at their doors, to try and make their place look attractive, and have bright colors about, which, of course, pleases little people. I always feel sorry for the poor innocent flowers, and wish I could move them into the homes of some of the poor mothers and children, whose husbands and fathers hide behind them, to help cheer them up when they are lonely and neglected. Perhaps, however, sometimes a miserable, sad man or woman may catch a glimpse of some of these pretty flowers, as they are going in and out of the saloon, and it might remind them of the same kind of flowers they had in their own homes or garden when they were innocent children like you are now, and it might help them to repent and be wise, and lead a new life. O, how I want every little boy and girl who hears this lesson to be wise and do as we are told "a prudent man" does when he sees anything to tempt him to go astray. (Teacher read Prov. 27: 12.) Remember how dangerous it is to look upon any kind of liquor. Hide away from it, don't look at it, or taste it, or handle it, if you can possibly help it, or you will surely suffer and perhaps be miserable forever.

* Cards for this lesson can be had for 25 cents per dozen from Mrs. V. J. Kent, 3203 Calumet Ave., Chicago, Ill.

THE STUBBS LETTERS. NO. II.

FROM AUNT JANE.

My Dear Peter:—Your good letter came this mornin'. I'm glad you write so well, but I'm more glad your notions are mostly of the true kind. Good writin' may be pretty easily learned with a little care. But if once bad notions get into a human soul it takes a deal of work to get 'em out, and to put the true kind in.

I don't wonder you was surprised to see your teacher smokin' a cigar. I'm surprised myself to hear of it. What I have to say about it is, he may know how to teach lessons from all the long-named books in half a dozen languages; but if he doesn't know that his tobacco is doin' the young things under his care a sight more harm than all his book learnin' is doin' 'em good, then it's high time the school board told him of it. The truth is, Peter, he may not know it, but he isn't fit to be a teacher.

There's one thing in your letter needs a little correctin'. And that is where you say the city lads has had better chances than you have. It may be some of 'em have had as good; none could have better.

All that about the fine churches with their tall steeples and big organs, and fiddles, and horns, amounts to jest nothin' at all, compared to your father's example, and your mother's good words and tender prayers.

Maybe some of them city lads has such a mother as you have Peter; if they have I say, "Thank God for it."

But I've heard that many of the mothers that live in the city, are so taken up with one thing and another, as not to know half the time where their boys are, much less what they're doing!

A fine church may be all very well, when we think of it as a place that human hands are tryin' to make good enough for the great and good God to own as His house. But old-fashioned people like me still keeps to the notion that steeples and towers and fiddles and horns is jest so much money wasted that might be spent to please God a great deal better. I was thinking only yesterday if all the church steeples in the United States could be turned into the money they cost and given to the Woman's Temperance cause what a blessed help it would be.

I have never been so poor, thank God, but I've always been able to lay by a little somethin' for churches and missions and the temperance work; but if any of my money has ever gone to help build a church steeple, Jane Jenkins has yet to hear of it. I've never meant it to go that way.

Write soon again to your loving Aunt Jane.

JOHNNY'S MATHEMATICAL CALCULATIONS.

Johnny was pouring over his mental arithmetic. It was a new study to him, and he found it interesting. When Johnny undertook anything he went about it with heart, head, and hand.

He sat on his high stool at the table, while his father and mother sat just opposite. He was such a tiny fellow, scarcely large enough to hold the book, you would scarcely think, much less to study and calculate. But he could do both, as you shall see.

Johnny's father had been speaking to his mother; and Johnny had been so intent on his book, that he had not heard a word; but as he leaned back on his high chair to rest a moment, he heard his father say, "Dean got beastly drunk at the club last night; drank ten glasses of wine. I was disgusted with the fellow."

Johnny looked up with bright eyes. "How many did you drink?"

"I drank one, my son," said the father, smiling down upon his little boy.

"Then you were only one-tenth drunk," said the boy reflectively.

"John!" cried his parent, sternly, in a breath; but Johnny continued with a studious air—

"Why, yes; if ten glasses of wine make a man beastly drunk one glass will make him one-tenth part drunk, and—

"There, there!" interrupted the father, biting his lip to hide the smile that would come; "I guess it's bedtime for you, and we'll have no more arithmetic tonight."

So Johnny was tucked away in bed, and went sound asleep, turning the problem over and over to see if he was wrong. And just before he lost himself in slumber he had thought, "One thing is sure; if Dean hadn't taken the one glass, he would not have been drunk. So it is the safe way never to take one, and I never will." And the next thing he was snoring, while Johnny's father was thinking—"There's something in Johnny's calculation, after all. It is not safe to take one glass, and I will ask Dean to sign a total abstinence pledge with me tomorrow." And he did so, and they both kept it. So great things grew out of Johnny's studying mental arithmetic, you see.—Christian at Work.

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S TALK.

Dear Children of the Prevention Army:—I want to tell you what two of our little soldiers thought our pledge meant, and how they kept it, and then I would like very much to have you tell me which was right, Freddie or Lulu.

Freddie's papa sometimes drank wine and so one day when Freddie came to dinner a bottle of wine was standing on the table. Just as soon as Freddie saw the bottle, he shut his eyes and hid his face, saying to his mamma, "Take it away, take it away!" "Take what away, Freddie?" his mamma asked: "Why, that bottle of wine. Don't you know the verse says, "Look not on the wine when it is red," and if I look at it I'll be breaking my pledge?" was Freddie's answer.

When Freddie's papa came in to dinner, his mamma told him what Freddie had said. His papa at once took the bottle and put it on the very highest shelf in the pantry, where Freddie surely could not see it and said, "If he feels that way about it I am sure I don't want him to have to look at it."

I don't know whether Freddie's papa stopped drinking wine or not, but I am very sure that Freddie was made very happy by his papa's putting the bottle away.

Now what do you think Lulu, and she is just one of the sweetest, cutest little girls you ever saw, said and did? It was one Sunday, and Lulu had just come home from Sunday school. Her mamma had been drinking a little wine, to make her stronger I suppose, but the little soldiers in our Band of Hope army have learned that anything which has alcohol in it makes people weaker instead of stronger, and there was just a little left in the glass. Lulu's bright eyes spied the glass, and she had learned to love what she saw in it. So she said, "O, mamma, let me have the rest!" "But, Lulu," said her grown up sister, "you've signed the pledge and belong to the Band of Hope, and you'll tell a story if you drink it." Lulu hesitated just a minute and then she said, "O, I can shut my eyes and drink it." Lulu's mamma laughed at her little girl's cuteness, and Lulu shut her eyes and drank the wine.

Which was the bravest, truest little soldier, Freddie or Lulu, and which one are my little soldiers going to imitate? I hope, and am very sure, every one will answer, "Freddie." CAPTAIN DEBORAH.

BETTER WHISTLE THAN WHINE.

As I was taking a walk early in September, I noticed two little boys on their way to school. The small one stumbled and fell; and though he was not very much hurt, he began to whine in a babyish way—not a regular roaring boy cry, as though he were half killed, but a little cross whine.

The older boy took his hand in a kind, fatherly way, and said:

"Oh, never mind, Jimmy, don't whine; it is a great deal better to whistle."

And he began in the merriest way a cheerful boy whistle.

Jimmy tried to join in the whistle.

"I can't whistle as nice as you, Charlie," said he; "my lips won't pucker up good."

"Oh, that is because you have not got all the whine out yet," said Charlie; "but you try a minute, and the whistle will drive the whine away."

So he did; and the last I saw or heard of the little fellows, they were whistling away as earnestly as though that was the chief end of life.

A LITTLE Quaker boy, about six years old, after sitting like the rest of the congregation in silence, all being afraid to speak first, as he thought, got up on the seat, folded his arms over his breast, murmered in a clear sweet voice just loud enough to be distinctly heard on the front seat: "I do wish the Lord would make us all gooder, and gooder, and gooder, till there is no bad left.

IN MEMORIAM

MRS. L. B. BARRETT,
Secretary of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., died May 24, 1884.

ALICE CORA HAMMOND.

Above her placid brow th' immortelle twines,
The victor's palm rests in her passive hand.
Foremost among the strong, tried souls who stand,
And wage a hopeless war 'gainst serried lines
Of sin and woe, that ravage all the land,
She still held place; thrilled with a purpose grand,
Yet calm, as one who all to God resigns.
Out of the heat and burden of the day,
Out of the stir, and throb, and ache of life,
God called her; and His loving hand stretched down
To guide her, as she trod death's fearsome way,
To greet her, weary from the bitter strife,
With the blest words, "Well done, receive thy crown."

CHILDREN AND WINE.

ELSIE HAVEN.

A pampered child of fortune comes rolling home in the small hours of the morning unmistakably drunk. The mother, almost heart-broken, inveighs bitterly against some one who has led her idolized son astray. The promises he makes at her solicitations are soon forgotten, and ere the world is many suns older he is taken home again in the same condition, this time more callous to mother's tears and father's stern commands. This gradually becomes a common occurrence, and Dame Rumor begins to talk: "So and so has become a confirmed drunkard. I cannot imagine whom he gets it from. His father does not drink to excess."

The mother wonders from whom he inherits this terrible appetite. Mother, this sorrow that is silvering your once beautiful hair, and ploughing furrows of care on your face was, bred at your own table, and at the tables of the most honorable members of the "charmed circle." From childhood your boy has been accustomed to see wines from the finest vintages in the world on your own table, and you drinking the sparkling beverage with evident enjoyment. Child like he asks for some. You give him just a little sip. The habit grows stronger, until now many glasses are required to quench the feverish thirst that possesses him.

This fashion of having wine on the table has been the ruin of many a noble boy who today might stand high in the estimation of a fastidious world. "But," you say, "society demands it and we cannot be odd. We must conform to the rules society lays down. A dinner without wine would be a failure." Aye, society demands it, and at the same time your son's honor pays the price of your compliance.

"My son is above such degrading habits as excessive drink," you say with conscious pride in voice and face. "Only the children of the vulgar get drunk. My child belongs to one of the first families of the country, and is above that."

You sweep away and the next moment you are drinking a glass of sparkling wine and thinking, "How foolish these ill-omened croakers are. How can there be harm in such a nice drink."

Satan's most evil deeds are clothed in the most guileless manner, and so it is with this. A glass of rare old wine will make more drunkards than a hundred glasses of whisky, from the simple fact that wine is in constant use in the best of families, while the very idea of whisky is scouted and consigned to the lower ranks of society.

Fathers and mothers, if you love your children, and wish for their welfare and peace, both in this world and the next, banish wine from your table. Teach the little ones the evil effects of the wine cup, and the dangers of appetite.

Throw the demands of society to the winds and in after years you will have your reward in the virtues of your sons and daughters.

THOUGHTS FOR WEARY HOURS.

MRS. J. S. COLLINS.

The time will come in the experience of many of God's children, when they will be laid aside from the active duties of life, by physical weakness and infirmity—when the frail tenement will appear to be giving way under disease, and the mind refuse to serve as it was wont to do, when the physician's orders must be imperatively obeyed, and books, papers and studies be put away and rest and quiet enjoyed. Then will come days, and months perhaps, of inactivity of body and mind, and consequent weariness. O how hard, under such circumstances, to look up to our Heavenly Father with the eye of faith and say from the heart, "Not my will but thine be done." To feel that we can trust Him implicitly in those things which we cannot understand, and which run counter to our plans.

Yet if we would have the peace and tranquility of mind so necessary to health, all must be left without reserve with Him "who doeth all things well." At this point God can change our trials into blessings. All our way will then be seen to have been marked out in Infinite wisdom. We shall be made to feel there has not been one pang too great, or sorrow that was not needed to discipline us for life's duties.

The longest days thus spent are not lost for we shall be brought into closer communion and fellowship with Christ the great burden bearer.

Then what joy will come to the burdened soul in simply trusting in the Lord, living daily in union with Him! His presence in the sick chamber will be more precious than all besides; and His gracious influence will continue with us. Then weary waiting one, can you not trust Him? Can you not sing of mercy as well as judgment? In all your afflictions He is afflicted. He is preparing you for the eternal rest which is in store for all His faithful children.

"For our light affliction which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

TOPIC: OBEDIENCE TO LAW.

LESSON TEXT.—Romans 13: 1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Let every soul be subject to the higher powers. Romans 13: 1.

TIME AND PLACE the same as in previous lessons.

1. Society is not of man's creation but of God's. God has instituted the government of society. He has ordained powers. He commands respect and submission thereto. If there were more inculcation of this truth in our system of education it would be better for our children and young people. We come of revolutionary stock. All our traditions run back to the resistance to tyranny. All our early heroes were rebels. Our children are taught to venerate them, to celebrate their anniversaries and to regard them as patron saints. Consequently we have hereditary influences to counteract by the constant education toward respect for the "powers that be." England has its traditions all the other way. The government is everything. The king rules by Divine right. Rebellion is treason and treason is the most heinous crime. We must endeavor to build up alongside of our republican institutions, such reverence for authority as God commands, and then hope that vox populi will be vox Dei.

2. It is a relief to a good man's conscience to know just whom he should obey. Laws are often contrary to his convictions, and he hesitates in regard to his responsibility to obey and enforce them. God has ordained the higher power. That much is settled. God, more or less, controls this higher power. That helps our submission. His word says "be subject to it." That puts the matter beyond question, except where the higher power undertakes to usurp God's authority or dictates action contrary to His command. Then duty is plain, for duties never conflict. The higher power must give way to the highest.

3. Governmental tribute or tax is honored by both Christ and his apostles. It is said that the early Christians surprised and often disarmed the opposition of the Roman officials, by their prompt payment of taxes. Tertullian says that what the government lost by the refusal of the Christians to bestow rich gifts on heathen temples, they gained in the conscientious payment of taxes. This is another point of failure with us in these "last days." The government seems corrupt. Large expenses, and the enriching of private individuals, and public plunder fall upon the tax payers till they feel themselves justified in resorting to an evasion of the proper returns. Tax-paying becomes odious, and the saying is current that men will do anything to avoid "death and taxes." Patriotic notions in the payment of tax have well nigh disappeared, and why? Because we do not regard the government as of God, nor its support as much a divine command as any given.

4. The idea of love as a debt, is purely a gospel idea. Christ cut down the Decalogue to two commands which contained the spirit and essence of the whole. "Thou shalt" took the place of "Thou shalt not," and love was forevermore declared to be our obligation to God and our neighbor. It is the keystone of the social arch. It worketh no ill. It is the fulfilling of the law.

All liquor dealers are breakers of this commandment on which hang all the law and the prophets. Rev. Albert Barnes says, "He that sells his neighbor liquid fire, knowing what must be the result of it, is not pursuing a business which works no ill to him." It brings every ill, and cannot be the fulfilling of Divine law, but its flagrant violation.

THE MEMORIAL AT THE NATIONAL REPUBLICAN CONVENTION.

Fresh from its triumphs in the Greenback convention, on Tuesday, June 3, the W. C. T. U. prohibition memorial in forty-eight states and territories, sought audience from the great assembly in the Exposition Building, Chicago, where were gathered eight hundred and ten representatives from these same states and territories. There were no proscenium boxes at our service, as at Indianapolis, and scarcely a seat anywhere for our National president. First it was necessary to secure the presentation of the memorial by a delegate, and who should be more appropriate to the work than some one of the noble champions of prohibition in Iowa? The first choice of all concerned was for the Hon. W. G. Donnan, a member of the upper house of the Iowa legislature, and also of this convention. He it was who presented the successful prohibition bill in the senate, and so promptly that it was known throughout the session as Senate Bill No. 1. Mr. Donnan cheerfully accepted the charge, saying that he regarded it rather as an honor conferred than a task imposed. True to his historic promptitude the memorial was presented at the first session, immediately after the selection of the temporary chairman. An effort was made to refer it to the committee on resolutions without reading, but Mr. Donnan bravely contended that the voice of a noble organization of women should be heard in that convention, and the reading was allowed.

Senator Blair, who was in attendance upon the convention, the next day offered by Senator Rawlins, of New Hampshire, the following resolution which abundantly supplemented the W. C. T. U. memorial.

Whereas, The evils of the traffic in alcoholic beverages are great and general, and in the belief of many of the people are such as to require a change in the constitution of the United States in order that by the co-operation of state and national legislation there may be a more efficient exercise of the right of society to control that traffic, and to remove the evils thereof: and,

Whereas, It is essential to the growth of republican institutions, and the preservation of constitutional liberty, that the right of the people to amend the fundamental law should be freely exercised; therefore,

Resolved, That this convention recommends the submission by congress to the legislatures of the states of a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the constitution of the United States providing for the prohibition of the traffic in alcoholic beverages, that the same may be adopted or rejected, according to the will of the people.

This was also referred to the committee on resolutions together with the memorial of the Maryland Temperance Alliance and one or two others of similar import. By the effort of Senator Blair a hearing was obtained before this committee on behalf of his resolution and the W. C. T. U. memorial, and on Wednesday afternoon a delegation of the W. C. T. U. accompanied Miss Willard and Senator Blair to the committee room at the Leland Hotel, where the full committee listened courteously to the arguments of both.

Senator Blair in introducing the matter said that he was there not merely to champion the resolution offered by Senator Rawlins, but to speak in behalf of that organization which he regarded as one of the most influential and significant that has ever undertaken to mould and educate public sentiment. He spoke of its wide extent, its minute ramifications and its magnificent possibilities. He pleaded for the recognition of its aims and purposes as an organization of women devoted to the interests of the country and of that party which should most wisely and bravely support the cause of home and native land. His eloquent and cogent appeal was cut short by the chairman as exceeding the time limit of five minutes. A motion was made to give Miss Willard fifteen minutes instead of five and carried by a large majority. Miss Willard then addressed the committee as follows:

Gentleman: The temperance women of America have never before asked for one moment of your time. Thousands of them have worked and prayed for your success in the heroic days gone by, but up to this hour, they have laid no tax on the attention of the people's representatives in presidential convention assembled. But though the position is a new one, I can not count myself other than at home in your presence, gentlemen, as you represent that great party, which, on the prairies of Wisconsin, my honored father helped to build, and whose early motto roused my girlish enthusiasm, "Free soil, free speech, free labor, and free men." But I rejoice today in the sisterhood of the women's party—the Woman's Christian Temperance Union—where I may march side by side with that brilliant southern leader, Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, of South Carolina, who in our new anti-slavery war, the fight for a free brain, is my beloved coadjutor.

I am here in no individual character, but as the delegated representative of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of forty-eight states and territories, including the District of Columbia, to present to your thought the memorial of the American home against the American saloon. You will notice that we make no account of foreign drink customs but speak and work directly against an institution which derives its authority from our own government. Our society is the lineal descendant of that whirlwind of the Lord known as the "Woman's Temperance Crusade," of 1874, and stands not only for total abstinence and prohibition, but for no sectarianism in religion, no sectionalism in politics, no sex in citizenship. We recognize state rights as to the adoption of these principles, but move forward in one grand, solid phalanx—a society as well known in Florida as it is in Oregon by the results of the last ten year's work; a society that has an open hand for the Catholic as for the Protestant, and for the foreign as well as the native-born.

We know that in America the great clanging mill of government, kept in motion at enormous cost, turns out just one product, and that is protection for life and limb and property. But it seems to us women that the citadel of purity, the palladium of liberty, the home, our brothers have forgotten adequately to protect. Therefore I am here today to speak on behalf of millions of women, good and true, but grieved and sorrowful, to ask that the guarantees and safeguards of law shall be stripped from the saloons of my country; that their tarnished gold shall no more pollute our treasury, and that the land we love may at once and forever go out of partnership with the liquor traffic.

Gentlemen, some political party will respond to this plea from the hearts of women asking for protection from a stimulant which nerves with dangerous strength the manly arm that God meant to be woman's shelter and protection, so that man's cruelty becomes the greatest toward those he loves the best. Some party will declare that when our best beloved go forth into life's battle they shall not have to take chances so unequal in the fight for a clear brain, nor run the gauntlet of saloons legalized and set along our streets. Some party will take to heart this object lesson of "The Nation's Annual Drink Bill," shown in the chart I have had placed before your eyes today, with its nine hundred millions for intoxicating liquors to five millions for the spread of Christ's gospel.

The greenback convention has already received with favor this memorial. Senator Donnan, our gallant Iowa champion, has secured its reading in your own great convention and its reference to your committee. Tomorrow you will act upon it. On July 8 it will be presented to the democratic convention in this city, and on July 23 to that of the prohibition home protection party in Pittsburg, Pa.

A great chief of your party who was with us as the hero of your last convention, said that not in the turmoil of politics, but at the sacred fireside hearth does God prepare the verdict of a great, free people. Let me say, gentlemen, that the party which declares for national prohibition in 1884 will be the one for which the temperance women of this land will pray and work, circulate literature, convene assemblies, and do all in our power to secure its success. Nor is the influence of these women to be forgotten or lightly esteemed as the past has sufficiently proved. While I have tried to speak, my spirit has been sustained and soothed by the presence of that devoted army whom I am here to represent. As womanly, as considerate, as gentle as the women of the W. C. T. U. from Alabama to Wyoming would wish me to be in this presence, I have tried to be, that I might justly represent them—good-natured as sunshine, steadfast as gravitation, persistent as a Christian's faith. I have no harsh word to speak of any. The liquor traffic is the lawful heritage of a less wise, less kind, and less enlightened past. For its existence in this gentler age we are all more or less responsible.

Let us combine to put it away "with malice toward none, with charity for all." Daughters of heroes and sisters of patriots are those for whose dear sake I have dared to speak today. DeTocqueville said: "Life is neither a pleasure nor a pain; it is serious business, to be entered on with courage and in a spirit of self-sacrifice." Gentlemen, in that spirit I have tried to speak—not because I wished to be heard, but to represent, as best I could, the homes of America in their sacred warfare against the American saloon. May God lead and guide us all into lives and deeds of tenderest charity and divinest toil for the sorrowful and weak.

Some of us have sung the Miriam song of this great party in other days, and whether we shall, e'er long, chant its requiem depends upon whether the party shall be as true to living issues of the present as it was true to living issues in the past. For

> New occasions teach new duties;
> Time makes ancient good uncouth;
> They must upward still and onward
> Who would keep abreast of truth.

We ask you to declare in favor of submitting to the people a national constitutional prohibitory amendment.

Gentlemen, on behalf of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, I thank you for this courteous hearing.

At the conclusion of Miss Willard's remarks, which did not occupy more than twelve of the fifteen minutes allotted her, the W. C. T. U. delegation withdrew with Senator Blair, whose generous devotion to our cause and its presentation to the representative republicans of the country will long be remembered. His unconscious bravery and unostentatious consecration of life and effort are worthy to be written deep in the hearts of the women who themselves have dared and devoted all to God and home and native land. Due honor too was given in all minds to Senator Donnan, taking material shape in a beautiful basket of roses, from which hung long streamers of white ribbon, which was sent to his seat in the convention with the following note:

Hon. Mr. Donnan:—OUR BRAVE, KIND FRIEND—The W.C.T.U. will not soon forget the gallant Iowan who dared to stand up for our cause and claim and secure for us a hearing. May the years strew honors on your path as thickly as these flowers are crowded, which feebly represent to you our gratitude.

On behalf of the National W. C. T. U.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, Pres.

To which Mr. Donnan responded most gratefully and appropriately as follows:

Miss Frances Willard, Pres. N. W. C. T. U.:—MY DEAR MADAM—Your exquisite basket of flowers, and all too complimentary note have just been received.

The service to which you refer was so slight, and at the same time so agreeable, as to call for no such beautiful reward.

May the day be not far distant when it will be entirely inappropriate, anywhere, to say that it requires 'bravery' to stand up for your cause.

Sincerely yours, W. G. DONNAN.

And now what was the result of this well-timed, well-executed program? For answer read the platform of the Republican party for 1884, adopted unanimously and without debate. See how respectfully this party doffs its hat to the great labor interests of the country, how it bows with servile devotion to manufacturing corporations, agricultural industries, speaks out with no uncertain sound against "Chinese cheap labor," and makes a brave thrust at Mormonism, but is as silent as the grave on that burning question as to what shall be done with the great evil from which labor needs protection far more than from capital; which cripples manufactures and all industries by undoing skilled artisanship; which competes with the workman of today more disastrously than Mongolian hordes, and makes home even more horrible than the mere pretence of home furnished by Mormonism. Not a single intimation is given in this unanimous expression of the party that seeks to rule our land, of the presence in that land of an agency that works more destruction and ruin than "the combined evils of war, pestilence and famine." Not a hint of better days that shall comfort the thousands who sit in the shadow of darkened homes—women who have given their best beloved to their country in its time of need, and now look for their country's help in their hour of legalized distress. It is hard to believe that parties are soulless, heartless, hard to believe that of all others, the party which wreaked itself on heart-expression in its infancy, has grown so cold to human suffering as this platform of its maturity would seem to evidence. If policy now rules where principle first inspired, then it only remains for the people actuated by principle, to indicate the particular policy which shall rule. This may necessitate the present and temporary sacrifice of the party which gives up all for policy. Nevertheless the greatest good of the greatest number requires it.

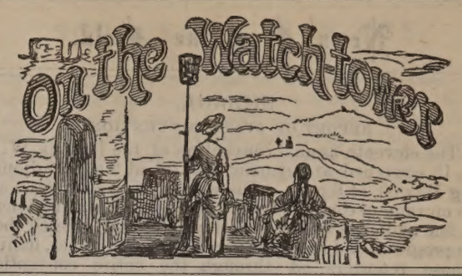
GOVERNOR CLEVELAND has signed the bill prohibiting the sale of illustrated police papers and others of that "ilk" to minors. The children of the Empire State are the care of its legislature this year.



I see that the Topeka dram shops are preparing to re-open, and depend upon Gov. Glick to keep them out of jail.

"The sanguine Ada," is the cognomen applied by the Illinois Staats Zeitung to Mrs. Ada Kepley, because of her hopeful view of the German vote, as set forth in her little manual, which ought to be in the possession of every local union in the state.

Mrs. E. L. Saxon, state organizer for the Tennessee W. C. T. U. is not exactly "waxing valiant in fight," for she was all that long ago, but the state is greatly pleased and strengthened by her brave and persistent efforts. On our trip from Athens to Nashville she made thirty-one addresses, organizing nine W. C. T. unions and one prohibition club.

The entire south is humming like a beehive. Honey is making, plenty of it, and the queen bee whom all hearts follow, is Mrs. Sallie Chapin, of course. She organizes unions with a membership of hundreds, Bands of Hope ditto, and keeps up a "lovely fighting along the whole line."

Speaking of her work another southern leader says:

"She (Mrs. Chapin) has been battling bravely for her state, and I believe, will, with God's help, soon have her for prohibition. Her power and magnetism is wonderful, and her influence in Carolina is like striking fire to a match. She will have a world to tell you. Georgia is coming along more deliberately calmly, but surely, nevertheless. Ah! what wonderful things are happening, or rather, what wonders God is bringing to pass. The unbelievers are amazed."

Mrs. Leland Stanford has increased her gift of $1,000 to the free kindergartens of San Francisco to $5,000, thereby enabling Mrs. Cooper to plant more of these beautiful charities in that city of cosmopolitan vice. Mrs. Stanford takes the occasion of her son's sixteenth birthday to make this birthday gift to a noble cause. Perhaps in the new era close at hand, that is to be the fashion of birthday celebrations.

If ever anything inhuman has stirred my spirit it has been the treatment of dumb beasts in transitu by cattle trains. Now I find that two blessed women of fortune and of Boston, have given of their substance to the construction of a "palace stock car," and that a train of these cars loaded with surprised cattle has actually passed over the road from Chicago to New York. "Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord."

That is a bright thought of Mrs. Mary T. Burt, and her New York state workers, to inaugurate a holiday for the children, to be known as Children's Temperance Day. This year it is to be celebrated on Wednesday, June 18, and is to be a day of more than the usual rejoicing because of the new education that has come to the children of the Empire State—the knowledge of how alcoholic drink affects the human body.

Which reminds me that one dear Y. W. C. T. U. girl, who leads a boys' class in a prominent Methodist church, chose for her class motto, "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own." This is repeated in concert every week and is sure to make the impress of reiteration on these young minds.

INDIANA.

REPORT OF STATE CONVENTION.

The eleventh annual convention of the Indiana W. C. T. U. convened at Seymour May 28, at 9 a. m. adjourning May 30, at 6 p. m. The women seemed tireless, and no murmur of complaint was heard at lengthened sessions. A fine audience as to size and intelligence greeted those on program, and the home papers, two in number, dailies, whose reporters sat through the entire convention, accorded much praise to the same. At each of the three evening meetings the collections were liberal.

The old corps of officers were re-elected on the informal ballot, each receiving more than a two-third vote, except Miss Amanda Way, who goes to Kansas. Mrs. M. E. Balch, of Frankfort, was declared the unanimous choice of the convention for vice president at large. Four organizers were placed in the field, one in each quarter of the state. These ladies receive expenses and a fair price for each day's work: Mrs. M. J. Swayne, Fort Wayne; Mrs. A. A. Truitt, Muncie; Mrs. Austin Thompson, Greensburg; Miss Sarah E. Morrison, Bloomington, are the organizers.

Three departments of work were added, "Orphan and Pauper children," Mrs. Julia E. Work, Mishawaka, superintendent; "Soldiers and Sailors," "Suppression of Impure Literature," making in all eighteen departments of work taken up in the state. Each superintendent receives an appropriation of ten dollars for her work: except in the department of scientific instruction, which is to receive a suitable campaign fund, as the securing of a scientific temperance educational law in our next legislature is to be the especial work of the organization, under the supervision of the superintendent of this department, Miss Lodi E. Reed. Mrs. Hill, superintendent of work among colored people, receives a liberal support, that she may give it her entire time. Her report touched every heart in the convention, by the faithfulness, faith, consecration and self denial shown. On motion a collection was taken at once for the sister of over $20. Appropriate memorial services were held for fifteen sisters, who have gone on before to their reward. At the close, it was resolved that the W. C. T. U. of Indiana place at the grave of Miss Hoyt a suitable monument.

State dues were changed from 5c. to 10c. per member for the national union.

The question of changing our national headquarters from New York city to Chicago received a large majority vote. The name "bureau fund" was changed to "literature fund," and Mrs. M. M. Finch, of Indianapolis, is to have charge of the fund and the literature.

September 29th, Miss F. E. Willard's birthday, was made W. C. T. U. children's day for Indiana. Our Y. W. C. T. U's., through their representatives, had a pleasant surprise for the convention, each delegate receiving a very beautiful hand painted souvenir card graced with a bow of white ribbon. God bless our helpful young women. Several letters were read from national superintendents, also one from Miss Amanda Way who was at Washington, D. C., as fraternal delegate from the W. C. T. U. to the grand lodge of I. O. G. T., also a telegram from Mrs. Helen M. Gougar, who was necessarily absent.

The following telegram was received from the Friends' Bible School Conference, in session a Russiaville, Ind., "Read Isaiah, forty-first chapter and tenth verse." To which a suitable message was returned.

Mrs. Hill organized a union of twenty-seven members among her people Friday evening. Mrs. Harper, national superintendent of work among colored people, was expected, but failed to appear. Too much cannot be said of Seymour by way of commendation and gratitude. With its pleasant reading rooms, where the convention was provided with lunch each day, its hospitable homes, commodious, church, an excellent choir and impartial press.

A committee from convention joined with the citizens in observing decoration day, in strewing flowers above our honored dead, while the convention worked on over the solution of the problem of reducing the number of dishonored graves because of the "revenue."

The resolutions adopted by the convention declare for prohibition, work against the individual or party that compromises with the liquor traffic, and the ballot for woman, also petition the Sunday school convention, soon to meet in Louisville, for a quarterly temperance Bible lesson, and heartily endorse THE UNION SIGNAL pledging it hearty support and warm friendship.

M. E. BALCH.

EXTRACT FROM THE ANNUAL ADDRESS OF MRS. M. L. WELLS, STATE PRESIDENT.—OUR RELATION TO THE POLITICAL PARTY.

How do we stand as to the parties? We have always claimed to be non-partisan. The W. C. T. U. has never pledged itself to anything save the protection of the home from the liquor traffic, prohibition being as we believe the only safe road leading to that; to it we stand committed. "Here we stand, we can do no other, God help us." As women we owe no allegiance to any party in which we have no voice, and yet women read the papers, and watch with eager eyes the signs of the times. Never so much as in the last ten years. We know as well as do the most wary politicians that at least four presidential tickets will be in the field before the ides of August. No one among the voters will look for and study the party platforms or the candidates more carefully than will we, and where we find prohibition most distinctly avowed by the one and championed by the other, there will the hosts of the white ribbon army rally, and that candidate will be followed as did the hosts the white plume of Henry of Navarre. But, meantime, we will do nothing hastily, waiting patiently for the voice of Him who hath called us, and who will guide us with the pillar of fire by night and the pillar of cloud by day. We do not know when victory will come; but it will come, and whether sooner or later the W. C. T. U. knows nothing of retreat. Prohibition is our watchword.

"Fling out our banner, let it float
Skyward, seaward, high and wide,
O'er the broad earth let it shine;
Nor skill, nor might, nor merit ours,
Forward we march in love divine."

CONVENTION NOTES.

—This is the best convention our W. C. T. U. has ever held in Indiana. About two hundred unions are now formed, forty of them this year. Two ladies (Mrs. Wells and Miss Way) have been out in the field and have raised their own salaries (at the rate of seven hundred a year) by a plan for "taking stock" in the state union, payable in yearly installments. It is a good plan and I wish might be carried out elsewhere. In Pennsylvania it is also a success. No state can take its rightful place in our great sisterhood until it keeps at least one clear-headed and true-hearted woman always in the field. Start her out on faith—she will pay her own way, strengthen and extend your work constantly, and bring money into the treasury besides. "But the fearful, disobedient," etc. Faith is the capital stock of the W. C. T. U. invested in heaven's bank, and those who will not draw thereon do not increase like others.

—Seymour is a thriving town of five hundred inhabitants, about forty-five miles from Louisville. The ladies maintain a large, fine reading room, citizens contributing in monthly installments for its support. The Methodist church has a handsome, cheery auditorium and the audience, chiefly women, with their bright colors reminded one of a parterre of flowers. About 115 delegates present. Mrs. Wells, an exceptionally fine presiding officer, well-poised, genial, and mistress of the situation, three of her five years' experience having been in Indiana, she can not now be claimed as an Illinois woman. In a few days she goes for a month's work to her native state of West Virginia. Many years ago when she graduated there the papers said, "She was not heard, her voice being weak, but that is after all, a good fault in a woman." Now she has one of the strongest voices in our ranks and one of the most womanly as well!

—Miss Lodie Reed is a choice spirit—so unassuming, brave and capable. Miss Alice Vining is the ideal recording secretary, staunch and loyal to the core. Mrs. Wood is an admirable treasurer and they were all re-elected by huge majorities. Our noble Amanda Way would have been but she goes to Kansas, her own beloved state, and I am glad indeed of this for there is not a truer heart or clearer head in all our ranks and our dear Mrs. Fields deserves this re-enforcement.

—Mrs. M. E. Balch is chosen vice president at large in Miss Way's place, and is one of our rising women, sure to be nationally dear to us as she is already to her state.

—Mrs. Leavitt, of Vernon, is a really gifted poet and her rendering of her own poem, "Representative Men," would win the praise of any audience. I wish a part at least of this rare temperance poem might grace the pages of THE UNION SIGNAL.

—Mrs. Nichols, our national superintendent of state and county fairs, is a winsome and gifted woman. Indeed Indiana grows so rich in blessed white ribboners that it delighted my heart to behold their pleasant ranks and I took courage for its people since such as these have lived—not died.

—The people of Seymour seem greatly pleased with the convention which they were entertaining royally and which was in full blast when we left.

—The Indiana women like our paper. They tell me "it grows upon them all the time." They use it in Sunday school and Band of Hope; find it especially valuable for lessons and speeches for the children. Good Mrs. Gilbert, of Muncie, wants to know if "we can't have a brief, pointed primary lesson; she would like it so much for the little ones." Let's ask our own gifted Mrs. W. F. Crafts to prepare one. F. E. W.

NEW YORK.

HARLEM.—On the first of May, we gave up our old hall in 124th street, and have stepped into a brighter and pleasanter one in Sixth avenue, near 125th street, which we consider a better location and more accessible to the people. God is with us in mighty power and we are resting on His sure word of promise, which cannot fail that He will supply all our needs. At the opening meeting of our new hall, which was held May 12, 1884, we had a full house and interesting exercises. The audience was addressed by Rev. Duncan McGregor, who so won the hearts of the people and stirred them to action upon the temperance question that a liberal contribution of $100 was given at the close of the services. We are asking for wisdom that we may understand just God's own way of reaching precious souls and as His instruments we want to follow where the King leads. Give us an occasional thought and prayer as the Spirit shall bring us to your remembrance.

MRS. MARY P. SELCHOW, Cor. Sec.

WESTFIELD.—I am so interested in reading from week to week the encouraging reports in THE UNION SIGNAL of what the W. C. T. U's. are doing all over our country, I thought some of its many readers might take an equal interest in hearing from us in Chautauqua county. There is a local union in each of the larger towns, doing good work. Since Miss Willard's grand, inspiring address during the Sunday school assembly at Chautauqua, public sentiment in our county has been steadily growing in favor of woman's work in the temperance cause.

Since last January we have had a lecture from Mrs. Hunt with which every one was delighted, and which resulted in adding about 600 names to the petition for securing compulsory temperance education in our schools, not a very bad showing for a place of only 2,500 inhabitants. A local superintendent of temperance literature has been selected to advance this department of the work; the names of fifteen subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL have been sent on, and we hope to get fifteen more soon We arranged for a brief article to appear from time to time in our village paper, thereby letting people know that the W. C. T. U. is here, and expects to remain. Tracts and leaflets are being circulated, not indiscriminately, but to reach, if possible, just the right person at the right time. Our postmaster has aided us very much by handing to voters of known high license predilections, one of Rev. Herrick Johnson's masterly arguments. A course of temperance reading has been started in the union meetings, also for individual study, that each member that may be able to speak advisedly of the cause for which she is working.

A pledge has been presented to our physicians restricting the use of alcohol to cases where they believed it to be absolutely necessary, also to counsel families to habits of total abstinence on the ground of health and morality. The best part of this is, that all (five in number) signed it, and as far as our knowledge extends, are keeping it. In response to the call for prayer on the 27th of May, the day was observed with interesting services, from 10 a. m. to 4 p. m., pastors and laymen co-operating with us to make the day what it was designed to be; earnest, heartfelt prayers, enthusiastic speeches, appropriate music, all inspired us with faith in Him who rules above, that He will ultimately give those the power to rule in high places below who are committed to temperance and morality. Our national badge, the tiny white ribbon bow, was worn by our W. C. T. U. for the first time upon that occasion. It is surprising the feeling of unity and strength it gave to every member. To unions who have never used them, try it at your next public meeting. AMANDA F. MASON, Local Supt. Temp. Lit.

DUTCHESS COUNTY CONVENTION.

The annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of this county was held in Poughkeepsie Friday and Saturday, May 16, 17. Addresses of welcome were given by Rev. Mr. Grose, pastor of the Baptist church, where the sessions of the convention were held, and Mrs. H. A. Nelson, of the local union, to which Mrs. M. A. Ensign, of Fishkill on the Hudson, responded.

The report of the secretary of temperance literature, the workers' conference, conducted by Mrs. R. A. Swift, of Millbrook, the annual address of the president, Mrs. W. S. Eno, with papers and addresses upon Hygiene and Scientific Temperance, made the sessions of the convention deeply interesting and most profitable.

The secretary's annual report told of increased interest and membership in the eight local unions. Reported also of wonderful progress in the juvenile department, which now numbers eight children's societies, with a total membership of 600. Forty thousand pages of temperance literature (tracts and leaflets) had been distributed, and $53.53 worth of books sold. Annual subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL, the national official organ, at conventions forty-five, and about the same number for Our Work, the state organ.

At four p. m. on Friday three or four hundred little folks gathered to hear Mr. Geo. W. Bain tell of "Boys and Girls—Nice and Naughty."

Friday evening Mr. Bain gave a forcible address, abounding in apt illustrations and sharp criticisms. The convention closed with a consecration meeting conducted by Mrs. M. V. Underhill, of Poughkeepsie.

POUGHKEEPSIE.—The union observed the day of prayer and had a very enthusiastic meeting, one in which the Holy Spirit was manifestly present. Six of the pastors and other clergymen residing here took part in the services. R. A. T.

PENNSYLVANIA.

MCKEAN COUNTY CONVENTION.

May 22 and 23 the W. C. T. U. of McKean county held its third semi-annual convention at Eldred, with a full attendance of earnest workers. The reports from the different parts of the county were encouraging, showing an increase of eight unions during the year, including one young ladies union, and one union among the colored people. Over fifty copies of THE UNION SIGNAL are taken in the county, beside other temperance papers. Among the themes for discussion were, "How can we best work to secure scientific temperance instruction in schools?" and "How can women best aid the work, for constitutional prohibition?"

One hour during the convention was devoted to the children. It gave us great pleasure to see them come marching in, in such perfect order, and listening so earnestly to the explanation, by one of our ladies, of the effects of alcohol upon the stomach illustrated by Sewall's chart. Some of them gave us recitations, and sang sweet temperance songs. Work among the children is one of the most encouraging features of our work. Excellent resolutions were adopted among which was the following:

Resolved, That we will still continue in our efforts to plant the standard of total abstinence in the homes of our beloved state, and especially to enlist the helpful co-operation of the intelligent women of our own county, in total abstinence principles, and to this end we cordially commend and will endeavor heartily to support the circulation of a petition to the next legislature, asking them to enact a law requiring instruction in physiology and hygiene, with special reference to the effects of alcohol and narcotics on the human system, in all schools supported by the public monies.

We were so fortunate as to secure Mrs. Emily L. McLaughlin, of Boston, for a weeks work in the county. She lectured during the convention at Eldred to a large and appreciative audience. S.

Illuminations, torch light procession, mottoes and transparencies.

A prominent feature of the procession should be the children with banners, and appropriate mottoes.

The second Declaration of Independence can be obtained at W. C. T. U. headquarters, price three cents.

Let the flag, with the white banner of prohibition, float from every home and school house.

Where enforcement clubs have not been formed, this day will be a good time to organize and raise money for the enforcement of the prohibitory law.

The above program is suggestive only, and designed to assist our unions in arranging for this doubly glorious anniversary of our country's freedom, which we hope they will help to make Iowa's most memorable celebration.

OHIO.

NOTES FROM NATIONAL NORMAL UNIVERSITY TEMPERANCE UNION OF LEBANON.

The N. N. U. T. U., auxiliary to the W. C. T. U., is doing earnest, effective work. This organization is open to both ladies and gentlemen, but the majority of its members are young men. While it has held many outpost meetings and sent out speakers and literature through the neighboring districts, yet its principal work has been to train the hundreds of students to live temperance, teach temperance, vote temperance, in this direction it has done good work.

The subject of the last two meetings was "How to teach temperance," and the crowded room and close attention evidence the interest the majority of the eight hundred students feel on the subject.

One point worthy of notice of the many young ladies who have addressed the society at different times, all without exception, have spoken in an easy, forcible manner without manuscript or notes. This is generally true of the gentlemen with but few exceptions.

The physiology classes here have always given especial attention to the effects of stimulants on the brain and body, and as the classes in this school are never confined to one text book, but study subjects, using all the best works and encyclopædias, with which the library is so well supplied, they were able to do this long before any one text book on physiology was especially adapted to the work.

On every Thursday the subject of the daily prayer meeting is temperance. This meeting is conducted entirely by students and is always well attended. It is hoped that the students who go out from this institution will be a power in the great work of freeing our nation from the bondage of alcohol. M. C. R.

CINCINNATI.—The recent annual meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Lytle Hall brought together the circle who have been actively engaged in this work from the period of the crusade, with representatives equally interested from various religious societies, with the president, Mrs. L. E. Fisher, in the chair. Interesting reports were made by the recording, corresponding and financial secretaries. Mrs. Fisher, in her annual address, referred to the successes and blessings that have crowned the past year, extending her deep sense of gratitude to the ladies who have been her co-workers in the labors incident to the work. She said that the sum of $1,400 had been raised during the year to support the union, besides fees for lectures, etc. Reference was made to the business of the second amendment campaign, in which the members bore an active part, Lytle Hall being headquarters for the Hamilton county prohibition committee. Days of fasting and prayer for the success of the cause had been observed, as well as the celebration of the tenth anniversary day of the old crusade. The temperance and religious element have been combined. The work is one of gospel temperance.

The Sunday afternoon meetings had brought together large assemblies, and various ministers of the city have been ever willing and sympathetic and most helpful in their addresses and appeals in behalf of women's work for temperance, and the cause has made progress steadily.

A Bible school has been established for adults, and in the charge of Mr. Abner Frazer has been of much spiritual profit.

During the flood many homeless and destitute were fed and housed, and instructed in the better life.

The recent riot was made the occasion of calling together the temperance ladies and clergymen, and of presenting renewed resolutions and petitions of protest against the open saloon, which was regarded as the prime cause of the most aggravated evils in our midst.

CONNECTICUT.

PLAINVILLE.—I must tell of our last union meeting. It was at our new Methodist church, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., of course. The house was packed to overflowing, some standing during the entire service. The choir of the church gave wide awake music and the address was so full of interest that those standing gave no signs of uneasiness up to its close. The sister who thus held the audience was Mrs. Maria Upham Drake, from Brooklyn, N. Y., one that our Heavenly Father has just called to our work, but not without a rich training. The daughter of a missionary among the red men, the war of the rebellion found the father in imminent peril in our southwestern borders; an earnest abolitionist he was obliged to be conveyed by friends in the dead of night through the forest to Kansas for safety, leaving his wife with seven children to follow.

Mrs. Drake is a graduate of the Normal school of Massachusetts, in which institution she became a teacher upon her graduation. In this school Maria Upham became known, not only as a successful teacher, but as a writer of marked ability. Filled with the missionary spirit, she gave herself to that work, until becoming a wife and mother she has been for a few years shut out from public life. Witnessing all around her beautiful home in Brooklyn the inroads of this terrible evil of intemperance, she has been called to add her voice with so many others in its defense. Her husband is widely known in our own state as a teacher, and like some other husbands of broad minds, feels that God's rare gifts to his wife should be used where He calls. I have written this entirely without the knowledge of our sister because I feel it for the interest of our work. So many are asking for some one to speak that is not so expensive. Mrs. D. is very desirous of doing all the good she can in this work and would be glad to be free to all, on this account. But this must not be, still she is determined to be within the reach of all who need her, and I hesitate not to say to our women, you will find her a consecrated Christian worker who will do you grand service as a speaker, Her address is Mrs. Maria Upham Drake 433 9th street, Brooklyn, N. Y. We are glad to read reports from our sister, Mrs. Washington, from Connecticut. May she and other laborers be blessed in their work until every vestige of this terrible drink demon is "cut" from our beloved state. MRS. G. A. MOODY.

SOUTHERN GLEANINGS.

MRS. GEORGIA HULSE MCLEOD.

MARYLAND.—In response to the national call, the various local unions of Baltimore met in Y. M. C. A. hall, on the 27th ult. A new leader took charge every half hour, and the exercises, according to the program of Mrs. Buell, were effectively carried out. Many earnest prayers were offered that the next president may be one whom the mothers of this nation may hold up as a model to their sons.

A young man reading this last paragraph in a morning journal said, "Well, I think if that prayer is answered, the man will have to be sent down from heaven, for he won't be found among politicians."

If the united faith of the W. C. T. U. is strong enough, he will be sent of heaven.

VIRGINIA.—Richmond was so happy as to have the inspiring presence and aid of Miss Henrietta G. Moore, on the 27th. Doubtless it was good to be there. Mrs. Wm. H. Pleasants gladly availed herself of the opportunity, as Miss Moore was passing through en route to Maryland.

WEST VIRGINIA.—A dainty envelope came to us last week, with its silk fastening and artistic design, hinting at a wedding. But when opened told of an event scarcely second in importance to our girls, "Commencement exercises." The Wheeling Female College is noted for the interest of these closing days, and the marked ability of its graduates. Miss A. Taylor, the president, is also the president of the state W. C. T. U. Good augury for the future of our girls.

TENNESSEE.—The state prohibition convention, at Nashville was an intelligent, enthusiastic and harmonious gathering. Over 300 delegates represented 54 counties. Pure and undefiled prohibition the only platform on which they would agree.

Five W. C. T. unions were represented, and Mrs. E. L. Saxon, the state organizer, made an eloquent presentation of the great principles on which prohibition is founded. She spoke in favor of the four mile law, and stated that if the question were kept out of politics the women of the state would support it, and pray for it, as they did in Iowa. She brought a petition from 200 ladies of Cleveland, Miss., asking that prohibition be kept out of politics. A petition was also presented signed by 225 men and women of Athens, asking for prohibition unallied with partisan politics.

Mrs. Judge Harrison has been working energetically for some months, arousing the active interest of the community, in view of this great state gathering.

SOUTH CAROLINA.—There is a little song I used to love in my girlhood, it begins and it ends with "I love! I love!" so it seems to me in looking over correspondence from the south it begins and it ends with Mrs. Chapin, very frequently linked with the name of our Liege Lady.

Mrs. Chapin is off for Georgia, thence to Kentucky. In Anderson county, S. C. she has taken 500 names for temperance in three days. She speaks three times a day to white and colored audiences, working far into the night, "all for souls." It is almost too much for human strength. Let us pray that she may have strength and wisdom from above, to carry on the glorious work. And let the daily prayer of our women, east, west, north and south "begin with," and "end with" the dear leaders who have drawn us all so near together—Frances E. Willard and Sallie F. Chapin.

MISSOURI.

The fifth congressional district of Missouri holds its convention at Independence. Mrs. J. Hill is the president, and Mrs. H. Chrysler is corresponding secretary of the local union.

New unions have been organized at Lockwood with Mrs. Rev. Ely, president, Mrs. Dr. Mills, corresponding secretary, and at Ash Grove, with Mrs. Bell as president and Miss W. Barbee as corresponding secretary.

At Lebanon, Missouri, the churches have decided to hold a union temperance meeting monthly.

The W. C. T. U. of Springfield, never loses an opportunity for educating public sentiment.

The Missouri press association convened there May 21. The editors very courteously permitted Mrs. J. R. Milner of that city to present an appeal asking that such as used "patent insides" would order at least two columns filled with literary, scientific and legal matter favoring total abstinence; that all papers would publish temperance news fully and promptly, favor the submission of the prohibition amendment and advocate scientific temperance instruction in the public schools. Mrs. Clardy, of Fredericktown, was allowed to defend it. Although the resolutions were not passed, yet the privilege of a hearing was certainly a token of respect for the cause. MRS. M. M. CLARDY.

MASSACHUSETTS.

The W. C. T. U. of our state has met with a great loss in the death of its most efficient secretary, Mrs. L. B. Barrett, whose mortal remains were committed to the tomb, May 27. The last time I saw her was at a convention in Lawrence, and she was full of sympathy for me because I was disabled by rheumatism from active work, and I little thought that she would so soon be taken and I should be left. I first knew her in 1834 when she was a student at New Hampton, N. H., and I was but a child, yet as she was a member of my father's family, and I was her favorite, I have always cherished her in my heart very tenderly.

Mrs. Barrett was a thoroughly good woman, a Christian in every sense of the word, and her life was consecrated to all reforms.

How much we need such women, and who will fill their places? May the dear Father comfort the bereaved family, and the sorrowing W. C. T. U. of Massachusetts.

Sarah Doton Goldsmith.

MICHIGAN

Coldwater.—The representatives of the W.C.T.U. of this county met in convention in this city for the purpose of organizing a county W.C.T.U. The convention was most admirably presided over by our district president, Mrs. R. A. Bailey, of Barry county.

The towns already organized made good reports. The Union City union reported over a hundred members. By their efforts every saloon in the town has been closed. One saloon keeper whose bonds had been refused, sowed the streets with oats and dragged them in, predicting that business would so fall off that a large crop would be harvested. But the highways have not grown green, neither have the farmers sought other centers of trade, nor has business declined, but that beautiful village is as brisk and thriving as ever, with an increase of happy homes and sober men.

The Coldwater union, though not so successful in their efforts to stop the flow of rum, and the traffic in the souls of men, has worked on, seeking to build up and strengthen public opinion. Out of its efforts has grown a church Temperance Union, embracing pastors and members of several denominations and other citizens.

This society holds monthly meetings and has done some efficient work. Coldwater union has held right on ever since crusade time. Though often discouraged and disappointed, weak and faltering, it has kept alive and held weekly meetings most of the time.

Quincy and Bronson unions reported good work and increasing interest. The former has about fifty members.

Mrs. M. H. Leonard, of Union City, was elected president; a vice president was elected for every township, and superintendents of Sunday school, juvenile, and county fair work, and of the flower mission were also elected.

The resolutions adopted by the convention were strong and timely, promising active practical work.

Mrs. Mary E. Benton, Cor. Sec.

ALABAMA.

Troy.—We organized in March with only eleven members, but now number fifty-five. All who join us enter into our work with the spirit of earnestness, and we are progressing rapidly. Our meetings, which we hold every two weeks, are well attended. Much enthusiasm exists. Proudly can we state that prohibition is steadily and surely gaining ground.

Our president, with two lady assistants and about twenty gentlemen, organized, on Sunday, June 1, the colored people of this place. One hundred and forty-nine names were enrolled. The meeting was attended by our Methodist minister and several of our best and most influential men who have already joined us. The colored people seem very enthusiastic, being first aroused by a temperance speech made to them about a month ago by Capt. W. D. Wood, a candidate for our next legislature, said to be put in the field by our union. If so, may success crown his labors for God and home and native land. Mrs. M. A. Hamrick, Cor. Sec.

COLORADO.

Pueblo.—Pursuant to the call made by the National W. C. T. U. our union met on Tuesday afternoon, and spent a very pleasant, and, we trust, profitable season together. Meeting led by president, Mrs. McNeil, and the exercises consisted in Bible readings, singing and prayer. This is our first annual meeting and the members seemed interested, and anxious for the success of the temperance cause all over the land. We hope to be the means of helping in the glorious work. We send you kind greetings and hope we may have better things to report sometime. Mrs. E. S. Owen, Cor. Sec.

ILLINOIS.

Galesburg.—The W. C. T. U. of Galesburg offers to the students of Lombard University, Knox College and Seminary, two prizes—the first $5 and the second $3—for the best essays on one of the following subjects: "The Comparative Success of Prohibition and of License Legislation." "Effects of Alcoholics upon the Intellectual and Moral Powers." To the students of the preparatory departments in Lombard University and Knox College, and to the pupils of the high school they also offer two prizes as above, subjects as follows: "Why should the Public Schools teach the effect of Alcohols and Tobacco?" "Physical Effects of Alcoholics." "Physical, Mental, and Moral Effects of Tobacco."

To all pupils below the grade of the high school, the same offer is made for essays on the following subjects: "The Saloon in the Village." "Effects of Alcoholics upon the Blood and Nervous System," "Influences that lead to the use of Alcoholics and Tobacco."

The award will be made on the basis of originality, force of arguments and correctness of expression.

It is now confidently expected to give an entertainment in October, at which these prize essays will be read. At that time two prizes, a first and a second, will be given to pupils under twelve years of age for the best temperance declamation or recitation.

Mrs. Sara McCall,

LETTER FROM THE STATE TREASURER.

The treasurer of the Illinois W. C. T. U. desires to "sound the praises" of the tenth district for its gifts for our state work. Peoria leads the van, or perhaps I ought rather to say, its efficient district president leads it, with the aid of one of our dear ex-presidents, who is once more on duty there.

I am becoming greatly interested in letters bearing the Peoria postmark, for I have received about $160 from there as gifts for state work. Then of membership dues the Central union has sent $30; South Peoria union $5.33; the German union $6 66; the colored union $4.50. Do you wonder that I watch for Peoria letters?

The sixth district also has a warm place in my heart, being the first to meet the quarterly payment of $75 on the $300 pledged to the state union, besides the "dues."

I shall want to hold a special reception at our annual meeting, so that I can look into every kindly face and say "Thank you" to those who so cheerfully remember the necessities of the treasury department. Pray tell me, dear women, is there any more appropriate theme to consider after reading the excellent leaflets sent out from headquarters, than this, "What ought I to do? What can I do? What must I do, to help forward the great lines of work in the Illinois W. C. T. U.?

Mrs. G. H. Read, Treas. Ill. W. C. T. U.

Southern Illinois.—Have just completed a trip to southern Illinois. Two days of service were given at the convention of the 19th district at Mt. Vernon. The union of that place is encouraged by an increase of about twenty new members.

As many of these new names belong to the young women of the place, it is very probable they will organize into a separate union. After giving two addresses there, I journeyed on to Opdyke, where I found a struggling union determined to live through all discouragements. Mrs. Dr. Stonemetz of that place, with one or two others, are "holding the fort."

I reached Carmi on Saturday noon, found a meeting planned for at 3 o'clock, a few ladies out. After the address in the evening an organization was effected with thirty members. Mrs. E. A. Clayton, an old "crusader" one of the little heroic band which marched under the leadership of Mrs. Thompson, in Hillsboro, upon the saloons of that place, was elected president by a unanimous vote. The old spirit of the crusade came upon us, and we sang and prayed as we used to when we first went out to battle against rum. An address Sunday night, and another Monday forenoon before taking the noon train to return to Chicago, finished my work in southern Illinois for the present, but the Lord willing I hope to return some time for a month of service among a people whose warm hearts and generous sympathies are strongly enlisted in the cause of temperance. There is a great and hopeful field of labor in southern Illinois, let us thrust in and reap a large harvest for the Master. The fields are white for the harvest.

Mrs. L. S. Rounds.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—A Y. W. C. T. U. has been organized at Bloomington with an encouraging outlook for usefulness.

—Unions have been organized at Carmi by Mrs Rounds and at Farmington by Mrs. Smith, and a Y. W. C. T. U. at Freeport by Miss Goodrich.

— Ex-Gov. St. John will give a few addresses in this state about the middle of this month, on his journey east to meet his summer engagements.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

Four ladies of Port Townsend, Washington territory, have recently been chosen to serve on the grand jury.

A new temperance hall was formally opened May 1, in Brooklyn, N. Y., under the auspices of W. C. T. U. No. 5.

Following Miss Willard's visit to Norfolk, Conn., a union has been formed there. This is an important point, being the leading summer resort in Connecticut, on the highest ground in the state.

The W. C. T. U. of Sullivan, Ind., is established in headquarters of its own. Mr. Wm. Crowder, the husband of the energetic president, has given a beautiful room, rent free, which they have carpeted and fitted up in excellent style.

The following resolution was adopted by the conference of school superintendents of Virginia:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this conference it would be wise and expedient for the board of education to place among the text books for use in the public schools of this state, a text book on "Alcohol: Its Nature and Effects upon the Human System."

The W. C. T. U. of Asheville, N. C. carries on a flourishing temperance school. At the close of the school for a short vacation, an entertainment was given in Opera Hall, consisting mostly of speaking by the children. One piece was spoken by a little girl, the daughter of a liquor seller, her father being present.

Reports given at the fifth annual meeting of San Francisco W. C. T. U. show that the society is prospering. Since the last annual meeting a kindergarten has been established at 232 Fell-street. Miss Willard having donated the collections at her lectures while in San Francisco, to this object. Proceeds of coffee house at 629 Sacramento street are used in defraying expenses of a free reading room next door.

"South Carolina," writes Mrs. Chapin, "is now the seat of war, and a well planned campaign would place her along side of Maine and Kansas. The whisky men are aware of it, and today all the editors in the state are being entertained in princely style at the Charleston Brewery. I am now trying my utmost to have our text books introduced into the schools. Col. Cowance, superintendent of education, has them under consideration."

Mrs. Ellen G. Foster, of the Provincial executive committee of the W. C. T. U. of Canada, writes: "There was never such a healthy public sentiment on the temperance and woman suffrage question as now, and we are going to have both prohibition and suffrage ere long, if I am not mistaken. We have been petitioning for prohibition just now, sending up a petition thirty-five feet long, with a double row of names, from this county.

It is proposed by Miss Willard and other workers to hold a temperance campmeeting in National Park, Montana. The interval including the last week in August and first week in September is proposed, as the flies and mosquitoes, who hold full sway during most of the summer are then quiet, and the brief interval between haying and harvest occurs then. As a large number of tourists are visiting the Park about that time, this will doubtless be a good method of spreading temperance sentiment.

Decatur (Ill.) is arranging for a temperance camp meeting. Prof. Lutz will drill 2,000 children for a grand chorus. Wednesday, the 2nd of July will be the children's day, and will be a grand gathering of the little folks. One day will be devoted to the W. C. T. U. Mary A. Woodbridge, Frances E. Willard, Mary Allen West, Mrs. Mary B. Willard, Mrs. Lucy Simpson, and others are to be present. Francis Murphy, Thos. E. Murphy, Gen. Green Clay Smith, of Kentucky, and Gov. St. John will speak on other days.

Concord, N. H., has been exceedingly indifferent on the temperance question. A change for the better is rapidly taking place. On a recent occasion Mrs. Nettie M. Knox spoke there. The audience room of the church in which she spoke, with a seating capacity of fifteen hundred was filled to overflowing, many being unable to get in at all. Two hundred and eighty women joined the W. C. T. U. on that one occasion. New Hampshire has organized thirteen new unions since the Detroit convention.

The Y. W. C. T. U. of Providence, R. I., have fitted up a lunch room in the business center of the city, for the express use of young girls in stores, offices and factories, where they may bring their lunch and eat it, buying a cup of hot coffee or tea for four cents. The room is also furnished with books, magazines and papers, and furnishes a pleasant, homelike resort for young women. Sewing machines are also mentioned as a part of the outfit of this room. The average attendance is already thirty, and increasing.

A member of the W. C. T. U. of Staunton, Va., unnerved by the condition of her husband for months, who was sometimes at death's door with epilepsy brought on by drink, decided that she would make a request of the liquor sellers not to sell her husband any more liquor. She started at one end of the street, and when she came to the saloon of a man who has made $50 000 at this honorable business, there she found her husband just raising the glass to his lips. She said a demon took possession of her. She snatched the glass, threw it at the bottles and decanters, and the liquor flowed. This being such an unheard of thing, in the south the man was taken aback, but recovered sufficiently to say as they were leaving the saloon, that hereafter he would be prepared to defend himself. She replied that the next time she had occasion to enter his shop she would come around with a pistol. The man said afterward he would not have had such an occurrence in his store for five hundred dollars. Nevertheless, he sent in his bill. It is earnestly hoped that the lady's husband will not pay it, since the suit is more to be dreaded by the liquor dealer than the loss of the money. The dealer is a member of the city council. At first, the cry commenced, "The crusade is begun, this is the fruit of a Woman's Christian Temperance Union," but that cry soon ceased, and only the liquor element blame the woman.

FLOWER MISSION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL.—I desire to apologize for an unfilled column this week and trust the reason is to be found in the state superintendents being absorbed with preparations for prison day, June 9. Miss Casseday could send no communication either, owing to utter exhaustion and much suffering from overwork in maturing her plans for the observance of prison day. We hope this will not occur again and assuredly should not as there will be much to report from the many states organized already for Flower Mission work.

ALCOHOLIC CONSUMPTION.

Dr. Richardson, F. R. S., of England, was the first to discover that while consumption, in the majority of cases, is due to a hereditary taint, or to impure air and bad surroundings, in a certain proportion of cases it is due solely to the drinking of alcoholic liquors.

He gathered his views from the careful study of two thousand cases in a hospital of which he was the physician. His discovery published by him in 1864 has been confirmed by other observers since.

The victims are in middle life, of great natural endurance, often models of organic symmetry and power, and active in mind and body. The very perfection of their organization makes them feel wholly safe in their indulgence. Though they can drink hard, they are not, in the ordinary sense, drunkards.

They look the picture of manly strength and robust health. Says Dr. Richardson, "More than half of those whom I have seen stricken down with alcoholic phthisis have said they had never had a day's illness in their lives, but when closely questioned it was found that none had recently been quite well."

The ailments, however, were such as the alcohol had already induced, an additional quantity of which had seemed o set them right again.

The countenance of the alcoholic consumptive differs as much from that of the ordinary consumptive, as it does from that of the confirmed sot. His face to the last seems full of health. Says our authority, "I remember being actually taken back on finding, in a man who seemed from his face in perfect health, a complete destruction of the lungs."

The disease is often developed after the person had for some time abandoned excessive indulgence,—a point having been reached in which the excreting organs had exhausted their power to eliminate the poison from the system, and, as a consequence, the desire for the liquor had largely ceased.

The symptoms of the approaching consumption are pains in the side; then real pleurisy; after that, difficulty of filling the chest with air, the lungs having grown to the side; and at length, hemorrhage of the lungs, the walls of the engorged blood-vessels giving way. The result is often fatal.—Youth's Companion.

A MOTHER'S INFLUENCE.

Gen. Swift, of Boston, in a recent address, said: "I never left my mother in my life but what she said to me, 'I want to live long enough to see you come to your Savior.' It was the conclusion of every separation, it was the burden of every letter she wrote to me."

After witnessing one of his triumphs of popular eloquence during the war, she only said, "If I could see you stand there and talk for your Savior, I would ask nothing more on this earth."

During one of his terms in the legislature in those days, the liquor question was up. Gen. Swift's constituency were opposed to the bill—restrictive, if not prohibitory—and expected him to vote accordingly. He had no scruples on the subject at that time, and expected to do so. But his mother was deeply interested in the success of the measure, but still more that her son should vote on the right side. When the vote was taken, she was in the gallery in full view of him. Up to the moment of answering to his name, his intention was to vote in the negative. But at that instant his eye caught hers; and to the surprise of all, and even of himself, his sonorous voice rang out an aye! He could not look that mother in the eyes, though the whole world were with him, and vote for what she regarded as the unrighteous side. And she was the only one who was not surprised, but said, "My son, I had prayed to the Lord not to let you vote wrong, and I knew you could not."

At last during the Boston revival of 1876–7, he was converted. He says: "I went home directly to that mother. I dont know as I can get on with this part of the story, but you will all understand the difficulty. The stars in the skies scarcely outnumber the prayers she had given to her Father on my behalf, and I was going home, the last one of her band of children, resolved to tell her that her Savior was my Savior, and that her God was my God. We were all there, an unbroken and a redeemed family. She gathered me in her arms as tenderly as when I was a helpless child."—Ex.

THE city of Buffalo has lately been disquieted, and in no little danger from a mob of strikers. The military were for a time kept under arms and ready on short notice to come forth for the protection of the lives and property of the citizens. It appears that, as in Cincinnati, so in Buffalo, the liquor saloons were the source of much of the threatened disorder and peril. A telegram to the New York Tribune says, "Colonel Byrne, who has been employed to keep strict surveillance over the rum shops in the neighborhood of the dock and steamboat warehouses and the disturbed district, reports a dangerous state of affairs. He says that many of the liquor sellers have advised and plotted the most incendiary work, and that their language and threats have been of such a character as to alarm the property owners. They have counseled arson and assaults on officials." Fortunately, with the prompt and thorough military preparation and police vigilance, the threatened danger has been averted, and what might easily become another Cincinnati calamity has been avoided. But it has been in spite of the liquor dealers and the saloons. In ordinary times their presence is productive of evil, and that continually. In times of undue excitement they become at once a grave public peril. It is supreme folly to continue at either a high or low rate of taxation to license and legalize them.—National Temperance Advocate.

A RECENT case in one of the Texas strts shows very conclusively the need ofincourgent temperance legislation in that state. The facts as brought out showed that a wager had been laid that a certain person could drink three pints of whisky at a sitting. After drinking two pints, the person became so intoxicated as to lose all self-control, but while in this state he was induced to drink the third pint, and this resulted almost immediately in his death. This state of affairs did not seem to warrant, under the social conditions of Texas, a charge of murder against the persons who had induced the carrying out of the wager, but, instead, a civil suit for damages was instituted by the wife of the deceased. The defence interposed to this action was that the consent given by the person to the drinking of the whisky made the act his own, and there was, consequently, no liability on the part of those who had induced the act. This defense was disallowed by the court, it being held that the performance was akin to that of a person offering some injurious article of food to a person, and then contending that because the person ate it without objection it was his own act. The sound rule of law was stated to be as follows: "If one whose mental faculties are suspended by intoxication is induced to swallow spirituous liquors to such an extent as to endanger his life, the persons taking advantage of his condition of helplessness and mental darkness and imposing the draught upon him, must answer in damages for the injury that ensues."

A SALOON keeper has recently fitted up a saloon at an expense of $10,000, near the residence of Dr. Howard Crosby, in New York. The doctor objected. He teaches that moderate drinking is right, and doubtless the saloon man saw a fortune under such teaching and influence. The doctor, in his objection as reported in the Retailer, a New York whisky paper, said he had no objection to the man, as he understood that he was respectable, etc., but didn't want a saloon in that place. If saloons are a good thing for a town, and business, then of course they enhance the value of town property. Then why should any one object to having them for neighbors?

WHEN we hear of a saloon keeper complaining that the temperance people are continually meddling with his business, we are remined of an incident said to have occurred in a court room on one occasion. The prisoner complained that he had been arrested while he was quietly attending to his business. He was asked what business he followed, and said: "I'm a burglar, sir."

Signal Notes.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC IN RUSSIA.

From Odessa, under date March 21, 1884, Sir Wilfrid Lawson has received the following obliging communication:—"I have taken the liberty of submitting to you a few of the clauses of the new Russian projet de loi regulating the sale of alcoholic liquors in this country, and they strike me as worthy the notice of our legislators on this question, more especially as regards the responsibilities imposed upon the publican. Some of the clauses of this project, which will shortly be submitted for the Imperial exequatur, naturally, would not equally apply to our own country. The following, however, may be worthy of your notice:—

Clause II. enacts that any publican supplying drink to a person already intoxicated, or to young persons, is liable to a fine of 850 roubles (about £85), and to the deprivation of his license or patent for three years, during which period he will not be allowed to occupy himself in any capacity whatever connected with the sale of liquors—not even as a waiter.

Clause III. enacts that any publican supplying a person with such a quantity of drink as to make him irresponsible for his actions, and if such person, after leaving the premises, be robbed or injured by accident, the publican in addition to the fine imposed under clause II., shall make good any loss by robbery in the one case or pay all medical expenses in the other.

Clause IV. declares that where a person through excessive drinking dies in a public drinking house, or if an intoxicated person lose his life in any drunken brawl on the premises or after leaving (cases, unhappily, not uncommon in Russia), the publican shall suffer two years' imprisonment and make a suitable provision for the wife and family or dependent relatives of the deceased.

These are the more drastic clauses of the project, but one other I may mention as equally applicable to all countries. This clause forbids under heavy penalties, and without any qualification whatever, the sale of alcoholic liquors on credit. The rigid enforcement of this clause must prove the redemption of thousands, or, rather, tens of thousands of the Russian peasants who mortgage their goods and chattels and growing crops to the Jewish publicans and usurers found in all agricultural districts."

We may add to the above that the Journal de St. Petersbourg says that "during the year 1882–83 the Russian distillers have produced 88,908,341 gallons of pure alcohol, and during the present year 89,593 000. The decrease of 767,184 gallons in 1882–83 is the result of closing 58 distilleries. In the Polish provinces 31 distilleries have been closed in 1882–83, and in the province of Kharkoff 11 at the same time. In the province of Viatka, 307,807 gallons alcohol less have been distilled during the year 1882–83 than in the previous year. In the northern and central, as well as the Baltic provinces, the number of distilleries has increased, the manufacturing of eau-de-vie from potatoes compared to the period of 1881–82 having risen by the weight of 128,023,760 pounds of raw material. In Poland the use of potatoes has decreased, which may also be said of Turkish wheat in the provinces where it is used in distilleries, while the diminution in corn is insignificant."

A STARTLING CONTRAST—Gymnastics for girls is recommended by the Lancet.

Hermione: "Yes, I've gone in for gymnastics. Up every morning at six; dumb bells and Indian clubs till seven; walk six miles in the hour, and come back to breakfast at eight. Take a light breakfast of rump steak, kidneys, fish, eggs—But am I walking too fast for you?"

Johnnie (faintly): "Er—yes—a little. Breakfasted off a couple of curried prawns and a small soda, and—er—violent exercise dosen't suit me after a heavy meal!" —Funny Folks.

Miscellaneous Selections.

DR. ALFRED CARPENTER relates a story about a celebrated violin player, who was asked to take a glass of wine, just before going on the stage. He said: "Oh, no, I thank you, I shall have it when I come off." This answer, says Alfred Reade, excited Dr. Carpenter's curiosity. He inquired of the violinist why he would have it when he came off, in preference to having it before his work commenced? His reply was: "If I take stimulants before I go to work, the perception of my fingers is blunted, and I don't feel that nicety and delicacy of touch necessary to bring out the fine tones requisite in this piece of music, and therefore, I avoid them." The violinist came very near discovering absolute truth in reference to the power and influence that alcohol in all its forms has to pervert and destroy the physical structure of the brain, which is the harp of the mind. This thought brings my mind to a melancholy remembrance of Bayard Taylor, who was always laughing at Mr. James Parton, for those articles which he wrote for the Atlantic Monthly. One was called: "Does it Pay to Smoke?" The other, "Will the Coming Man Drink Wine?" Mr. Bayard Taylor was a fine, portly looking gentleman, but he smoked tobacco and drank wine. Mr. Parton, commenting on Mr. Taylor's early death, says: "Some fifty New York journalists have either died in their prime, or before reaching their prime." He adds: "A similar mortality has been observed in Great Britain. Dickens died at fifty-eight, and Thackeray at fifty-two years; and a great number of lesser lights have been extinguished, that promised to burn with increasing brightness." Mr. Parton puts the case nicely and modestly. He says: "These men died because they didn't know how to live." But the truth is they killed themselves with alcohol and tobacco.

THE experiment made by the people of Plainfield, N. J., works so well that there is now no opposition to the continuance of the charge of $500 each for saloons and shops and $300 for hotels, and yet it is stated that the ordinance has been strictly enforced. Some people are now in favor of still higher charges. A similar tax, if paid by all the retail liquor sellers in that state, would yield enough to pay more than the entire expenses of the state government. In New York, if all the people now in the business should pay the same license fee that is paid without murmur in Plainfield, the revenue would about equal the entire revenue of state and county government throughout the state or would pay the entire charges of all the public schools and $2,000,000 over. The point is that the number of retail dealers would be so diminished by such charges that those who remain in business would make more money. But the public would get a handsome revenue.—N. Y. Tribune.

MR. JAMES C. YOUNG, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, president of the North Western Loan and Real Estate Investment Co., offers some choice investments to our readers. He can give figures from which handsome profits can be realized. His financial standing is beyond question, and we cordially recommend any of our friends who desire to invest large or small sums to communicate with Mr. Young.

Mrs. Lorenzo S. Ruggles, Auburn, Me.: "Ayer's Sarsaparilla has proved its superiority to all others." [Cured by it of Feminine Weaknesses.]

Almost "all the ills that flesh is heir to" spring from, or are intensified by, impurities in the blood, the result of hereditary taint or of a wrong manner of living. Ayer's Sarsaparilla thoroughly purifies the blood, gives tone and vigor to the digestive organs, and imparts new vitality to the nervous system. The only preparation of this class for which these claims can be truthfully made, and the only one that does "real, lasting good," is

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 25. CHICAGO, JUNE 19, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

THE Inter Ocean finds a good reason why the Republican party should not adopt reforms—i. e. it has done the forming of the very institutions it is now called upon to re-form—and to undo its own work would be to confess itself undone. That sort of consistency is a jewel which will cost them dearly next November.

IT is indeed true that the Republican party is the "former" of the governmental liquor traffic. To adopt the temperance reform would be to pull down the brilliant and glassy monument reared during the past twenty-four years to such a dizzy height—and towering each year more rapidly than the last. We must excuse the great party of moral ideas from such iconoclasm.

IT is one of the signs of the times that the programs of this season's commencement exercises are nearly all seasoned with prohibition. Notable among them was an oration on this topic in the closing exercises of the Union College of Law in this city, by C. L. Richards, who treated the matter from a lawyer's point of view, touching upon the constitutionality as well as expediency of prohibition, and denying its "sumptuary" character. "Above all," he said, "it is a movement that 'will not down,' because the thinking men, and the women of the country are becoming intensely interested in it."

THERE is inspiration in the little sermon remarkable alike for pith, point and pungency, which a W. C. T. U. woman preached all unconsiously in a little afternoon talk when she said in the quiet tone, that had withal the determined ring of conscious integrity: "I made up my mind years ago that if I ever attained success in my profession, or accomplished the work I desired to do, I must do as did St. Paul; and so I often preface a proposition I am about to make by saying, "I may meet with opposition in this, I may even be judged incorrectly and harshly. But with me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you or of man's judgment." To deserve but not court favorable criticism be our aim; to prize it yet not sacrifice aught of conviction to gain it, be our constant exercise.

EVERYBODY in the English speaking world knows Francis Murphy and his gospel of love and good works—not everybody, perhaps, knows the brave young fellow that stands so manfully by his father's side, for the truth and purity of young manhood. Thomas Edward Murphy is a noble specimen of the young reformer. His training, education and native endowments combine to fit him for the temperance work as few of his years are fitted. Together with his father, the city that cannot be moved to its foundations by their united efforts is to be despaired of. Chicago is not that city. Over 9,000 pledges have been taken during the month of meetings here, and still the good work goes on in the churches, in the streets, and so, ultimately, in the saloons.

AT the recent spring election in an Illinois town, two well-appearing women came to the polls, each bearing in her hand a no-license ballot. Their faces were marked with lines of sorrow and bitter experience. The white ballots they carried were written all over in invisible ink with the agonies that only mothers measure. The bystanders made way for them and they stood before the fateful box, worse often than Pandora's, since it holds not even hope beneath its incautious lid. Addressing the judges of election they asked:

"Can we be allowed to vote?"

"No, madam."

"But we have to suffer from the result."

"It's the law, madam."

"Will there be any objection to our pinning our votes up, where they may be seen?"

And all day those little silent appeals hung over the ballot box, and who shall say their work was not a factor in the day's success.

A MIDNIGHT mission is one of the new philanthropies by which a few earnest Christians hope to lessen the blackness of moral darkness in which Chicago seems enveloped. The active workers in this new ministry are mostly from the ranks of the W. C. T. U., and the mission itself will be under the auspices of the Central W. C. T. U. The work is being shaped by Mr. Smith Allen, of New York, whose long experience in the Florence Midnight Mission of that city renders him capable of this leadership. That such a work is needed here is no new conclusion, the only difficulty has been the lack of workers consecrated to this service. A short time since two young girls were persuaded to leave their homes in an eastern city and go to an inland Illinois town for employment. They were decoyed into a house of ill repute but escaped only to find themselves homeless and shelterless. For two days and nights they wandered about the city, and were found by Mr. Allen in a state of almost frenzy at their condition. Then there i a large class of night operatives in large establishments who can be reached at midnight, and who can spend an hour in a midnight meeting. All these are the Christian's lawful plunder. All the world for Christ means the night world, as well as that blessed by the light of day.

IF ever the W. C. T. U. did telling work it was at Louisville, last week with the International Sunday School Convention. Nor was the organization in any sense in the hands of its enemies. Of the more than four hundred delegates to the convention a majority were for us, if not of us. Else how could the resolution have carried which granted all we asked,—namely the recommendation to the International lesson committee "to furnish quarterly temperance lessons in the regular course."

The Louisville W. C. T. U., with its efficient "eldest daughter," the Y. W. C. T. U., scarcely needed re-enforcement in working to this end, so successfully were all its wisely laid plans carried out, but a strong aid to their effort was given in the presence of Miss Willard, Miss Kimball, Mrs. Chapin, Mrs. Sibley, of Georgia, Mrs. Aldrich, of Iowa, Col. and Mrs. Bain, of Kentucky. The Young Woman's C. T. U. gave a reception to these workers on Thursday afternoon at the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. James A. Leech, and on Friday morning the First Christian church of the city was completely filled, while for two hours the representatives of the W. C. T. U. enumerated above, gave the general public and the delegates a history of our Sunday school work for temperance, and made eloquent appeal and sound argument for its adoption in the regular work of the Sunday schools of the Christian world. On Friday afternoon the desired resolution was introduced in the regular session of the convention, and though it met with a fierce opposition in some quarters—notably, we understand, from the Rev. Dr. Vincent, of the M. E. church, was finally adopted.

The Rev. Mr. Pond, of Ohio, Mr. William Reynolds, of Illinois, Mr. Estey, of Georgia, Mr. Caldwell, of Tennessee, a Maryland delegate whose name we failed to get, Mr. Farris, of Missouri, Vice President Evans, Texas, Rev. Dr. Hobbs, Mr. Browder, Mr. Bain, Rev. Thomas Perrick, and Rev. J. L. McKee, of Louisville, are prominent among those who made most effort to insure its success. They deserve to be long remembered by the W. C. T. U., and the W. C. T. U. does not forget.

MISUNDERSTOOD.

MRS. MARIA UPHAM DRAKE.

O souls that struggle to express
The truths ye cannot now repress,
Of inward life for outward good!
In this earth language do ye own
A word of sadder, keener tone
Than this slow uttered word—misunderstood?

Earth crucified her Lord, and still Cries crucify, when human will
Sets Godward strong above her bid;
And friends, vexed sore, with kindly ruth,
Cry out "Enough," because forsooth,
Truth's Shechinah from their dim eyes is hid.

What wonder if the human lips
Trembling with dread apocalypse
Grow white with silent pain, and keep
God's truth within, until His voice
Break through them like their own with choice
Of their poor words to utter meaning deep?

What wonder if the spirit faint
And wearily, with tired plaint,
Pray for its own deliverance.
Too weak, indeed, alone to rise
To its fore-seeing destinies,
Too great to float on life's smooth stream of chance.

As individual stars are we Set out in God's infinity,
With cyclic ways about His throne;
What if the mystic, spheric course,
Drawn by this silent, unseen force,
Swerve out beyond thy ken in the unknown?

Why therefore cry Alas! and scorn
That gravitation, heaven born
Which draws us mutely to His will?
Who shall God's secret tell?
Who move in His own parallel?
One purpose deep all destinies fulfill.

Dear friends, whose patient love we know,
Why say ye "Move ye thus and so,
For flesh is weak, and heart is strong."
Say rather, "Move ye straight and true
To God's great pulse beat, moving through Thy own frail life to tune of His new song."

Still sounds from shore of Galilee
That voice resistless, "Follow me."
Meek Sufferer, we take Thy chrism:
Through earthly loss we seek Thy gain,
And knowing thus Thy crowned pain
Bear patiently the waves of this baptism.

HOW SHALL WE LIVE UPRIGHTLY?*

MRS. M. E. MCPHERSON.

Looking over our field of work, we see a hurried people, ever busy, rushing with railroad speed, "no time" to devote to healthful living, "no time" to rest, "no time" to recuperate, eating hastily, suffering from indigestion and sleeplessness, nervous, feverish and fretful, their countenances wearing an expression of pain. The youngest child has a careworn aged look oftener than a peacefful infantile countenance. Girls of ten or or twelve, faces suited to a body of twenty years or more, angular and thin, cramped respiration through corsets, uneven shoulders, curved spines, hands pressed into tight kids, and feet in utmost tortures in narrow soled, high heeled boots!! These girls under gas light till midnight, fed on unwholesome food, bolted bread, strong coffee and tea, with adulterated candies and sweetmeats for lunch, hurried and driven every hour by the great pressure of American life, "our girls," is it any wonder that they break down at school, go through life as invalids, or fall into premature graves, or perhaps resort to narcotics or stimulants to soothe their weary lives? And if they become mothers what have they which their offspring can inherit, but a like body?

Our young men, following similar lives, save the painful clothing of the body, pushed on by the ever rushing tide of business, take to tobacco and light drinks, to soothe the cravings caused by such feverish haste, and the lack of good, well cooked food.

This intemperate haste for money, for wealth, for power; this entire forgetfulness of the law of rest; this Sabbath law, given as much for the body as for the soul, is one, if not the primary cause of their thirst for something which seeks solace in tobacco and intoxicating liquors.

The first step in our work it appears to me, is to call a halt, "Give us a rest." Let us rest from all our labors. let us use our efforts towards having a "preparation day" for the Sabbath. If in cities and villages all business would virtually close at twelve m. on Saturday, the weary laborer in shop and office, the mother and little ones, the tired seamstress and shop girl, all, every one, could have a gala half day and evening in the avenues and parks, seek recreation which is rest, and then be ready and prepared to attend to their souls' welfare early Sabbath morning.

Cheerful amusement and relaxation of thought are as essential to the mind's development and health, as good food and rest are for the body.

The necessities of life, coupled with some luxuries, do not demand the amount of time allotted to them. The machinery at our hand, are God's appointed time-savers, and we should profit by them, as such, taking the surplus hours gained by their use for cultivating the mind and doing good to our less fortunate neighbor.

Feverish haste, in our opinion, creates a desire for tobacco, and liquor. It is love of money that creates the saloon keepers, and a love of gain, thirst for gold, equally or more sinful it is, which induces the manufacturers of food, the venders of milk, to adulterate them. Our meat, our flour, our sugar, our butter, our milk, our candies, our canned fruits and grains are adulterated. The art of cookery is perverted from its proper channel of healthfulness until it is another direct and all potent cause of intemperance and drunkenness. Added to this our mothers and sisters deal out the poison of alcohol in their desserts, fostering and often creating a taste for intoxicants.

It should be the duty and aim of our workers to enter the kitchen, to sweep and garnish and make ready for the new temperance cook book and visit the authorities who examine foods, and ever keep this adulteration of food before the public. We hear anathema upon anathema poured on the heads of saloon keepers. Still their business is an open one. They plant their batteries before us and put out their death dealing signs over their doors, which tell us they are selling poison. Those who enter know why they do so, and what they will get for their money. They get what they call for. Not so with the manufacturer; he labels his goods the opposite to what he sells. He puts pure and unadulterated on the vilest compounds.

The milk men advertise "pure country milk" and sell you with it Potomac water mixed with chalk! Let us turn for a while, our guns, or rather our hose, on these, and leave the saloonist with his truthful sign. Let the electric light of medical science shine into the pantry, into the nursery, on our tables, thereby cutting off a large proportion of customers from the saloon! Because, a man well fed, on good wholesome food, a man passing to his work by a saloon, with a half-loaf of homemade graham bread in his stomach will have no desire to enter. He is a safe. Lack of plenty of good food drives a man to tobacco and drink.

No better mission work for hygienists than a course in the college of cookery, and no better mission field than our cities and villages in which we should systematically set to work establishing hygienic lunch rooms, where the most healthful meals could be served at living prices, for moderate earnings. Add to these reception and reading rooms, and we will have planted oases in the deserts of our modern life, as refreshing, as life giving, as the grassy isles and fountains of the great Sahara.

The air of heaven pure and free, is a great ally in this temperance reform, especially in our sleeping apartments. All should know that a perfect circulation, not drafts, is positively essential to health and longevity Lack of perfect breathing is the cause of consumption, which in its first stages in cured by full long breaths of fresh pure air, and the removal of all undue pressure around the chest. Let us study ventilation and practice it as a preventive of the "drink" thirst.

If we study God's word carefully, in the law we find washings and purifyings all through, cleansing from the filth of the body preparatory to the soul's approach to its Maker, and as our great founder of Methodism, so we believe, "Cleanliness is next to godliness." The proper daily use of water in bathing is an invigorator of body and mind, taking off the earth clogs from the soul and making its aspirations upward, "spiritual not sensual or devilish." If mothers would abandon the rod, the strap, the rope, and other instruments of torture to the poor flesh, weary from bad ventilation, improper food, or nervous from the teasing of elders or nurses, and supplant these punishments with a gentle sponge bath and back rubbing, in place of bruises, shocked nerves and stripes, there would be the healthful glow, the merry laugh and song, the sweet kiss and loving embrace. Let us partake freely of water, not fearing to drink it, or hesitate about daily ablutions of the entire body.

Our occupations often give us imperfect exercise, the lack of which is a most fruitful cause of disease. As hygienists we should not fail to supply this imperfection by use of light gymnastics. The poet Bryant had apparatus in his bedroom, and for two hours daily practiced this health restorative, this mind invigorator, this destroyer of disease and promoter of longevity. The strength displayed in his writings, the power manifested in them, no doubt was due to his hygienic mode of life.

If we become "clothed upon" with "union suits" and "common sense" boots, our "kids" transformed to mitts, and gymnasiums in every school house, baths in every ward, a hygienic lunch in every city and hamlet, —when this is a reality, then the main causes of decline in health of Americans will be removed, giving them tendencies toward ascending the scale, by adding to modern life an annex of twenty-five years.

Finally, for good health we must have not only good air, good food, bathing and exercise, but good sound theology, a faith that needeth not to be ashamed, an assurance of faith, giving us peace, joy, and rest of soul, that "peace which passeth all understanding," which enables us at all times, in sunshine or shadow, in joy or grief, to read our title clear to mansions in the skies, thus "bid farewell to every fear,"—to all carking cares say Begone! for in "our Father's house are many mansions" and to know through the witness of the Spirit that where Christ is, we may be also. If this be our state of mind, the disastrous effects on our health of uncertainty, of fear, the fatal effects of which are known to all, will not be ours. The soul that can hear the whisperings of the Spirit speaking peace, saying "Fear not, I am with thee," has put on a coat of mail with which to ward off disease, and a sure source of defence against the cravings for alcohol. Joy and gladness are the fruits of a soul pardoned and accepted and this mind tends to great longevity, the length of days promised in the Word to the righteous, those living in perfect obedience to God's laws for the soul and the body.

WHY SHOULD SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS TEACH TEMPERANCE?

MARY ALLEN WEST.

Because they are Bible schools. Their great object is to impress the Bible upon the hearts and mind of their pupils as the "only infallible rule of faith and practice." They are to make it really a lamp to their feet and a guide to their way, so that (as they walk) it may light all dark places and guide through all intricate ways. The Bible tells us not only what to do—but also what not to do—its "Thou shalt not's" are as frequent and as important as its "Thou shalt's." We need to train our pupils to meet the temptations which will surely asails them, as Christ met the devil in the wilderness, with the word of God.

And we have thus trained them in regard to many sins. They are tempted to swear; we have taught them to oppose to this temptation, Christ's "Swear not at all." Perhaps the temptation is to covetousness, the tenth commandment offers a ready shield against this dart of the adversary; or they may be tempted to take what is not their own. "Thou shalt not steal," forbids the temptation growing into a sin.

Self seeking tempts us all: "In honor preferring one another," points out God's more excellent way. Thus through all the catagory of temptation, the Bible points a sure way of escape. The Sunday school should make these ways clear and plain. Temptations to drunkenness or excess in some form are spread out for our pupils on every hand. We wish them prepared to vanquish these attacks of the enemy by the "sword of the Spirit which is the word of God." God's word is full of texts which can be thus used, but too often they have been overlooked. Look back to your own experience and see if you were as carefully instructed in Sunday school concerning intemperance, as you were about lying, swearing, or theft. And yet temptation was just as liable to assail you in this direction as in any other; the consequences of yielding are even more destructive, for this sin becomes the parent of many others, and God's armory is just as full of weapons against it. Here are some of them:

"Drink no wine nor strong drink." Judges 12:7.

"Woe unto them that are mighty to drink wine, and men of strength to mingle strong drink." Isaiah 5:22.

"Be not drunken with wine, wherein is excess but be filled with the Spirit." Eph. 5:16.

"Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth its color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright; at last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder."

This is God's own pledge, stronger than man makes.

"Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost. Whoso defileth the temple of God, him will God destroy." I Cor. 6.

"Dearly beloved, I beseech you, abstain from fleshly lusts that war against the soul." I Peter 2:11.

"I Beseech you, therefore brethren, by the mercies of God, that you present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." Rom. 12:1.

The Sunday school should impress its pupils with the fact that the Bible is a temperance book. Very many persons seem to doubt this.

I have been told within the last year that the less we said about the Bible in connection with temperance the better, for the Bible was against us. Liquor sellers parade the streets with banners bearing the inscription, "Take a little wine for the stomach's sake and thine often infirmities." They have Bible mottoes on the walls of the hall where their association meets, and people who ought to know better are ensnared by their sophistries. It is the business of the Sunday school, as a Bible school, to uncloak all such sophistries and display their animus.

There never was in any Christian community, an organized evil which did not seek to hide behind the Bible. Slavery was a divine institution which could not be assailed without antagonizing the Bible: Polygamy as the patriarchal institution, claims the same immunity, and intemperance is but following in the same train. As teachers of God's word it is our duty to free it from this stigma and show it in its true light as the upholder of whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are right.

Show how it makes temperance a Christian virtue by its contrasting catalogues of the works of the flesh, in which is found "drunkenness" and the fruits of the Spirit, of which the crowning virtue, like a golden band binding the precious sheaf together, is temperance. God's appreciation of temperance is shown by the fact that when He wished to fit man for any especially important work, He took care to have him, aye, and his mother before him, a total abstainer. He wished a man of unexampled physical strength, and He sent an angel from heaven to give the strictest kind of a pledge both for herself and her unborn son, to the mother of Samson. He wished to raise up a judge in Israel, able to cope with unparalleled difficulties, and Samuel was trained for the work by a loving and temperate mother, and in the temple of God he was a "Nazarite purer than snow." And he who was deemed worthy the highest honor ever given to man, to be the forerunner of God's own anointed One, he whom Christ, himself, declared, is the greatest of those born of women, he too, was a Nazarite from his birth at direct command of God.

All these things are in the Bible, and with innumerable others, stamp it as a temperance book, and temperance as a Christian virtue. Hence it should be taught in the Sunday school.

How? By regular set lessons, coming once a quarter or oftener.

By looking at every lesson from a temperance point of view. By utilizing the many incidents in the Bible, like those referred to; the story of Daniel, when a boy he purposed not to defile himself with the king's wine, of the Nazarites, of the Rechabites, and many others, to impress temperance truth. By having temperance papers and books in the library. By holding temperance Sunday school concerts. By frequently circulating the pledge, and by the royally consistent example of all parents, teachers and superintendents.

WHAT ARE "MODEL READINGS?"

MISS JULIA COLMAN.

This question has been asked me so many times, that I beg leave to answer it through the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL.

In the new form of constitution for a local union, lately prepared and issued by our national union, it will be seen that in the order of business for the weekly meeting of a local union one item is a "Course of readings." This gives a recognized place for supplying a long felt want, which also the Boston convention recognized, when it asked Miss Willard to prepare a course of readings, and which work was turned over by Miss Willard to the superintendent of the literature department, and resulted in the preparation of the "Readings on Beer," the plan of which received Miss Willard's full endorsement. They have been used by many unions with great success. They consist of a selection of forty of the beer handbills grouped in monthly topics, and bound up in a five cent pamphlet called "Readings on Beer." Each member should have a copy. When the next reading is announced each member turns to the place in the first part of the pamphlet, and puts the date opposite the said reading. She sees there other tracts, books, and pamphlets where (page and paragraph given) may be found proofs of facts stated in the reading. All these tracts, books, and pamphlets for the course form a three dollar library on beer. And the lady who has the readings in charge gives out those called for by this special reading to several members. Any lady who receives one of these, takes it home, compares it carefully with the statements of the handbill and selects the passage which she thinks most pertinent and goes prepared to read it when called upon.

When, in the order of business, the readings are taken up, the handbill in the pamphlet is "read around," one sentence or paragraph by each member. The additional readings are then called for and given by the ladies who have looked them up at home. Then the meeting is thrown open for statements of personal observation, questions, etc., and those often bring out the most interesting discussions. The entire exercise may occupy twenty or thirty minutes and it has often proved exceedingly profitable. It makes the meetings interesting and attractive, and the members feel that they have learned wherewith to answer questions which will inevitably be asked of those who are conducting an intelligent reform.

It calls out the timid and gives all something to do. It furnishes most interesting items for the local press. It makes the women acquainted with higher orders of literature and shows how to use them. It makes them see that they have truth on their side and then they desire to spread it. In short it gives them the courage of their convictions. These hand-bills and tracts they will distribute to the entire community. This beer they will now fight intelligently and in many cases they can drive it out of the place. In all cases they help toward that end. These are the "Readings." The "Model Readings" take up these principal points in conventions and elsewhere, and show how it can be done. They are especially appropriate for county and district conventions and they have proved very interesting features of state conventions.

The readings on cider are now ready on the same plan, and at the same price. It is an off year for cider, but for that very reason, it may be easier to fight it and prevent the making of it, when the apples do come.

Readings of this kind about beer and cider contain primary instruction on the whole question and whoever reads these carefully will know all the main facts about alcohol in all forms.

"MICHIGAN, MY MICHIGAN."

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Next Fourth of July is "Prohibition Day" in Iowa. Their law then goes into effect, and they will arrange for a grand demonstration throughout the state. Why would it not be a grand idea for our local unions, so far as possible, to join with sympathetic, prophetic interest in this "Women's Fourth of July?" Make the Bands of Hope its basis; get up a program; have banners with new mottoes; sing "Tremble, King Alcohol, we shall grow up," and Dr. Rankin's anthem (see advertising columns of THE UNION SIGNAL); let the best local speakers be secured; let us dispense with cannon and toy pistols, but have a true, sacred, joyful day of patriotic memories and hopes. I spoke to Mary T. Lathrap about this and she said, "I wish every woman in the United States who believes as we do would on that day put out a flag over the door of her own home with the words 'CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION' inscribed thereon." Now, dear friends, here are the suggestions. Perhaps our own paper will work the matter up; I know the fervor of her loyal heart who holds the pen. As my dear father used to say, "We shall see what we shall see."

I greatly enjoyed the annual meeting of Michigan's W.C.T.U. last week at Flint. Coming the last day, I can do no justice to their splendid bill of fare, with Mrs. Lathrap, Mrs. Hunt, and Lucia Kimball as the speakers. The latter left a Y.W.C.T.U. as a souvenir of her visit. They re-elected their gifted president, who is a leader of whom any body of women might be proud.

Michigan is rich in women. Indeed each state develops rare personalities in a manner that reminds me of the growth evinced by Jack's bean stalk. Mrs. Benjamin is one of the strongest women in the nation. Mesdames Bailey, Kinney, Kellogg, Boise, Bourns, Harmon, Greene (sister of our Rev. Dr. Barrows, of Chicago) and all the vice presidents and superintendents are women of mark.

They had a great evergreen full of hand-painted souvenirs from the enterprising local union of Flint, to every delegate, with star shaped ones for those whom they chose to call "stars;" with a crescent moon for prohibition, whose probability grows apace in "Michigan, my Michigan."

They had a lovely blue embroidered banner with our national motto; they had a white cross decked with evergreen; flowers in profusion (a basket for each officer and visitor "from a distance";) literature was there in plenty and they seemed pleased with the sample I brought, especially the poster, "Our National Drink Bill," which THE UNION SIGNAL keeps on sale at ten cents, and our women should order and post up in all available places in every town where we not only have "a name to live" but are really alive. They had reports from district vice presidents that I have never heard excelled and rarely equalled. Mrs. Norman Bailey's is the "banner district" this year.

Mrs. Campbell, of Traverse City, is a grand district president. She started in last year without a penny in the treasury. Imported speakers and organizers, appealed to the people to help out with expenses, and has raised $500 lacking three, in a most difficult field.

Dear, brave hearts of our district and county presidents: I could not trust myself to speak of what their patience and courage means to my own spirit as an inspiration!

They did well by our paper; passed a strong resolution of appreciation of its growing excellence under the present management, and are arranging to take stock by district and local unions. That is a fine idea. Would it might prove contagious, so that each local union might by having $25 worth of stock, have a vote by itself, or through its proxy, in the annual meeting when the plans are laid for the new year.

For the first time I saw a real live governor in a W. C. T. U. convention, seated on the platform with his noble wife beside him, both being introduced and a basket of flowers presented to them. Governor Begole said he had all his life believed as did the W. C. T. U. of the state over which he presided, that prohibition and total abstinence were the guiding stars of this reform. Woman's ballot would surely give us the former, and its day was marching on. He used to think that nine in ten of our criminals were manufactured in saloons; he now believes from his observations in the prisons of Michigan that nineteen in twenty is a more correct figure. He spoke of base ball as now conducted, calling it a most demoralizing game, involving gambling, pools, tobacco and drink; said he was recently on a train when a club boarded it, made up of "our first (?)" young men, and he said their conduct could be compared to nothing but "a lot of drunken Indians." Gov. Begole has a kind, fatherly heart, as one would know by a look into his face. He is a good Christian, a devout Presbyterian and thoroughly esteemed in his own town of Flint, where he has spent forty years. The executive board of the state W. C. T. U. held their meetings in his office, and he opened his home to delegates. Did the like of this ever occur before under the sun?

Our admirable Miss S. A. Rulison, also a resident of Flint, and universally beloved, resigned her secretaryship, which will be filled by Mrs. J. M. Wheeler, of Grand Rapids, who has a clear-cut face and a pigeonholed brain. Mrs. P. J. Howard, of Petoskey, is the efficient recording secretary, and Mrs. Prof. Dickey, of Albion Collge, a talented young woman, wife of a prohibition leader, has that place of supreme importance, the supertendency of scientific instruction in the public schools.

I rode on to Saginaw, after the convention, with Mrs. Dr. Freeman, mother of Alice Freeman, president of Wellesly College. I asked about her daughter, her training, traits, etc. This sentence especially impressed me: "Alice was never idle one minute; she had the busiest little brain I ever knew and she never seemed to know the meaning of the word obstacle."

Dear girls who read my rapid lines, that sentence has in it the sum total of success in life. It is a sure recipe —only "add faith." No, you need not add anything, for to one trained as Alice was, faith is indeed "the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen" and "goes without saying" as the basis of her character and work. I am glad to know her glorious mother, one of those "district presidents" of whom I have been writing; the wife of a busy physician with a large family, but such a sunny spirit and tireless "thinking machine" back of her kind brown eyes. She told me she meant to have our paper sent to each minister, doctor, lawyer, etc., in her city. Dear sisters you can in no way circulate temperance literature so effectively as this.

She told me too, she hoped the eleven districts of Michigan would arrange to hold conventions this year consecutively, so that a national worker might make the tour of the state and in a few weeks attend them all. This is a golden thought and I hope may be treasured up.

Our beloved Mrs. Evelyn Peters was at the convention in restored health. Her heart is in the blessed "mission for the woodsmen." Saginaw Valley being the lumber center of the world, and those poor men being stripped of their hard earnings by the saloons. Bay City with 25,000 population, has between two and three hundred saloons! O what hard soil for temperance work! But I met brave men and women last night at the opera house. The pastors are a unit for our cause.

Mrs. Bennett, the new president, had a meeting well "worked up"; Anna Gordon addressed the children and organized a cold water army, and there are no better women than those who told me they would help. Some of my own dear pupils in Evanston were from Bay City, and Miss Addie Holmes, now a leading teacher there, will help our cause as she has always helped every noble object that asked her generous aid.

I close by stating that this convention adopted the same resolution on woman's ballot that we did at Detroit last autumn, without debate and small dissent, also heartily endorsed the Prohibition Home Protection party (called in Michigan the "Union party").

Let me copy for our general behoof Mrs. Lathrap's "Convention Hints" from last page of the program, which is not unlike that of the National in variety and size:

CONVENTION HINTS.

Help, and do not hinder.
Be on time, attend to business.
Say only the best things.
Remember "Robert's Rules."
Seek first the good of the cause we defend and the glory of God.
The devotional meetings will be under the control of Mrs. J. F. Driggs and Mrs. R. P. Huntington.
Make the hour of prayer of first interest.
Let us seek and expect the presence and blessing of God.

For one I say, "Hurrah for Michigan."

Ever yours, FRANCES E. WILLARD.

LAUS DEO.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Having but a moment to write I can only make most hasty note of our efforts at Louisville in connection with the International Sunday school convention.

The Friday morning meeting in the First Christian church was most blessed from the beginning to the close. Notwithstanding it was one of the most important sessions of the convention, being held at the opera house, (there were double sessions held each day) and many were taxed in entertaining guests, the church was filled, many standing. The following was the program:

Presiding officer,—Miss Lucia E. F. Kimball, superintendent Sunday school department for Woman's National Christian Temperance Union.
Hymn,—How Firm a Foundation ye Saints of the Lord.
Prayer,—Rev. B. M. Messick.
Temperance song,— House of Refuge Choir.
Scripture lesson,—Miss Alice Pirtle.
Song,—House of Refuge Choir.
Address,—Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, president of Ohio W. C. T. U.
Address,—Mrs. Mary J. Aldrich, president of Iowa W. C. T. U.
Song.
Address,—Mrs. Mary B. Willard, editor of THE UNION SIGNAL.
Address,—Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, superintendent of southern work.
Song.
Address,—Miss Frances E. Willard, president of National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.
Address,—George W. Bain.
Benediction.

Mrs. Woodbridge and Mrs. Willard were unable to be with us but Mrs. Sibley, of Georgia, and Mrs. Hibben, of Peoria, took their places.

The power of the Highest was over us and a heavenly peace fell upon our souls as at the close Mrs. Hibben carried the great heart of the audience up to God in fervent, restful supplication. I felt no more doubt or fear for the result of the afternoon than if it were already decided. And when we all joined in singing "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," it was as truly a pean of thanksgiving as if the grand expression of the afternoon had been given.

Do you say, "Was it then such an easy victory?" Nay, verily, some of the strongest minds of the convention were arrayed against the granting of our request. Conscientious and true to their convictions we believe them to be and this fact and their commanding position made the action counter to their expressed opinion more difficult. Another obstacle stood like a lion in the way. By a rule of the convention, adopted some years ago, all resolutions are referred to the executive committee—and the fate of temperance resolutions bearing upon the subject of quarterly temperance lessons has been heretofore never to be heard of again. It was the last hour of the closing session. A motion to suspend the rule could only prevail by unanimous consent. One dissenting voice would prevent such action.

At the close of Miss Willard's address, which was clear, incisive, and eloquent, Rev. C. N. Pond, secretary of the Ohio Sunday school union, presented a memorial from the Ohio Sunday school convention held recently, asking this International convention to recommend to the lesson committee the provision of quarterly temperance lesson subjects in the regular series. Dear, faithful Mrs. Brown, superintendent of Sunday school work for that state, had sent me a roll of names several yards long which he had ready to present, but somebody moved before he had time to do this that his memorial be referred to the executive committee. He asked for a suspension of the rules that the matter might come before the convention. Maryland brought a similar memorial. A gentleman from Tennessee, whose name I do not recall, had risen before to offer a resolution similar to Mr. Pond's, and soon it became apparent even to one who did not "read between the lines" that the bolts and bars of cast iron rules could not stay the expression of opinion upon this subject.

But there was objection to suspension of the rules, and nothing could be done but to proceed with the program. It was a trying time for Mrs. Chapin to speak, but she proved herself, as usual, equal to the occasion.

Meantime there came to me assurances that the matter would not be dropped. At the close of Mrs. Chapin's address we were nearing five o'clock, the hour of adjournment. Some one moved to adjourn, which motion was not seconded but instead one to extend the time was carried. A motion to lay the whole matter upon the table was voted down most vigorously.

Mr. B. F. Jacobs of Chicago, chairman of the executive committee (I suppose there must have been a consultation of members of the executive committee on the platform), came forward and presented the resolution asking for the provision of quarterly temperance lessons in the regular series. This action was greeted with a tumult of applause, and many seconds were heard throughout the house.

Dr. J. H. Vincent, chairman of the lesson committee, and re-appointed that morning, spoke against the provision of special temperance lessons. When we bear in mind that Dr. Vincent is probably the most popular and influential Sunday school man in the country, we gain some idea of the strength and intensity of the sentiment upon this question in that it could not be stayed or turned back, even in the face of his expressed adverse opinion. Dr. Jones, of Virginia, said he should vote against the resolution, for although he was in favor of temperance he did not want prohibition brought into the lessons. Mr. Flinn, of Louisiana, feared we were treading on dangerous ground. "When the shadow of coercion comes then comes disintegration." (He must have forgotten that recommendations are not coercion.) He feared we were insisting on methods rather than principles.

Judge Estey, of Georgia, spoke grandly for the resolution. He said he had been requested by a sick member of the executive committee, not able to be present, to say that ninety-seven counties of Georgia had prohibition. Mr. Farris, of Missouri, also spoke strongly in favor of the resolution. But time was precious and there were repeated calls for the question, which when put was carried, the daily paper said "unanimously amid wild applause and the waving of hats and handkerchiefs in the air." The vote was not unanimous, we are sure, but nearly so and the greatest enthusiasm and earnestness prevailed. The text of the resolution was this:

Resolved, That this convention recommend the International Lesson Committee in making out its next series to provide temperance lesson subjects quarterly in its regular course.

It is the same in substance as has been passed again and again throughout the country by local, county, district and state conventions and ministerial gatherings.

This victory, which was of God, did not happen. It was organized, planned for, worked for, prayed for persistently. It is the outcome of all the efforts in this line in all these years.

As I looked over that audience, and saw the eager, intent faces of men who had said, "We will stand by you," as I beheld the sturdy, fearless fulfillment of that promise, I gave thanks that Dr. Holland's cry, "God give us men," was answered.

Women of Ohio, give Chauncey N. Pond your heartiest encouragement and support in his special work. He said when I asked him to present the resolution: "I should count it the greatest pleasure and could only wish I had a more eloquent tongue to plead your cause."

Women of Texas, give all honor to the Hon. Ira H. Evans, chairman of the convention during the afternoon. But for his hearty sympathy and firm masterly grasp of the situation, the convention might not have found an opportunity to voice their opinion.

Women of New York, remember the man, whose name I did not learn, that early in the convention presented a memorial from the state Sunday school convention, asking for the provision of quarterly temperance lesson.

Women from Illinois, remember gratefully our noble William Reynolds, who has always been our champion and who rose to the full hight of his majestic proportions at the critical moment and asked if a way could not be made for the expression of the voice of the convention. And temperance women, one and all, when Col. Geo. Bain comes again to your town, give him the royalist welcome you know how—not only because his eloquence and manhood deserve this, but because he and his gentle wife, by their untiring efforts, contributed largely to the success of our meeting at Louisville. The daily papers said truly of his address in that meeting: "He went straight to the point and made a brilliant finale to the grand occasion."

How I wish I could tell you of the reception given by the Y. W. C. T. U. at the lovely home of Mrs. Leech, the president. Coffee, cake and ice cream were served from five to seven and all delegates invited. It was delightful to hear grave, dignified men say, as they did the next day, "It was so nice to be waited on by the young ladies."

But however much the local effort conduced to the success of our efforts, I want every woman of our W. C. T. U. who has wrought for this end in all these years, and every faithful, true hearted man who has aided us in this work, as so many have, to remember that this victory is yours.

Yours by the prayers, the efforts, however small, and made oftentimes with a weary hand and troubled heart that lie behind us—they live and breathe through all this blessed assurance that our labor has not been in vain in the Lord.

This result makes us a World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union in very deed, for it touches England and France and other countries across the sea.

Friends and helpers, let me repeat what is so often in my heart: I thank you. God crowns you. Humanity blesses you. LUCIA E. F. KIMBALL.

Chicago, June 16, 1884.

OUR GIRLS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL: — It is delightful to see the Young Women's Unions appearing in print. Finding the hints and suggestions from a Y. W. U., in a late issue, very useful, it occurred to me that others might be aided by an account of our work. "We" are the Y. W. C. T. U. on the Hill of Brooklyn, N. Y., which began its existence four years ago as an auxiliary to the W. C. T. U. on the Hill. Our work has been mainly in two directions, social and educational. As to the former the members themselves are only just gaining a faint inkling of the power they have in the community. This force manifests itself in six weekly sociables held at the houses of members. Three committees — upon entertainment, refreshment, and reception of guests — are appointed to make all necessary preparations. Young men and maidens not interested in temperance work are invited. After a pleasant social hour a carefully prepared program, consisting of music, recitations and readings, a temperance address by some member of the older union, or other friend of the cause, or brief papers relative to the subject by one or two of the young ladies, is carried out. An invitation to claim the privilege of being one of us, by the signing of our pledge and the payment of an annual fee of fifty cents, is extended to the guests by the president, or some other officer. Then come some light refreshments and another hour of social intercourse, giving opportunity to the members to extend personal invitations to their friends and acquaintances to join. We find our socials to be enjoyed by all, and eminently successful in gaining adherents. We averaged last year an increase of five new members after each social, many of the recruits becoming much interested and very active in the service. At our last gathering there were one hundred and thirty present, and many of these young people there experienced the "arrest of thought," which probably they would not have gained in any other way. I, too, in agreement with the views expressed by the president of the Chicago Y. W. C. T. U., feel the social work to be a most important means of disseminating knowledge, spreading temperance sentiment, and advancing our cause.

We hold in addition, every Friday afternoon, a meeting conducted by the president, consisting of devotional exercises and the discussion of such topics as the "Effect of Alcohol upon the Nervous System"; "Effects of Alcohol upon the Circulation and its Organs"; "Does the Use of Tobacco lead to Intoxicating Beverages?" "Reasons for Signing the Pledge"; "Alcohol as a Medicine"; "Alcohol in the Kitchen"; "Does the Bible Teach Total Abstinence or Temperance?"

Several ladies are appointed at each meeting to be prepared either to write a paper or bring and read selections the succeeding week upon the topic then announced. The last Friday of each month the discussion is replaced by the transaction of business. Upon a recent afternoon friends were invited to attend, and a debate—prohibition versus high license—was held. Four non-members were invited to uphold high license, and four members were appointed for prohibition. The question was decided on the merits of the arguments by the moderator previously appointed, and later overwhelmingly by the audience, in favor of prohibition.

The union supports a free reading room for boys and young men, instructs the inmates of the Newsboys' home in English branches and temperance truths, teaches the children of an industrial school facts about alcohol, "what it is, what it does, and what it will make them do if they take it"; distributes temperance literature in stores, cars, factories and depots, and in conjunction with the older union sustains a juvenile union, conducted upon the model of a Sabbath school. Most of the instruction in all these directions is given in classes with a regular teacher for every eight or ten pupils. The different branches of work are carried on by committees appointed for the purpose, each chairman preparing her own plan and superintending its execution. The gentlemen members, by acting upon the various committees, have proved to be very useful additions to the working force of the society. The union is supported by the donations of friends and the results of occasional public entertainments given for its benefit.

Hoping that some one may derive as much benefit from our story as we do from the accounts of others, and that the National organ will not feel it presumptuous to be addressed by "our young women again,"

I remain, MARY GRAHAM, President.

THE GRANDMOTHERS AGAIN.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—It must be a hopeful day for humanity when grandmothers can discuss through so acceptable a medium as your columns the important questions that are pressing continually home to be answered by those who love and care so faithfully for the dear ones of our homes. Broad landscapes and wide stretches of cloud and sky can be discovered and enjoyed even if one must peer through a "crack in the wall," so the seemingly indifferent "pie question" may, narrow as it is, be an avenue for wide light on the food question.

I surmised that the "rich dark mass" would prove a target, but please consider, dear Grandma Thinkandwork, that this is not due to high seasoning with spices to much as to long cooking, as was intimated, and are here not arguments to be brought in favor decidedly of concentrated food, especially for those who must endure our northern winters? According to my reading, the boiled cider or apple jelly used bears no closer relation to intoxicating cider, than currant jelly does to currant wine, or dry sugar and dark molasses do to rum. One question, dear grandma:

Do we find the army of drunkards, recruiting from homes where the table has been generously spread with well cooked food, and the children made to feel welcome to such a portion as their craving, growing bodies required, or is it from the homes where meals are just a snatch for something to sustain life, material poorly cooked and grudgingly provided? I believe the extremes to be dangerous, but there is a question if the lack of generous diet does not vitiate the condition of growing boys, leaving them an easy prey to the temptation to get something "that tastes good," in a saloon or any where else it may be obtained, in more cases than overfeeding does.

Cooking is a business sadly underestimated and slighted in a great proportion of American homes. We know how mothers and home makers are crowded, but my advice is "care for your table first, and do what you can in other lines when this is done." Three times a day let husband and sons taste your faithful love and care in the well planned and well served meals. Eating is a business we cannot slight one, that must be followed day after day. So cooking should not be done in spurts, having a great outlay one day and scrimping meanly the next, but to secure and hold good conditions of health must be equal day by day, and suited to the needs of the body during the changing seasons. In looking about for supplies let us get at truth, and not let our fears urge us into absurdity. Years ago I asked a friend, a young girl, if she had read a certain thrilling story that was being published in the National Era, that pioneer anti-slavery paper which told the story of Uncle Tom's cabin. "Why, no," said she, "I thought it was a novel, and it is wicked to read novels, is it not?"

Yours for love of home,

GRANDMA WORKANDTHINK.

WHY WE NEED NATIONAL PROHIBITION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Persons who are opposed to national prohibition suggest that the people in France and Germany are healthy and wealthy without it.

France and Germany and other countries of the old world may go along without national prohibition rather than America, but this country needs it absolutely. For, in the old country there is a custom, that is far better than a law, as the children must keep off from any drinking or playing or any other corrupt place, to the fourteenth or sixteenth year of age, when their body is pretty strong and able to resist the effects of alcohol for a while, while in our country many children begin to drink, to smoke, etc., in the eighth and tenth year of age, when their system can not stand the bad effects of alcoholic drinks and of tobacco. And the results of these sinful habits in early life, are remarkable soon, and more awfully in the future time of their life. It is my opinion that if we don't get national prohibition very soon our country will have the most wicked generation the world has ever seen. E. PFEIFFER.

ALL THAT'S IN A NAME.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The complaint of the German physician, given in THE UNION SIGNAL of June 5, that our National motto, "For God and Home and Native Land," shuts out all foreign born citizens and causes them to feel like aliens, has fastened itself in my mind, and sorry as I should be to see it changed, I still want it to be. But I don't quite like the amendment he offers. The word "country," without qualifications, has a bare sided sound. "My country," sounds altogether differently, and "For God and home and our country" would not be as naked in its appeal to the ear or eye. But better than all I think would be this: "For God and home and land we love." We surely could all join in that. And you see it keeps the old rhythm and so would not strike with such unpleasant abruptness those to whom the present motto has become so dear.

Cordially yours, AURILLA FURBER.

QUESTION—WHY?

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Will some one tell us where the Republican party of Iowa, the party that "fit and bled" for constitutional amendment, was about the time of the drafting and subsequent adoption of the platform of the Chicago convention? Will some one rise and explain? Yours inquiringly, C. B. BUELL.

GROWN-UP LAND.

ANNIE M. LIBBY.

Good-morrow, fair maid, with lashes brown,
Can you tell me the way to Womanhood Town?

Oh, this way and that way—never a stop,
'Tis picking up stiches grandma will drop,
'Tis kissing the baby's troubles away,
'Tis learning that cross words never will pay,
'Tis helping mother, 'tis sewing up rents,
'Tis reading and playing, 'tis saving the cents,
'Tis loving and smiling, forgetting to frown,
Oh, that is the way to Womanhood Town.

Just wait, my brave lad—one moment, I pray,
Manhood Town lies where—can you tell the way?

Oh, by toiling and trying we reach that land—
A bit with the head, a bit with the hand—
'Tis by climbing up the steep hill, Work,
'Tis by keeping out of the wide street, Shirk,
'Tis by always taking the weak one's part,
'Tis by giving mother a happy heart,
'Tis by keeping bad thoughts and actions down,
Oh, that is the way to Manhood Town.

And the lad and the maid ran hand in hand
To their fair estates in Grown-up Land. [Sel.

A RIDDLE FOR YOU.

GUESS MY NAME BUT AVOID MY COMPANY.

Though I do not wear a crown, I possess more influence and power than any European sovereign. I have existed from generation to generation, but am assuming more sway over the civilized world every year. I extend my authority into nearly every city and village in the British Isles. The emperor of Hades is my strongest ally, and my subjects very often emigrate to his kingdom. Strange as this may appear, yet it is a fact, that high dignitaries in Christian churches solicit my company, and at times receive from my treasury handsome gifts to enlarge and beautify their temples of worship, while many of the clergy enjoy my association.

The British government find me a warm supporter of of their revenue, and employ my agents to collect it; they uphold my authority, and legislate for my large and flourishing business, irrespective of the spiritual influence I exert on the population. They place at my disposal an immense number of officials, whose vocation will be mentioned further on: while they encourage me to extend my commercial relations to the colonies of India and Australia. I am at peace with all the crowned heads of Europe, but the ex-president of the United States refused me admission into the "White House."

I have been given the active services of the police in the management of my trade. Magistrates, paid and unpaid, sit on the bench at my bidding, and bow to my authority, many of them are in my employment on high salaries. Lawyers derive much of their professional business from the quarrelsome nature of my nearest friends. Lawyers spend much time pleading for and against me. Judges on circuit acknowledge that I keep them employed, and that I succeed in demoralizing more people than any other agency known. Business men I compel to leave their offices and sit in the hungry jury box at my pleasure, while I am a fruitful cause of many of their bad debts.

The medical profession are becoming disloyal to me, but I have still a large proportion under my grasp, and they constantly introduce me to new patients, where I make many friends, many of them never leave my side, and die in my parlor; I show them due respect, and attend their funeral feasts.

Papas and mamas introduce me to their children at the dinner table, and allow them to join my Sunday school.

The fair sex are getting very fond of me, many of them give me a morning call, and get so enchanted with my society, they visit me again in the afternoon; many call three times a day, the last visit is always the most enjoyable.

The government are really most liberal in aiding me in the various departments of my business—they appoint men of undoubted character to see that no robbery goes on when I leave my still chamber, and that no cold water falls on my head. Being partners in the concern they hold the entire amount of "preferred stock," and give me in return about three-fourths of the poor house accommodation, a larger proportion of the wards in the lunatic asylums and hospitals free of charge, while the bridewells and jails are open to my numerous customers.

It's all nonsense to say that education is an enemy to my advancement. I defy it! I have numerous schools of my own in every city and town.

While other people rest on Sunday, I have the privilege of keeping over 50,000 people at work, as I have no respect whatever for the Sabbath. The pawnbroker materially assists me in ready cash. The undertaker puts my victims out of the way at earliest convenience, and as for the publican, I supply him with all his comforts—he is the mainspring of my establishment. The coroner gets nearly all his fees through my influence.

Though millions of professing Christians give me their hospitality, I never leave until I am turned out of doors, and though they love me, I despise the respectability of their characters and delight leading them into my long dark chambers which end in ruin and death.

The cry of the broken-hearted wife never troubles me. The wail of the starving children never enters my ear. I have neither mercy, pity, or compassion for those who get ruined by partaking too freely of my cordiality. I bring down the rich from luxury to want, and the working man and his family from plenty to pauperism and rags. It's nothing to me. Thousands of orphans are produced by my trade, but I leave them to the public charities.

I travel free on all the railways, first-class, second-class and third-class, and sail in all the ocean and channel steamers. I never get sea-sick. I sometimes so captivate the officers on board with my conversation that they lose their reckonings and steer for the rocks. They forfeit their lives, but I am always saved.

As to my popularity, I am equally welcome at the banquets of the rich and the table of the peasant. I am a favorite in the palaces of kings, while the outcasts of society and the victims of delirium tremens delight in my charms. I am a public executioner myself, but sometimes the hangman relieves me in the discharge of my duties. Possessing such vast influence, my revenues are enormous; I boast myself to be the richest man in the world. Would you believe it, my income is $900,000,000 a year, which is equal to over $17,000,000 a week $2,500,000 a day, $100,000 every hour, or over $1,600 a minute.

I am a successful warrior—the number of human lives killed in the battlefields of the world every year is small compared to the thousands I hurl into an untimely grave, yet I use neither shot, shell, nor torpedoes.

The devil and me we always agree—
I like him and he likes me.

Having now given you some idea of the extent of my power, I leave you to guess my name. It commences with AL and ends with OL.

READER!

Beware! deny him as a friend, remember what he saith!
Deceitful are his many ways, they end in crime and death:
Avoid his subtle paths, that lead to sin and woe;
Look up to heaven for help to save from such a foe.

THE FAIRY SISTER.

Sallie stood in the middle of the floor with three little discontented wrinkles in the middle of her forehead.

"I wish I was a fairy god-mother!" she said, listlessly, picking up one of Baby Harris' little dresses and dropping it again in another wrong place for mother to hunt after.

"What for?" asked Aunt Helen, laughing to think of fourteen-year-old Sallie being a fairy god-mother.

"Oh, why, lots of things! Just now I'd wave my hand and this room would be swept and dusted, and Baby Harris would stop his screeching, and the boys would find something else to do besides plaguing him, and I'd have a little peace of my life."

"Why don't you try being a fairy sister?" said Aunt Helen, smiling.

"What would I do?" cried Sallie, eagerly. The idea struck her fancy.

"Everything Her Royal Laziness wants a fairy god-mother to do!" laughed Aunt Helen.

Sallie laughed, too, with a little blush. She wasn't too stupid to take a broad hint like that. She tucked on her little blue lace-trimmed sweeping cap, and soon appeared with the broom for her wand. After some vigorous flourishes the floor was clean as a new pin, and Aunt Helen was sneezing with the dust.

Next, Sallie exchanged the broom for another magic wand called the duster, and presto!—all the dust had vanished, the mantel ornaments were speckless, the books stood in orderly rows, the window shades were snapped up to just the right height, and the sunlight, looking in with an approving smile, came and stretched itself contentedly on the rug like a great yellow lap-dog. Aunt Helen looked up and gave her a funny little nod which meant "So far, so good!" and Sallie took broom and dust-pan into the kitchen, to look for further labors. You never heard such a hub-hub as there was out there. Not unless you have three boys and two babies in your family.

"Pity sakes!" cried Sallie, trying to put her fingers in her ears, and so dropping the broom and spilling the dust-pan. In the minute that it took to pick it up she thought of her new character.

"Billy's been an' gone an' tummeled wight in the f'ow b'al, head first!" said little Paul, solemnly, stooping over to look in her face as she bent over the dust-pan. "Spoilted all the f'ow to make bikkits wiv!"

"Ain't!" spluttered Billy, in a hollow voice from the bottom of the barrel.

"Ain't!" Hear him, Sallie!" cried Johnny, doubling up with laughter at Billy's antics in trying to get out. "P'raps 'tisn't Billy's legs sticking out; oh, no! P'raps it's some other boy's legs; oh, yes! Long may they wave!"

Sallie couldn't help laughing, but she went into the pantry and gave the empty flour-barrel a little tip that sent Billy out squirming on the floor.

"Wanted to make some paste, that's all," explained Billy, sheepishly.

"Let's mix him up in some cold water, then," said teasing Johnny, "I'm sure there's plenty of flour in his hair."

"No such thing," said Sallie, laughing. "Let me brush you, Billy, and then I'll scrape some flour off the boards for your paste. Didn't do any hurt to the bikkits Puss-cat, 'cause there wasn't any there."

She comforted him so well that he was soon able to be around and tending to his usual occupation—that of bothering the babies.

"Boys," cried Sallie, suddenly, "'sposin' there was a fairy should come right in and say she'd do any identical thing you wanted her to—what would you ask her?"

"Cut tags for my kite," said Billy, promptly.

"Make some 'lasses candy," (from Johnny).

"Put the pockets in my t'owsers so the marbuls will stay," pleaded Paul.

The twins placidly sucked their thumbs, for a wonder, as if trying to decide what they did want.

"'Twould need three or four fairies to go around," said Sallie. "I'll do one of the things."

"My kite!" cried Billy.

"Candy!" shouted Johnny.

"Pockets," piped Paul.

"Draw lots," said Sallie. The trowsers were in luck. Sallie went and begged Aunt Helen for "sheet iron to make pockets out of," and sat down on the bottom stair to work while Paul "clustered around her," as Johnny said.

"I could show you about the kite while I'm basting," said this very obliging fairy sister.

"And couldn't you, 'spose, tell me how to do the candy?" put in Johnny.

"If mamma's willing, I guess so," said Sallie. "Mamma's taking a nap. Ask Aunt Helen."

Auntie said: "Yes, indeed!" so Johnny went to work. He obeyed orders like a soldier and just as the candy was going to burn, the pockets were done, and Sallie could hop up and "tend to things."

"What has my little girl been doing to keep the babies so still the whole afternoon?" asked mamma, coming down from her long, sweet nap, with a rested face and shining eyes.

"Just playing," said Sallie, blushing to think she hadn't played this beautiful game before.

"She did just e-zactly everything anybody wanted her to," cried Johnny and Billy, who were "trying" the candy in sticky cups of cold water. "Played she was a fairy."

"Better 'n'at," cried Paul, standing, as Johnny said, three feet "in his pockets." "She's a firs 'ate, sfeet, fat girl!"

Sallie accepted this compliment "from whence it came." She knew it expressed unbounded admiration. The fairy sister came so often after that first visit that mamma said she should have to believe in the stories of changelings.

As for Sallie, I heard her saying to Aunt Helen the other day that it isn't worth while to go around wishing for fairy god-mothers, when you can do the things yourself.—Advance.

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S TALK.

Dear Children:—I am getting the loveliest reports from our little soldiers. They are working as well as fighting soldiers, truly. In Erie, Pa., a Band of Hope, led by Miss Nannie E. Burwell, is getting up a box of playthings and necessaries for the Creche at Bethesda Mission. And, what do you think, the children of the mission, those poor little waifs gathered in off the streets of the "Black Hole" into the children's church and Sabbath school, have actually started a flower mission, of their own, and are gathering flowers and carrying them to sick people in the neighborhood. You see how soon the spirit of the Master, who went about doing good, takes its abode in the hearts of the "little soldiers," and they want to work for Him.

I have word too of the death, no, the promotion of one of our number, who was taken up into the higher and the shining ranks a few weeks ago. Her mamma is the president of a W. C. T. U. not very far away, and she in all her sorrow and grief wrote to tell me how her dear little girl went home to God, true to the last. It seems that when she was very near to death and so faint she could scarcely whisper, a friend at her bedside said, "Shall we not give her a little wine?" The dull ears caught the mention of "wine" and her head turned on her pillow and "No, I'll not take it," came instantly from her lips. So she went with pure lips and blood cleansed soul to her Savior. Her dear mamma says, "And for it all I can praise God, and look to Him for the faith that overcometh the world in life and death."

So pray we all of us. CAPTAIN DEBORAH.

There's no royal road to greatness;
Men must ever climb to fame;
All the miser's hoarded treasures
Could not buy a deathless name.
Is true honor's goal before you?
Would you great achievements dare?
Then at once be up and doing—
You must win if you would wear.

My 32, 52, 22, 18 is to love to excess.
My whole is a Bible verse.

146. CROSS-WORD ENIGMA.

In acre but not in rood;
In breakfast but not in food;
In over but in under;
In lightning but not in thunder;
In middle but not in end;
In take but not in send;
In curtain but not in lace;
In trot but not in pace;
In noose but not in rope;
In king but not in pope;
In some but not in any;
In three but not in many.
Before the war my whole was under a cloud,
But since that time he's had reason to be proud.

QUARTERLY TEMPERANCE LESSON.—No. VI.

June 29.

BY THE REV. J. C. W. COXE, D.D.

TOPIC: WARNINGS AGAINST WINE,

Lesson Text.—Prov. 29: 29-35.

29. (a) Who hath woe? who hath sorrow? who hath contentions? who hath babbling? who hath wounds without cause? who hath redness of eyes?
30. They that tarry long at the wine; they that go to seek mixed wine. (b)
31. (c) Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright.
32. At the last (d) it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder. (e)
33. Thine eyes shall behold strange women, and thine heart shall utter perverse things. (f)
34. Yea, thou shalt be as he that lieth down in the midst (g) of the sea, or as he that lieth upon the top of a mast.
35. They have stricken me, (h) shalt thou say, and I was not sick; they have beaten me, and I felt it not (i); when shall I awake? I will seek it yet again (j).

(a) Is. 5: 11, 22. (b) Ps. 75: 8; Prov. 9: 2. (c) Eph. 5: 18. (d) Prov. 20: 1. (e) Or, cockatrice. (f) Hab. 2: 5. (g) Or, heart of the sea. (h) Prov. 27: 22; Jer. 5: 3. (i) Or, knew it not: Eph. 4: 19. (j) Is. 56: 12; 2 Pet. 2: 22. Prov. 26: 11.

GOLDEN TEXT: Prov. 20: 1. Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging: and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise.

LESSON NOTES.

V. 29. Woe: Misery, wretchedness, headache, nausea; the suffering after a debauch. Sorrow: Remorse, regret, self-loathing. Contentions: Brawls, quarrels, fightings. The most of these spring from liquor drinking. Babbling: Senseless talk; maudlin utterances. When wine is in, wit is out. Wounds without cause: Those resulting from falls, or received in needlessly provoked quarrels. Redness of eyes: The inflamed and bleared eyes of the drunkard. See Gen. 49: 12.—v. 30. Tarry long: Are devoted to; indulge much in. Go to seek: Search diligently for, as one searches after knowledge. See Job 11: 7; Ps. 139: 1; and Prov. 25: 2 where the same word is used. Mixed Wine: Wine mixed with aromatic spices, to increase its stimulating properties. Is. 5: 22. V. 31. Look not: Look not approvingly, or with desire. When it is red: Ruddy, or golden hued. Giveth his color: Is bright and sparkling; "beady," as the wine drinkers say. Moveth itself aright: Flows pleasantly, or smoothly. In Solomon's song (ch. 7: 9:) the same is rendered, "goeth down sweetly." V. 32. At the last: As a final result. Biteth like a serpent: Its effects are like the bite of a venomous serpent. Stingeth - - adder: The sting of which is painful and deadly. See Is. 11: 8. V. 33. Behold strange women: Recognize them; seek them out. Drinking and licentiousness go hand in hand. Thine heart: One's real nature. The lips will echo the thoughts. Perverse things: Impure thoughts and words. The drunkard is nearly always profane and vulgar. V. 34: Lieth down - - sea: Showing reckless indifference, or insensibility to danger. V. 35. Was not sick: Better rendered, "I felt it not." Felt it not: Better, as in the margin, "Knew it not." When shall I awake? Omit the interrogation: "When I shall awake." Seek it yet again: In spite of the misery which it causes.

QUESTIONS ON THE MARGINAL REFERENCES.

Upon what early risers does Isaiah pronounce a woe? Upon what mighty men? Of what cup will the wicked be compelled to drink the dregs? Against what are the Ephesians cautioned, and with what are they urged to be filled? What mocker deceives the unwise? To what other sins is he led who transgresses by wine? Who may be brayed in a mortar without being made wise? What boast does the drunkard utter about to-morrow? To what beast may he be likened?

QUESTIONS ON THE HOME READINGS.

Upon what crown of pride is a woe pronounced? What caused the priest and the prophet to err? With whom should instruction begin, in order to save them from the perils of intemperance? What caused the destruction of the people in Hosea's day? Of what noted total abstinence society does Jeremiah tell? What four young men formed such a society at Babylon? What effect had their abstinence on themselves? What does Paul say it is good not to do?

QUESTIONS ON THE LESSON.

Introductory.—Who is supposed to have written the book of Proverbs? How many proverbs does the Bible attribute to Solomon? 1 Kings 4: 32. From what source did he obtain his wisdom? 2 Chron. 1: 11, 12. What does he say is the beginning of wisdom? Prov. 9: 10. What is the whole duty of man? Eccl. 12: 13.

1. The way of Sorrow. v. 29, 30. What is the first question asked in the lesson? What is meant by "woe"? What is the second question? The third? The fourth? The fifth? The sixth? What is the answer to all? What is meant by "mixed wine"? What sorrows spring out of wine drinking to the drinker? To his friends? What is the fruitful source of quarrels and strife? How does drunkenness affect men's speech? What marks of debasement does a drunkard carry in his face? To whom are many sorrows promised? Ps. 32: 10. How can one escape such sorrows? Prov. 23: 20.

2. The way of Safety. v. 31, 32. What is Solomon's advice about wine? To whom does this injunction apply? What is meant by "giveth his color"? What by "moveth itself aright"? What encouragement is here given to moderate drinking? To the bite of what is the use of wine likened? To the sting of what? What is the effect of such a bite or sting? To what then is wine drinking likely to lead? What says the Golden Text about the promises of pleasure which wine drinking holds out? What is the only real way of safety? What risk is there in letting liquor alone? When urged to drink wine or other liquor what wise advice of Solomon ought we to follow? Prov. 1: 10.

3. The way of Sin. v. 33-35. What will the drunkard's eyes behold? What does Solomon say of the strange woman's house? Prov. 7: 27. To what does Jesus liken the eye of man? Luke 11: 34. What is better for us than to have our eyes lead us astray? Matt. 18: 9. To what kind of speech will the drunkard's heart prompt him? What is meant by "perverse things"? From what source do all evil things come? Matt. 15: 19. To one in what place is a drunkard first likened? To what next? What effect on the head has the motion of a tossing ship? What of being intoxicated? Is the top of a mast a place of safety or of danger? What does a drunkard say after being stricken? What after being beaten? What state of mind does this evidence? When he recovers what does he say? What old proverb is thus illustrated? To what end is the drunkard sure to come? Prov. 23: 21. What will be his final doom? 1 Cor. 6: 9, 10. What wages will persistence in the way of sin surely bring? Rom. 6: 23.

Review. What six questions are asked in the first verse? What one answer is given to all? What wise advice is given about wine? What harm are we likely to receive from its use? What from letting it alone? What positive command is there in the Bible that we should all use wine? What Christian course did Paul resolve upon?

HINTS ON THE LESSON.

1. To the scholar. Read the lesson carefully once each day of the week. Study the meaning of every word. Commit to memory the first four verseshs It oase; Golden Text and outline. These are the bones on which the lesson is to grow. Read daily the "Home Readings," and notice what each says that bears on the lesson. Look out the marginal references. Study the lesson by the help of the questions. Find an answer to every one. Read, think, pray; and every dark place will become light, and every difficulty be vanquished.

2. To the teacher. This leaf is designed as a help, both in study and in teaching. It is intended to be suggestive, not exhaustive. It is Biblical in its matter. It aims to find out the teaching of God's Word. It cannot be effectively used without the Bible. All its readings and references are so many side-lights on the central truth. Focus them on the lesson. Follow the outline; it will aid the memory. The questions are hints in method, as well as helps to fact. They may be used in the class or not as one pleases. Their best use may be to provoke better questions. Do not be tied to them. They are guides, not shackles; counsels, not commandments.

Study faithfully, pray earnestly, teach fervently. The truth is God's and He will give it success.

BIBLE READING.

CONCERNING WINE AND STRONG DRINK.

1. Words of Woe.

1. To the drunkard. Prov 23:29, 30; Is. 5:11, 22; Is. 28: 1–4; Amos 6:1, 6.
2. To the drunkard-maker.
(1.) Who gives his neighbor drink: Hab. 2:15.
(2.) Who authorizes another to give it: Hab. 2:12; Jer. 22:13.

2. Words of Warning.

1. Against wine bibbers: Prov. 23:20, 21. Luke 21:34; Eph. 5:18.
2. Against the wine cup: Prov. 20:1; Prov. 23:31, 32; Hos. 4:11.
3. Against the doom of the drunkard: Prov. 23:21; Gal. 6:7; Gal. 5:19–21; 1 Cor. 6:9, 10.

3. Words of Wisdom.

1. Wine refused: Jer. 53:5, 6; Dan. 1:8.
2. Abstinence enjoined: Rom. 14:21.
3. The excellent way: 1 Cor. 10:31.

[This reading may be used as an opening exercise in the Sunday school; or as a topical outline for the temperance prayer meeting: or it may serve, with a competent leader, for a special evening service, to be interspersed with judicious comment, and spirited singing. When all are eager to "hear what God the Lord will speak," our work will rest on a sound basis, and our success become assured.]

FRANCIS MURPHY IN CHICAGO.

For several weeks Francis Murphy has been in this city, engaged in the work of gospel temperance to which many years ago he devoted his life. He has had, to an unusual extent, the influence and co-operation of the daily press, and to a very limited extent, considering their number and their supposed interest and prominence in this kind of work, of Christian churches and ministers. The former have given uniformly favorable reports of his meetings, have mentioned him personally in terms of praise, and one paper, the Tribune, has published a long and discriminating editorial in commendation of him and his labors, to every word of which we give a hearty, Murphy-like "Amen". The latter, the churches and ministers, have been, with a few honorable exceptions, less pronounced in their manifestation of interest and desire to further his efforts. The Methodists as usual have taken the lead in this, as they generally do in practical, Christian work. The Rev. Dr. Kennard, of the Fourth Baptist church, has not been behind any in zealous furtherance of the movement by wise and sympathetic counsel, and by active participation in the committee work and in the public services. On his own responsibility he opened his church at a time when the course of the movement and its future were doubtful. The Rev. Charles Morton and others engaged in evangelistic work have from the beginning recognized the importance of the movement and have given it their hearty endorsement and support. Our own sympathy and support have found expression in these columns and in the willing and well-directed labors of the lady members of the executive committee.

Mr. Murphy has found some drawbacks in his work, not the least of which has been the seeming indifference of the larger number of clergymen and churches. In many cases, no doubt, this has been only seeming, not real, and is to be accounted for by the numerous demands on the time of city ministers and the various other activities in which the churches are engaged. We are still of the opinion, however, that both ministers and churches, in too many instances, are derelict in this whole matter and unwilling to take part openly in aggressive temperance work. That Mr. Murphy has met with such large and gratifying success, notwithstanding the apathy of many to whom he looked for encouragement, is an occasion for gratulation. To many persons, indeed, his success is a veritable wonder; and we have found ourselves asking more than once, What is the secret of this man's success? Wherein lie the sources of his power? Surely there is nothing specially fresh or novel in the methods he employs. Other lecturers, though not many, are as earnest and eloquent, and certainly stronger in mere argument, and more precise in language and statement.

One very important cause of his success is to be found in his personal experience. He knows whereof he speaks; his message is freighted with the memory of his own sad and tragical life; his words when most effective are coined out of his own sufferings; he properly calls one of his lectures "Real Life," and it would be a fitting title for all. Then back of all his utterances is his strong, striking, and wholly unique personality. This it is that gives force to some words that otherwise would seem comparatively tame and commonplace, and lifts them to the plane of simple and manly dignity. Add to this his knowledge of human nature. He is a shrewd and accurate observer, knows men thoroughly, and particularly those of the class to which he mainly appeals. His great, warm, loving heart has touched life at all points. Said an old farmer in explanation of his liking a certain minister who was not specially brilliant or able in discourse; "He had a sort 'o human look." Mr. Murphy is thoroughly and intensely human; he loves men and sympathizes with them in hearty, manly fashion, and so wins and saves them; he is utterly free from cant and nonsense; he is an honest, earnest, real man,—is content with being himself and not somebody else.

But the great source of his power is in his earnest consecration and simple faith in God and good. He loves the Bible and believes in the power of prayer, and would save men from the sin of intemperance by the gospel of loving kindness.

We extend to Mr. Murphy and to his son, who has rendered effective aid in this work, our heartiest sympathies and our appreciation of what they are doing to bring in the blessed day of personal temperance and state prohibition.

ORIGIN OF THE THREE MILE LAW IN ARKANSAS.

Mrs. R. S. James, wife of Dr. James, president of Judson University, writes, in response to a query of iss Willard's, the following interesting and suggestive bit of history.

You desire the particulars of the origin of the three mile law in our state. These, it is not easy to give, for, like many great movements, the true origin lies in agencies at work very far back, and the movement was, to some extent, spontaneous. Still, it was doubtless left for Judsonia to give the starting impulse to these agencies, and lead the spontaneous movement.

Judsonia is, or rather was, the seat of Judson University, of which my husband was the president. In 1875, the legislature passed an act, prohibiting the sale of spirituous liquors within two miles of that institution. The effect upon the quiet and morals of the town was marvelous. Under its former name of Prospect Bluff, it was notorious for rioting and drunkenness, especially on the Sabbath; but by the closing of the saloons, in consequence of this law, peace and order reigned on the Sabbath day The business of the place has also increased five or six fold since the enforcement of the law.

The passage of such laws for the benefit of schools and colleges became very common in Arkansas. There is also a general law, conferring the same privileges upon any district, the majority of whose voters petition the county court, extending the limit to three miles from some designated point. Few, however, have availed themselves of its provisions, probably because of the difficulty of getting a majority of voters to "sign away their liberty." The women of Judsonia were accustomed to hold a weekly union prayer meeting. Among these, I may mention, without dispargement to the others, Mrs. Ruth Riley, wife of Dr. Willshire Riley, to whose quiet, unostentatious management, much of the success of the temperance movement must be attributed. At these prayer meetings, it was often asked, "If the law for the special benefit of Judson University be so beneficial, why may not its provisions be extended to the entire state?" This question was also discussed in our homes, and even our sick rooms. * * * Finally a petition was circulated, and numerously signed, embracing the above suggestions. My husband and myself were designated as the bearers of it to Little Rock while the legislature was in session. The petition was entrusted to Hon. L. N. Brown and Judge Coody, the representatives from White county, who promised to do their best to secure the wishes of the petitioners. My husband also framed a bill, one provision of which, that in reference to the prescription of physicians, was incorporated in the law as enacted.

What agency the W. C. T. U. had in securing the passage of the law, I am unable, definitely to say. Although we now have a state union, there was, at that time, no union at Judsonia, nor even at Little Rock. That little prayer meeting was the Palos from which the fleet that accomplished so much, took its unobserved departure. But when the way was indicated, many other towns sent forth their explorers, to help give us a new world of sobriety and happiness.

The women generally, and in particular those of the unions formed about that time, urged upon their respective representatives the importance of the proposed law. I may truly say, that but for the women, it would not have passed. And it is they who now give it force. The provision allowing women above the age of eighteen to sign the petition has doubtless given the law to many communities which otherwise would never have enjoyed its benefits.

THE following from our corresponding secretary, under date of June 7, deserves a place not only in our columns but in the good will and hospitable intent of our women:

DEAR MRS. WILLARD:—Tomorrow morning Mrs. B. Pearson, vice president of the British Woman's Temperance Association, will land in America and will remain in this country for some time.

Mrs. Pearson will, if desired, speak for the W.C.T.U. of the several states, and it seems to me it would be a graceful thing to do if the general officers of our state unions would arrange for a limited number of engagements within their own jurisdictions.

Of the several letters, copies of which I have received, I give one from Mr. John Raper, whom the temperance people of this country have not forgotten:

LONDON, April 26, 1884.

DEAR MRS. PEARSON:—I am very glad to hear that you are about to visit our cousins in America, and I trust you will at once place yourself in communication with the leader of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, so that your services, which we have found so exceedingly valuable in England, may be utilized in the United States and Canada.

You will find in their noble president, Miss Frances Willard, one with whom you can delightfully co-operate, and I shall look forward to your visit with great interest, as any help you can render the great cause in America, will react upon us at home.

I remain, yours very respectfully,

J. H. RAPER.

I also have a list of newspaper notices with which I have supplied many of our vice presidents.

Whenever our ladies have visited England the officers and members of the British W. C. T. A. have been very kind, and we certainly will not allow one of their number to come to us and quietly depart without at least showing her something of the hospitality and courtesy of the country and of the W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Pearson will deliver her first address in this country at Newark, N. J., under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. Let us give her a hearty welcome. Mrs. Pearson can be addressed here.

Most sincerely,

CAROLINE B. BUELL, Cor. Sec. N.W.C.T.U.

GRAND juries in Georgia are testifying to the value of the prohibitory law in the counties where, within the past year or two, it has become operative. In Houston county their conclusion is this:

The prohibition law has been in operation in the county for more than two years, and it is our emphatic opinion that the law has given general satisfaction in all parts of the county; that the moral and social status of our people has been raised to a higher plane by the operation of the law, there is no room to doubt, and it is a fact attested by the records of the courts that crime and lawlessness have been greatly reduced. Abundant testimony convinces us that labor throughout the county has been greatly improved and brought under better control; that those most needing protection against their own improper appetites, and the temptations so placed in the path of the weak and the unwary, have reaped the greater benefits, and many wives and children bless, from the depths of their hearts, the causes that gave us the inestimable benefits of the prohibition law. The law cannot be too highly spoken of, and this body will gladly welcome the day when not a drop of liquor can be bought within the state of Georgia.

THAT is good work done by the Catholic bishop of Albany, in ordering that no more bars be permitted at Catholic picnics in his diocese. He says he is trying to discourage the base practice of Catholic churches which has hitherto obtained, of farming out the bar as a source of revenue to the church. The prohibition issued includes lager beer.

A RELIABLE mercantile agency of this city in a confidential communication to its subscribers, and under date of June 12, gives twenty firms in financial trouble, thirteen of which are in the whisky and tobacco business, and six of the thirteen are Chicago business houses. This is better than our fears.

Rev. J. S. Ostrander, of 244 Sackett street, Brooklyn, well known in Sunday school assemblies, Chautauqua and elsewhere, gave a very impressive scientific lecture on "Beer or Bread, which? Or flour at $1.25 a barrel," in New York recently. It reaches the oldest and the youngest, and strikes people as just what is wanted in every state where the temperance education bill has passed, to furnish object lessons and blackboard exercises to the day school teachers. He has a little distillery and analyzes a glass of beer before the audience. He is this week at Louisville, in attendance upon the Triennial Sunday school convention.

The North Side Y. W. C. T. U. of Chicago is soon to open a kitchen garden. Mrs. Virginia M. Shaffer is the efficient general of this division of the W. C. T. U. army in Chicago.

John B. Gough sets a good example to the Christian tourists through Mormondom. He declared openly in his recent visit to Salt Lake City, that he would not visit a polygamist's house if invited, nor attend Sunday services in the Mormon tabernacle. If Mormonism be the heinous sin and crime which Christians say it is, why should they countenance it, as so many do, by taking the Lord's Day to investigate the temple services, and other days to visit Mormon houses? For such a curse upon our country let the traveller hang his head as he sojourns in that Sodom, and speak no soft words to such unwholesome rebels.

A good work is being done in Chicago and other large cities by the moral education society, which seeks to enlighten parents concerning the serious business of life, the culture and training of child-life. Mrs. Lucinda B. Chandler is the moving spirit of the Chicago society, and Mrs. Mary Dye, prominent in W. C. T. U. work, is most efficient in pen work along this line.

* * *

A Y. W. C. T. U. and Cold Water Army were organized in Flint, Mich., by Miss Kimball and Miss Anna Gordon in connection with the state convention.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Foster yesterday left San Francisco for Oregon and the British provinces. From Victoria their route will be through Washington, Montana and Idaho territories to Salt Lake City, then for three weeks in Colorado, a short time in Nebraska, and home early in August.

* * *

A new significance attaches to the "dear five hundred" now that exactly that number of people assembled in Mrs. Leech's hospitable parlors in Louisville to do honor to our National W. C. T. U. representatives.

* * *

Those Louisville women are wise in their generation. The two rooms used as headquarters for the W. and Y. W. C. T. U. respectively, were committee rooms for the Sunday school convention.

I noticed this "straw" at the convention: Whenever temperance was spoken of there was applause—such applause as greeted no other issue. When the Rev. Dr. Wharton, of Georgia, said: "I am from the land of the magnolia; and here I may say we have been doing a good work. Georgia has now, out of 138 counties, displaced whisky in ninety counties and put Sunday schools in, and what "God has put asunder let no man join together," it made the welkin ring.

* * *

Mrs. Mamie Munnell, president Louisville W. C. T U., who arranged the floral decorations, and Miss Alice Pirtle, superintendent Sunday school work in Kentucky, who has brought up her state of Kentucky in Sunday school work, and kept the interest in the quarterly lessons before the ministers and superintendents, both deserve the notice of "On Duty" and love of the W. C. T. U.

* * *

And Mrs. Chapin, whose southern magnetism "drew" most emphatically, Mrs. Sibley, who "said her say" most kindly, Miss Willard, who never did better, dear little Mrs. Hibben, of Peoria, who always speaks appropriately, Mrs. Aldrich, of Iowa, clear, cogent and charitable, Col. Bain, without whom nothing was done that was done—time would fail me to tell all that might be said of these brave and noble ones who love the cause better than themselves, better than all save home and its beloveds.

A word I must say for the real heroine of this occasion—for back of all this jubilation is the seven years' hard work of the women led by Lucia E. F. Kimball—who informed the convention that if one seven years did not accomplish the work, she was ready for another. And any one who knows the "clear grit" of the woman believes her. She it was who left a lucrative position in the public schools of Chicago when the Bible was taken out of the schools, saying she would not earn her living at the cost of her principles.

The new UNION SIGNAL bulletin follows close upon the heels of the International Convention with Miss West's suggestive article "Why should Sunday school teachers teach temperance?" on one side, and the Nation's Drink bill on the other. ON DUTY.

News From the Field.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Marlboro.—Our election day work was as follows: The movement was the outgrowth of a W. C. T. U. convention held only three days before town meeting. Miss Tobey and Mrs. Bowles were the speakers. In the afternoon questions were collected for discussion, among which was, "What can be done for the ballot town meeting day?" As a result six ladies were appointed to furnish coffee, "no" votes and literature, if after consideration they should think it expedient. Our prayer was that the Lord would stop the lions' mouths, for we lacked courage.

We invited about twenty ladies of the best standing to join us in the work, all of whom cheerfully responded. We obtained from the selectmen a committee room opening into the hall and stairway for our coffee making and tables. We hung some beautifully printed mottoes, "Vote to Protect the Home," "Vote for Wife and Children," about the hall. We placed pretty bouquets of flowers on the speaker's desk and tables. We obtained one thousand leaflets from headquarters of W. C. T. U. and three thousand "no" votes and a large package of literature from Mr. Faxon.

Before 9 o'clock Monday morning we were on the ground, coffee boiling, ladies stationed at the doors and inside the hall with hands full of literature and "no" votes.

Of course we surprised the friends and foes of temperance, for our movement had been made so quickly that few had knowledge of it. The liquor men themselves constantly throughout the morning predicted a failure to their party. The work of the Law and Order League throughout the year had prepared them to make a strong fight.

Our population of 10,000 consists of about 6,000 foreigners. Soon after the polls opened, a liquor dealer, Barney Bruin, took his station in advance of us, close to the ballot box with "yes" votes; whereupon two ladies (one the wife of the judge of our court) took their places, one beside, the other opposite him.

We stood there four hours until the polls closed, offering the "no" ballots while he offered the "yes." No voter could reach the polls without passing three groups of ladies offering him the "no" vote and literature. We might cover pages with the earnest, polite Christian pleadings of these ladies. There was a little pleasant tongue skirmishing between our friend (?) Barney and ourselves, he calling it bulldozing. Yet he had been doing the same thing for ten years. He drank a cup of our coffee somewhat to the amusement of the spectators. He said to the wife of the judge, "Your husband would not have much business but for rum." She said, "You could not give a better reason for a prohibitory vote." Some wished to read our literature before they decided which vote to cast.

Many Irishmen voted their fisrt "no" ballot that day. The liquor men sent teams in all directions to bring those who would vote yes. Our temperance people did not, and perhaps that fact in part accounts for our failure to get no license. The vote was delared 704 yes, 635 no. One old man, so eaten up with rum that he scarcely seemed human, was carried to the polls by two men while another lifted his arm to drop his vote into the ballot box. No voter was left unsought by the liquor men.

Not an uncivil remark or an impolite act was shown the ladies throughout the day. Many of the best citizens offered the kindest words of encouragment and approval. One thousand four hundred and thirty cups of coffee were given away and over 1,500 pages of literature. The vote since the local option law is as follows: In 1881: Yes, 769; no, 361. 1882: Yes, 633; no, 428. 1883: Yes, 468; no, 518. 1884: Yes, 704; no, 635. These figures show a constant increase in the no vote and the largest gain (117) this year.

Concord.—At the anniversary of the juvenile temperance union of Concord, the presentation of the gift of a blue silk banner by Miss L. M. Alcott was accompanied by the following speech:

The inspirer of all the little men and little women in the world, gives this banner to the little men and women of Concord. May they proudly follow the shining motto, "Stick to the pledge" and drive before them the fierce foe which can only be conquered by their aid. When King Alcohol has made men captive, they can hardly ever escape from his tightening chains. Only the children who have never tasted his fiery draughts can ever be perfectly free from danger, and strong enough to do battle bravely for the right. The giver and her ten thousand friends depend on you to carry on the great work. Let the little men and little women of America once be temperance men and temperance women and thus save this beautiful world from the curse of intoxication which will destroy the fairest beginnigs.

There were recitations, and songs in his native tongue and a temperance talk by Mr. Crappo, a native of Burmah, who appeared in the costume of his country. A dialogue, "The Rainbow," by seven young people arrayed in jaunty caps of tissue paper and ample sashes of the primitive colors, the seven verses given by each youth representing the color.

The receiver of the new ensign, preceded by the drum corps of the union, led the band of children bearing flags around the streets and square towards the house of Miss Alcott for whom they gave three cheers. The venerable Mr. Alcott, who was seated in his carriage, seemed much entertained by the bright faces of the young people who afterwards partook of refreshments abundantly provided for them by their friends. Mrs. M. B. McClure.

New Bedford.—In accordance with the call for a day of prayer the W.C.T.U. of New Bedford issued an invitation to the Christians of the city to join in such an attempt. The call was cordially responded to, and a meeting held at the Friends' meeting house in the city. The topics were taken up as proposed, the services for the different hours being led by pastors of various denominations. Between the hours of twelve and one a collation was partaken of in the lunch room of the building, after which the exercises were resumed.

It was a profitable day, and surely the grand enemy of souls must tremble when he sees all over the land this union of Christians of various names and sects in a solid phalanx to resist him. Men like the tribe Zebulon of old coming to the help of David 50,000 strong, "men that could keep rank," and "men not of double heart."

SECOND DISTRICT CONVENTION.

The ninth annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of the second congressional district was held at Fond du Lac, May 27 and 28. The president, Mrs. C. N. Pinkham, deserves much credit for keeping up the meeting every year, even when all other district conventions have failed in our state. However there will be other conventions, both district and county this year. The attendance of delegates and visitors was good. Much interest was manifested by the people of Fond du Lac, and all who were there seemed to feel that our cause is advancing in the second district and indeed all over the state.

Interesting papers on juvenile work and young ladies work were read by Mrs. A. C. Hillyer of Waupun, and Mrs. S. E. Wanless of Rosendale. The convention adopted a resolution favoring the ballot for women. This with one dissenting vote. This was the only really "new departure."

The meeting was opened by a lecture by Maurice McKenna of Fond du Lac, under the auspices of the Blue Ribbon Club, and was followed by a "chalk-talk" by our superintendent of juvenile work, Mrs. Eva C. Griffith of Whitewater, which of course delighted the little ones and the older ones too. Vice presidents were chosen, one for every county, who should act as presidents in the forthcoming county organizations. Appeals for subscriptions to The Union Signal were made by Mrs. Griffith and Mrs. Pinkham.

A copy of the engraving of Mrs. Hayes' portrait has been presented to the Dartford union, and neatly framed now adorns the wall of their pleasant room in the M. E. church. The Madison union has purchased the same picture for their large room in the city hall.

Good reports from Miss Edwards' work come to us daily. Sarah P. Bradish, Cor. Sec.

Janesville.—The old Janesville W. C. T. U. existed only in the hearts of a faithful few. Not a glimmer of light from it told the public that it still lived when Mrs. Mary B. Willard came to us in March. At this time the feeble spark was fanned into quite a vivid little glow. The old hearts felt the reviving influence and new ones were kindled into desire for work. Time was pledged by several ladies not heretofore interested; officers chosen, a school already started by an enterprising lady was adopted, and pupils named Temperance Wide Awakes; children of all grades of society were brought in and all were ready to greet the greatest outside influence that can bless a Janesville people. The desire to see her own old "Forest Home," inclined our National president hither, and the strong call from citizens generally, induced her to yield her first intention to speak only at an afternoon meeting of women. A union meeting was appointed for Sunday evening, May 25, and the universal opinion is that there never was a more earnest, eloquent and logical address given to any assemblage in this city. At its close Miss Willard made a plea for help for our union. We had prepared little pink slips printed thus:

I HEREBY AGREE TO PAY TO THE WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION OF JANESVILLE, WIS.,
$....., Weekly; $....., Monthly; $....., Yearly.
(Signed) ..... .....
(Address) ..... .....

which were distributed among the audience. Janesville is wider awake than for many years upon the temperance question. Hearts and purses are open, the press in sympathy and a powerful ally to the W. C. T. U.

MONROE COUNTY ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The sixth annual convention of the Monroe county W. C. T. U. was held May 28, at West Henrietta. Eighty-six delegates and officers were present, representing eighteen of twenty-three unions of the county. Besides there were many visitors, including pastors. Mrs. L. H. Washington, of Essex, Conn., and Mrs. C. C. Alford, of Brooklyn, were also present. The meetings were frequently enlivened by musie from the church choir. There was a recitation by little Miss Stone, of East Henrietta, and a very amusing temperance duet by Miss Gracie and Master Herbert Light, of Pittsford. Many papers were presented, among which were the following: Encouragements in Our Work, by Mrs. E. Smith of Brockport; Woman's Work, by Mrs. Kishlar, of Greece. Reports were given by the superintendents of departments, showing considerable advance made.

The superintendent of the department of unfermented wine, Mrs. S. P. Mackay, reported that of 135 Protestant churches in the county, 76 were using unfermented wine.

The corresponding secretary reports that, with enlarged scope for work we have found enlarged means for its prosecution, the growth of our twenty-three unions being greater, proportionately, in strength than in numbers. Yet nine unions report increase of membership and it is found that five have doubled their membership since organization. Two new unions have been formed this year, at Greece and Charlotte, each of which has nearly doubled its first membership already; Greece began with 25 members, and has now 41. The membership of County union about 642. The Hamlin union has been specially blessed with a revival of the Holy Spirit. It has held cottage meetings weekly—a measure resulting in sweet and sacred benefits to many.

In the Fairport union, the mother's meetings, held in conjunction with the alternate regular meetings of the union have proved a like hallowing and tender power.

By similar workings, the weekly Bible readings held by the Rochester union have impressed and instructed many, stirring hearts to new faithfulness and often those who are otherwise strangers to the means of grace. Much of the cheering growth of this union in activity and usefulness is traceable to the influence of these meetings.

The matter of school suffrage has received consideration in many of the unions,—but has not as yet been fully brought to bear on our work. In one town, Henrietta, the corresponding secretary of the W. C. T. U., has just been re-elected school trustee; in another, Pittsford, the influence of the W.C.T.U. women wrought much toward securing a temperance man as principal of the union school.

The Brockport Union publishes its spicy little Appeal which has come to be not only one of the institutions of the town, but a favored medium of temperance influence. It is gratuitously distributed also in adjacent towns, and is heard from in many ways thence as doing silent but sure work for our cause.

Most of the unions held prayer meetings on election day, and by two of them lunch was served to voters.

Seventy-seven subscribers are reported for The Union Signal.

Seventy subscribers are reported for Our Work.

ONTARIO COUNTY CONVENTION.

The eighth annual meeting of the Ontario county W. C.T.U., May 22, was one of special interest and pleasure. The president's annual address, and the addresses upon scientific temperance and other topics were excellent and most favorably received.

The report of the committee on Sunday school work, given by Miss Irene Southworth, of Manchester, chairman, showed that much attention was given to temperance in the schools of the county, but that much more might be done. The reports of local unions at Bristol Center, Clifton Springs, Canandaigua, East Bloomfield, Farmington, Geneva, Manchester, Naples, Phelps, Shortville, Victor, and of juvenile organizations at nearly all these towns were of peculiar interest, they evidenced so much work done and grand results achieved.

We learned from the report of Miss Carrie Boughton, chairman of committee on publication and literature, that four papers of the fifty in the county gave space for temperance columns and news, and others would print articles if furnished.

The report of Mrs. Foster, on juvenile work, was of no less interest than are her reports usually.

The officers elected for the coming year are: President, Mrs. Theo. Perkins, Canandaigua; recording and corresponding secretary, Mrs. J. W. Neighbor, Phelps; treasurer, Mrs. Edward Steele, East Bloomfield. A rising vote of thanks was given Mrs. DeLarme, who has so kindly and efficiently filled the office of president the last two years. We part from her with regret, feeling it but just that she be relieved.

The closing praying was by Mrs. Hibbard and all joined in "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," realizing that the cause so dear to all hearts had received a fresh impetus from the meeting of that day, and thankful for its rich privilege.

Mrs. J. W. Neighbor, Sec.

Troy.—The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Troy observed the call to prayer made by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in view of the political campaign. At this meeting so much interest was manifested that a second one was proposed. To this plan all present acceded.

At the earnest solicitation of the "Railroad Men's Christian Association" we now hold our weekly meetings change (in place of meeting) much good will accrue, trusting that the families of the railroad officials will not fail to meet with us in our new locality, and that through them and with them, we can work for the fathers, husbands, sons and brothers.

Our union is maturing ways to show an interest in sailors and soldiers. On "memorial day" Post Commander Keith evinced an appreciation of our overtures by sending us tickets of admittance to attend the exercises held in the city hall upon the evening of this day. We were glad to have it in our power to contribute towards the beautiful floral display seen upon the platform in the hall.

"Flower day" is almost upon us. We expect at that time to visit the jail for the purpose of giving to each prisoner a bouquet, to which will be attached a scriptural text. A. H. G.

—Homer W.C.T.U. can no longer claim to be the only W.C.T.U. in Cortland county, as Miss Hazlitt has organized unions in Preble and Cortland.

—Mrs. Mary T. Burt has recently organized unions at Gloresville and Johnstown, Fulton county, and Mrs. A. M. Stewart one at Brewster, Putnam county.

CIRCULAR LETTER TO THE Y. W. C. T. U.

I am constantly in receipt of letters asking for words of encouragement to county superintendents of Y. W. C. T. U. work, and would like to speak to such through the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL. Perhaps I may thus reach other timid workers not living in my own state. I always feel like heartily congratulating all who write me that they have been appointed to work among young ladies, because, if they love girls as I do, they have such a delightful branch of work. Of course one needs first of all to love the temperance cause.

Our work is not all sunshine. It requires great help from God to do wisely and well for our young ladies. But the way to our Father, the Great Giver, is open day and night, and He offers to carry our burdens so that we may work light heartedly. He can overrule all hindrances and make the path of duty clear. Sometimes we must watch and wait as well as work.

The subject of temperance as a personal work and responsibility has not been brought before more than one in a thousand of our American girls. Even where a W. C. T. U. is unpopular, it is not necessary that the Y. W. C. T. U. should be so. Make it popular and help bring the older unions into the hearts of its critics. How can this be done? Well, in many ways, and God will show them to you if you pray for that kind of wisdom.

This year should be a grand one for Y. W. C. T. U. work in Pennsylvania, because the hygiene bill, which is coming up at Harrisburg next winter, gives girls very much that they can do.

First, they can circulate the literature we have on the subject of scientific temperance education. (See back of petition tablets; I specially recommend leaflets 49 and 29.)

They can circulate the petition for such education, and they can get up entertainments and so raise money to employ lecturers on that subject. This will rouse the public to press their representatives at Harrisburg to give us the law we ask.

My dear sisters, who are superintendents of Y. W. C. T. U. work in your counties, when you ask me, "What can girls do?" I feel like asking you, "What can't girls do?"

True, there are lines of temperance work suitable only for older workers, but what is to become of the work which only youth with its gifts and accompaniments can accomplish? Why, daughters have reached fathers when mothers had failed to do so. And who, if not they, shall win to our cause the brothers and sons in our homes? To sum it all up, temperance cannot do without our girls.

Now I know that youthful enthusiasm, which is so charming, is apt to become easily discouraged, but I remember that in youth, blood circulates less evenly than in later years. Do beg all the W. C. T. unions in your counties to help them all they can and never discourage young folks trying to work for God and home and native land. They will make a mistake if they do.

You see, dear friends, I take it for granted that every superintendent of Y. W. C. T. U. work reads THE UNION SIGNAL, because I can hardly think her equipped for work unless she does.

Now, dear sisters in Pennsylvania, may this be a blessed year for us all. Let us be strong, looking not at the lions in the way, but to the Lion of Judah, through whose strength we shall yet prevail.

MRS. WM. PATTEN,
Supt. Y. W. C. T. U. Work in Pennsylvania.

FRANKLIN.—Since my last report to THE UNION SIGNAL the Franklin union has had the preat pleasure and privilege of a visit from Mrs. McLaughlin, who has given us four entertainments, a parlor meeting and three public addresses. All of the meetings were well attended and Mrs. McLaughlin was pronounced one of the most interesting as well as one of the most forcible speakers who has ever addressed an audience in Franklin on the temperance question.

We feel so well satisfied with Mrs. McLaughlin's success and the impression she has made and left in Franklin that we would like to recommend all unions that can secure her services to do so as soon as possible.

So great were the impressions made by Mrs. McLaughlin's remarks and the forcible way she pointed out the duty of each one in the temperance work, that a great many names were secured to our union, which has encouraged the old members very much. MRS. E. A. RICKARDS.

WORK IN KEOKUK COUNTY.

We are indeed alive and reaching out to wake up the whole county, if possible, that they may have an active and honorable part in enforcing this grand and good law which has been given to us in answer to our prayers. Our Christian women are putting on the armor of service and asking with eager look, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do."

May 9 it was my privilege to meet a goodly number of the Christian women of Thornberg and help them organize a W.C.T.U. The Lord was with us. A society of eleven members was formed and quickly grew to fifteen.

May 13 I went to Springfield, a small, live little town of one or two hundred inhabitants, and found the ladies waiting for me. We had a pleasant meeting of prayer and praise, and organized a W.C.T.U. of seven members. They have no saloons, but a strong temperance element, and are anxious to do what they can for the Lord in helping on the good work and giving encouragement to others. In the evening the people all gathered in the church and good singing was provided. Several excellent temperance speeches were made, the pledges circulated with fair success, and I trust good accomplished. I find the promise always fulfilled, "Ask, and it shall be given you." MRS. B. S. BRAINARD, Co. Pres. W.C.T.U.

FAIRFIELD.—We thought some of THE UNION SIGNAL readers might like to hear from us down in this corner of Iowa. We want to tell how much we enjoyed the annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of the first district of Iowa, held in Fairfield, May 28, 29, and how much good we hope it has done our union, and the cause of temperance here, and how we enjoyed having our good Mrs. Aldrich, and all those other earnest temperance women with us. Our president, Mrs. I. Messenger, was unable to be present, owing to serious illness. She wishes through THE UNION SIGNAL to thank the ladies who so kindly remembered her by sending a beautiful bouquet as they were leaving for their distant homes. Our union numbers twenty-five working members, and our Band of Hope one hundred and sixty members. Do you wonder we are glad to have something to aid us in this work, or that we are in earnest, when we live in Iowa?

WAYSIDE NOTES.

Left Cleveland at the early dawn the 24th of May and at noon was at Fredericktown, Knox county. Was met by a gentleman who had arranged six appointments for me, and rode half a dozen miles through the beautiful country to Levering. In the evening gave a lecture one mile from the village; the next morning, Sabbath, another lecture a mile out in another direction, and in the evening gathered the forces in the center; had a crowded house and organized a union after the address, of thirty members.

The next day a ride of six miles and another lecture, at Pulaskiville, and another union joins the brave six hundred of Ohio.

Thence six miles to Williamsport, Warren county, and organized. The ladies expressed willingness to work though they have no saloons there. All the more should they engage in temperance effort as a thank offering to God that the trail of the serpent has not reached that rural village.

Thence to Johnsville, where another union sprang into existence.

Then came decoration day, and I went to Mansfield to rest one day in the beautiful home of our earnest worker, Fannie D. Leiter.

The county president, Mrs. F. A. Gilbert, lives just across the way in a new and elegant mansion, and I wished that all our temperance workers were as pleasantly situated as are these two consecrated women.

Thence to Ashland. The opera house which seats one thousand people, was filled to overflowing. The five ministers of the place were all present and on the platform. Mrs. Miller presided in a graceful, dignified manner, and I trust that good was accomplished by this effort for humanity.

An interesting ladies' meeting on Monday, delegates were selected to attend the annual convention at Cincinnati. Provision was made for expenses, and my work was done.

Thence to Nevada, Wyandot county. Mrs. Hobbs is president here and she had arranged a fine meeting.

I am now at Ada, Hardin county, which place has the largest normal school in America, enrolling twelve hundred pupils. I asked President Lehr the secret of his success.

"We have a good school, that is my only secret," was his reply.

He is the right man in the right place, and his purse is ever open to help the temperance cause. His wife, to, is a generous helper in every good work.

Ada is a beautiful village, and the union here is doing a good work. I organized this union one year ago, and wish that all my unions were doing as well.

S. M. PERKINS, Nat. Organizer.

CLEVELAND.—All former members of bands belonging to Pearl Street Inn are requested to report every Sabbath afternoon at Good Templar's Hall, No. 485 Pearl street. This hall, handsomely fitted up, has been rented by a few ladies for the continuance of Pearl Street Inn work. A lady is in charge of the gospel temperance service each Sabbath. The first quarterly meeting of the year took place Sabbath, June 8. Encouraging reports were presented, choice literature distributed and a balance announced of $3.10 in the treasury. Everybody is cordially invited to attend.

There is a pathetic history connected with the foregoing announcement which appeared in one of our daily papers. Our long lease expired Feb. 17, 1884, when I thought to take a continued rest, being excessively wearied with the burdens of a great temperance centre. By March 17, a few of the mothers of this Inn had taken up the work, applying to a Mr. Stiles, one of our best temperance men, who rented them a beautiful hall at $3 per month for their principal service. During the week they hold cottage prayer meetings. They distribute temperance literature, one leaflet taking powerful hold upon a man named Seymour, who from the time he read it has not drank a particle. This so encouraged these mothers that they work valiantly; without ambition for place or power. They are strong W. C. T. U. women on the home protection line, but will never desert our Lord as the basis of all work. They aim to bring the intemperate to Christ, and will not be induced to substitute anything for gospel temperance. It was the honored moment of my life when these dear mothers brought balm to my fainting spirit by placing me at their head. So, now, we have once more a strong union with a vice president from each of nineteen churches (these mothers being representative). The ablest business woman among them is secretary and treasurer, and as this same woman is chairman of the Ladies' Relief Corps, auxiliary to the Grand Army of the Republic, we shall have access to a great many voters, working as we shall with simplicity and earnestness and with no end in view but the good of the cause.

On decoration day this band served a temperance lunch to a large number of people. We believe that with humble reliance upon God alone, the rank and file as here blended together, may do more for the success of the cause among the laboring classes who live in this part of the city, than as though belonging to the wealthy and influential part of the community.

MRS. W. A. INGHAM.

GARRETT.—A W.C.T.U. was organized here last January by sister Jennie Smith, our railroad superintendent, and has since continued in a flourishing condition. We have secured nearly 400 signers to the pledge, a Band of Hope numbering one hundred and seventy-five in our town of fifteen hundred inhabitants, and have gospel temperance meetings Sunday afternoons in the reading room of the machine shop. This being a railroad town our congregations are nearly all railroad men. The Baltimore and Ohio railroad have grandly come to our help by issuing orders that all men using intoxicating liquors as a beverage shall be dismissed from their service, and that the caller need not go to the saloon to call the men. This has been of great help to our work. The saloon keepers say they are doing a beggarly business, especially during the last three months. The prohibition sentiment is gaining ground very rapidly. Some are saying, You are hurting the party, but we are asking only for protection for our homes.

We raised a prohibition pole here last February and other places are falling in with the idea, to keep the cause before the people. LIZZIE C. JONES.

NEBRASKA.

KEARNEY.—The call for prayer for the nation, May 27, was responded to by our W. C. T. U. The program in full was carried out, the meeting increasing in numbers and interest until its close.

The services were not less potent from the fact that just across the street lay the mother of eight children unconscious, rendered so by a bullet through the head at the hand of her brutal husband in a state of intoxication. Children in groups, with hushed voices and white faces, gazed upon the blood upon the sidewalk. We said to them, Ask your fathers how they voted. Our Christian (?) citizens who vote for license and who send men to represent us in legislative halls are directly responsible. God grant the day may speedily come when they will awake to this fact. A. H. G.

DAKOTA.

PIERRE.—The ladies of Pierre, D. T. met May 30, and organized a W. C. T. U. with Mrs. B. F. Hood, president; Mrs. W. B. Williams, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. M. Blakely, treasurer.

Nineteen earnest, enthusiastic ladies were present, and in the parlor of their building. We hope that from this pledged themselves to work for God and home and native land. A committee was appointed for soliciting new members and one for securing columns in the local papers for the advancement of the cause. Also partial arrangements made for organizing a Y. W. C. T. U. and a Band of Hope.

The new society starts under favorable auspices and all promise well for future work.

TENTH ANNUAL STATE CONVENTION.

The annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of Michigan, which was held last week in Flint, was the most enjoyable, profitable and progressive meeting of the organization ever held in this state, and I thought a brief report might be interesting to many of your readers.

The Presbyterian church, where the convention was held, was beautifully decorated with flowering plants, and on one side of the pulpit an evergreen, reaching nearly to the ceiling, trimmed in a manner altogether unique. Upon it were stars, white and gilt, horseshoes, cards, a new moon, and hovering over all a white dove. The gilt stars represented (and were afterward presented to) our "stars" who were present at the convention, Frances E. Willard, Mary H. Hunt, Lucia E. F. Kimball, and Mary T. Lathrap. Other stars represented departments of work, each superintendent receiving a beautiful card from the tree with her name neatly written thereon; each president of a district also received a similar card. These were explained to represent leaves "for the healing of the nations." The new moon was Prohibition rising slowly but surely. The dove was emblematic of the peace and harmony which should pervade throughout the session. I have only given you a partial description of this beautiful tree.

The first evening was devoted to historical sketches of temperance work in the state since the organization of the Michigan W. C. T. U. ten years ago.

The opening prayer was offered by the president, Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, and the Crusade Psalm read by our former president, Mrs. B. B. Hudson. Mrs. C. H. Johnson, of Flint, president of the sixth district, welcomed the delegates and visitors in a most cordial manner, making us all feel at once that we were among friends and sisters. Mrs. A. F. Bourns, of Ann Arbor, voiced the thanks of the convention in a few well chosen words. Mrs. L. M. Boise, of Grand Rapids, gave a "Record of the Years." This was a grand summing up of work accomplished, and among other things were mentioned the State Industrial School for Girls, at Adrian; the law requiring the nature and effects of alcohol and narcotics on the human system taught in the schools; and the successful effort to secure prohibition on the state fair grounds. Mrs. J. M. Hasty, of Lansing, read a paper prepared by Mrs. J. B. Porter, formerly state corresponding secretary, entitled "Organization of the State W. C. U. U." The writer showed this to have taken place June 25, 1874.

The paper, "Influence of the Local Unions," by Mrs. E. P. Church, of Greenville, to have been given at this session, was deferred until Thursday evening. The "thank-offering" envelopes were collected, and $118 was placed in the state treasury.

The exercises of the evening were interspersed with excellent music by the choir.

Wednesday Morning.—The devotions were led by Mrs. B. B. Hudson, and I doubt not that all hearts sent up a silent thanksgiving that this dear woman, and former leader, was spared, and in God's Providence returned to be one among us in this state.

After the roll call of officers, a beautiful white satin banner, with our motto, "For God, and home and native land," embroidered in gold, was presented to the state union, from the ladies of the Charlotte union. The president expressed in words, and the convention voted, hearty thanks for the beautiful gift. After some recommendations of the executive committee, the treasurer, Mrs. C. B. Fox, submitted her annual report, showing the total receipts to have been $1,009.66, disbursements $614.32.

The report of the corresponding secretary, Miss S. A. Rulison, showed number of unions 174. Membership 5,355, an increase of nearly 2,000 from last year. Five hundred and twelve copies of THE UNION SIGNAL are taken in the state, exclusive of the one month trial subscribers. Mrs. R. A Bailey, president of the third district ably presented the claims of THE UNION SIGNAL, and Mr. C. H. Noll, those of the Lever.

Wednesday, p. m.—The devotional exercises were led by Mrs. Lyons, of Howell.

Mrs. L. M. Boise, state evangelist, gave her report, showing a large amount of traveling, many public addresses, and several unions organized by her.

The address of the president, Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, was full of rich thought, and valuable suggestions, and for the purpose of carrying out the latter, it was by vote referred to the executive committee.

The committee appointed last winter to consider the advisability of longer continuing state headquarters, reported through Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, that after a careful consideration, they recommend closing the room and the report was adopted by the convention.

Rev. C. W. Bennett, missionary among lumbermen, was introduced, and gave a very interesting account of his work among that class of our population, during the past winter. The one hundred copies each of THE UNION SIGNAL and the Lever, sent into the lumber camps every week by the state W. C. T. U., have been generally read and greatly appreciated.

Rev. Mr. McLaulin, also a missionary among these men, was introduced and said he was not employed by any society, or person, but depends on God's promise, and has not been disappointed. He asked that all papers, tracts, etc., be sent to his address, Reed City, for distribution among the lumbermen.

Upon motion of Mrs. Benjamin, a "department of work among the lumbermen" was created, and Mrs. R. G. Peters, of Manistee, was appointed superintendent.

The average population of lumbermen in the camps during the winter is 40,000.

From four to five o'clock, a temperance experience meeting was held, and proved exceedingly interesting.

Wednesday Evening.—The audience was so large that many were not able to find even standing room. The devotions were led by Rev. F. A. Pratt.

The report of the superintendent of scientific instruction, Mrs. M. J. C. Merrill, of Lansing, (who was unavoidably absent) was read by the secretary, Mrs. N. A. Brown, of Jackson.

Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, national superintendent of this department, was then introduced, and held the close attention of her audience for over an hour. We cannot but feel that in the summing up of results, this grand woman will carry off the prize, for under the new law now in force in this state may we not hope that the school children of today will be the sober temperance men and women of ten years hence?

A recitation upon "Giving" was beautifully rendered by little Miss "Muff" Hudson, which probably had something to do with the large collection which followed. The choir again dispensed sweet music throughout the evening.

Thursday Morning.—The devotional hour was a profitble one, and at all of these services the attendance was unusually good.

After the reading of the minutes the beautiful banner presented to the state union, was presented to Mrs. Lathrap by the convention. The special order, election of officers, was then taken up and resulted in the re-election of Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, president. Mrs. P. J. Howard, of Petoskey, was chosen recording secretary; Mrs. J. M. Wheeler, of Grand Rapids, corresponding secretary; and Mrs. C. B. Fox, of Three Rivers, was re-elected treasurer, by acclamation.

At the close of this part of the proceedings, a beautiful floral star, was presented to the newly elected president by the South union of Flint.

On motion the secretary was instructed to send a telegram to the National Republican Convention in session at Chicago, memorializing them to insert a plank for prohibition in their platform.

Mrs. L. M. Boise, of Grand Rapids, was elected delegate at large to the National W. C. T. U. convention. Session closed with prayer.

Thursday Afternoon.—The devotions were led by Mrs. L. M. Boise.

The Flint union presented $10 as a "thank offering" which was received by a rising vote of thanks.

A discussion of "The New Law and its Enforcement," led by Mrs. Hunt, was very instructive, giving the delegates much information as to their responsibility in the matter. The superintendent of franchise had prepared a printed sheet with the full text of this law, and those relating to the eligibility of voters at school meetings, which were distributed during the convention. There appearing to be a question as to whether the new law affects those cities acting under special charter, a list of inquiries was prepared and ordered sent to the attorney general, asking him to interpret the meaning of the law.

Mr. Emory, of Lansing, was introduced and gave some information which seemed to be new to many, in regard to the "Truant Law." Every child in this state must attend school at least four months in the year. Parents or legal guardians, are liable to fine for violation of this law, and truant officers in cities having a duly organized police force, and school boards, in towns, villages or cities of less than five thousand inhabitants, who are cognizant of the violation of this law, and who do not institute proceedings against the parent or guardian, are also liable to fine. A resolution was adopted recommending text books endorsed by Mrs. Hunt, especially the one by Dr. J. Dorman Steele. Mrs. Hunt wishes it understood by the unions that she has no financial interest whatever in the book, but has given the work of preparing it her personal supervision, therefore knows of its merits.

Mrs. Dr. Kellogg, state superintendent of hygiene gave her report, and Mrs. Dr. Meacham, superintendent of heredity reported her work, especially the holding of a Normal institute for both of these departments, at Battle Creek, a meeting resulting in much good to those who attended, and others who shall be interested through them.

Mrs. Emma Obenauer, superintendent of German work, gave an excellent report of advance in temperance sentiment among this class of our citizens. The "Flower Mission," Mrs. J. C. Hood superintendent, has been observed in Jackson, Ionia, Grand Rapids, and many other places, with good results; will probably be made more general in the future.

An invitation was received, and accepted, to visit the "State Institution for Deaf and Dumb." The session closed with prayer.

Thursday Evening.—Mrs. Chas. Kinney, of Port Huron, president of the seventh district, presided. The devotions were conducted by Rev. W. H. Shier. Mrs. E. P. Church, of Greenville, read an excellent paper on "The Influence of the Local Unions." Mrs. M. B. Green, of Olivet, state superintendent of Sunday school work, gave her report. Through the efficient labor of Mrs. Green, assisted by local superintendents, temperance lesson leaves and the triple pledge have been introduced into many Sunday schools throughout the state. At a city convention of Sunday school workers in Grand Rapids, held May 15, a resolution was unanimously adopted, to teach temperance in the Sunday schools at least once a quarter.

Miss Lucia E. F. Kimball, National superintendent of this department, was then introduced and gave a very interesting address.

Friday Morning.—After the devotional service, and call to order, Miss Frances E. Willard, our honored leader, was introduced, and greeted with the Chautauqua salute. Having just come from the Republican convention, she gave a few items of interest concerning the "Memorial," and her reception before the committee of that august body. Miss Anna Gorden, was also introduced, and offered a few words in her own sweet way. The reports of district vice-presidents, were limited, for lack of time, but each showed a great advance in all lines of work.

A motion was afterward made and carried, that hereafter district vice-presidents be allowed full time to make their reports.

An incident, I think altogether unprecedented, occurred at this session. Governor J. H. Begole and his amiable wife, were escorted to the platform by Mrs. Cressy, of Detroit, and introduced to the convention. They also were greeted with the Chautauqua salute. Gov. Begole in response, spoke in unmistakable terms in favor of prohibition, and equal suffrage. It was indeed refreshing to behold a man occupying the highest position in the gift of the people of the state, with the fearless independence to express his convictions. At the close of his remarks, Mrs. Lathrap, in behalf of the convention, presented to him and his wife, an elegant basket of flowers, tied with a white satin bow, on which was "For God, and home, and native land," and "W. C. T. U. of Mich." in gold letters. Mrs. Lathrap and several of the executive board were entertained at the Governor's home, and every courtesy possible extended. I think all will join me in saying, Long live Governor Begole and his excellent wife.

Capt. Linscott was introduced and said it is his purpose now to devote some time to the work in Michigan.

The closing prayer was offered by Mrs. S. A. Pixley, Grand Rapids, city missionary.

Friday Afternoon.—During the intermission, as previously arranged, the whole delegation were treated to a visit to the Deaf and Dumb Institute. This courtesy of the Flint ladies was highly appreciated. After the reading of the minutes, the superintendent of franchise reported that 1,497 women voted at school meetings the past year, and the sentiment in favor of using the school ballot is rapidly growing, and, in her opinion, when women are willing to vote on school questions, their conversion to full suffrage is an easy matter.

In this state, in all towns, villages and cities not under special charter, women have an equal right with men to the school ballot, and in all probability the courts will soon decide that this law is equally applicable even to cities in which the board of education is acting under special charter. There is a case already decided in the affirmative in the lower court, and let us hope and pray that this decision will be affirmed in the higher court.

The committee on resolutions reported through the chairman, Mrs. M. E. Pengally, and they were adopted without discussion, and only one voice dissenting.

I have not the text of the resolutions, but among others was one endorsing the fourth resolution passed by the National Convention in Detroit, recognizing it to be the Christian and patriotic duty of women to bend their energies toward securing the ballot.

Similar action has been strenously opposed in former state conventions, and that this was so harmonious shows a marked change in sentiment, and is cause for congratulation.

The report on "Prisons and Police Stations," Mrs. S. B. Williams, superintendent, showed much good work accomplished. The W. C. T. U. of Grand Rapids petitioned their board of police commissioners for the appointment of a police matron, and the request has been granted. The "Work for Soldiers and Sailors" report, Mrs. Moffatt, superintendent, requested to be published in THE UNION SIGNAL. Mrs. Chas. Kinney, superintendent of "Workfor Railroad Employes," reported some progress made. The closing half hour of the convention was made most impressive by the tender and loving remarks of our honored president.

Friday Evening.—Music Hall was filled with an intelligent and appreciative audience to listen to Miss Willard's address. I need not tell readers of THE UNION SIGNAL that the power of her eloquence carried all hearts, and for the time being, at least, the audience was in sympathy with her arguments for prohibition and equal suffrage. Delegations from the several districts had prepared a floral gift for each district president, and they occupied one side of the platform. The one for the ninth, Mrs. Morehouse, was a sickle; the seventh, Mrs. Kinney, a wreath; the fifth, Mrs. Benjamin, a horseshoe; the eighth, Mrs. Freeman, a basket, also a beautiful embroidered banner, the others were lovely baskets. From a friend, I learn that the horseshoe presented to Mrs. Benjamin lent its fragrance and beauty toward enhancing the decorations of the M. E. church at Portland, on Children's Day. J. M. W.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

NINE new unions are announced as the result of the very effective work of Mrs. E. L. Saxon, state organizer for Tennessee.

MRS. H. A. HOBART, Minnesota's president, had the pleasure of organizing five new unions, and speaking about thirty times during her stay in California.

WEST VIRGINIA reports fifteen unions organized since Feb. 15, giving them a total of twenty-one unions. Several places are just ready for organization, and will probably be reported at the approaching state convention. Eleven Bands of Hope are reported.

THE Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Denver, has set about finishing and furnishing the sunny basement of the new tabernacle, on Blake street, near Nineteenth. This is "working headquarters," and the first enterprises are a day nursery, a place for the newsboys' and boot-blacks' school, and probably mothers' meetings.

TIDIONTE (Pa.) is being greatly stirred. The temperance movement is becoming irresistible. It is the one thing talked of; it is the one thing discussed; it is the one thing engaging general attention. For two weeks nearly, have the meetings been held, addressed by Mr. McConnell, with no diminution in the crowds nightly attending at Girard Hall. Signers to the pledge include all denominations and classes—in fact it is the popular thing to support a red ribbon. At last accounts 529 adults and 284 children had taken the pledge.

UNEQUALLED TEMPERANCE MUSIC.—The following songs are sung in temperance meetings all over the land, and never fail to be effective:

For Mother's Sake I Will Refrain. A new temperaece song and chorus. Words by Maria Straub; music by S. W. Straub. The people are awakening to the enormity of intemperance as they never have before. Nothing aids a noble cause so much as the expression of it in song. Some regard for mother lingers in the most depraved soul. This fact has been powerfully utilized in this song. Price 30 cents.

Save the Boy. Words and music by Rev. L. F. Cole. Price 35 cents. A powerful and wonderfully effective temperance battle song. Mr. A. Paxton, Agent of Citizen's League, Chicago, says: "I know of nothing that has aided so much the work of saving the youth as this song." Send for it. It will help the cause.

Stop Drinking Tonight; or, The Sister's Appeal. Song or duet, with chorus, by Dr. J. M. Stillman. A touching and effective ballad. The beautiful and pathetic words are set to graceful and appropriate melody. Price, 35 cents.

For Prohibition Rally. A new and inspiring temperance quartet and chorus. Words by E. R. Latta; music by Geo. B. Chase. The words are of the right sentiment, and the music is lively and energetic. This song will become a great favorite for temperance meetings. Price, 30 cents.

Our Boys are in Danger. Temperance Battle Song. Words and music by T. Martin Towne. This song has all the ringing fervor that the subject demands. Full of life, vigor and "swing," it will never fail to add interest and do good in temperance meetings. Very effective, but not difficult. Composed expressly for, and sung by the author at, Andrew Paxton's Citizens' League meetings. Price 30 cents.

Fight the Battle at the Polls. The great campaign song and chorus of the Prohibition Home Protection party. Words by Maria Straub. Music by S. W. Straub. Nothing will enthuse a public meeting quicker and more thoroughly. Price 30 cents.

The Gurgle of the Jug. Song and Chorus. Words and music by T. Martin Towne, author of "Our Boys are in Danger," "Winnie Dell," "Iola of the Dell," etc. This new song is a hit, and will interest an audience as no temperance song has for many years. It must be sung spirituoso and gurgleissimo. Price 30 cents.

These songs will be sent postpaid to any address on receipt of price.

THE Novelty Rug machine manufactured by E. Ross & Co., Wauseon, Ohio, is one of the most wonderful inventions of the present day, so wonderful in its simplicity that a child of average intelligence can use it in the manufacture of rugs, hoods, mittens, lap robes, etc. We would specially recommend it to our lady readers as a convenient time-saving machine. Agents cannot find a more saleable article. Every family will need one or more. Ladies cannot afford to be without one. For prices and terms to agents send to the manufacturers. Single machines sent postpaid to any address.

☐MESSRS. LORD & THOMAS, the wide-awake advertising agents of Chicago, have just issued a handsome enamelled metallic pocket advertising rule. It is the most convenient article of its kind we have seen, and one which will be much appreciated by the class of people with whom they do business — namely, shrewd advertisers.— Sent, postpaid, for 10 cents.

MR. JAMES C. YOUNG, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, president of the North Western Loan and Real Estate Investment Co., offers some choice investments to our readers. He can give figures from which handsome profits can be realized. His financial standing is beyond question, and we cordially recommend any of our friends who desire to invest large or small sums to communicate with Mr. Young.

THE W. C. T. U. National Anthem, "For God and Home and Native Land" should be used at all W. C. T. U. meetings and conventions. Miss Willard hopes to hear it wherever she is invited to speak. The price has been reduced to 10c. for single copies; fifteen copies for $1.

A GENTLEMAN who has faith in hard, unromantic statistics, has carefully studied the causes of pauperism among two hundred and fifty-four cases sheltered by the workhouse of Manchester, Eng. Old age, he found, had brought thither nearly one eighth. Disease and accident one-seventh. Idleness, free from drink or crime, not a case. Drunkenness in men, one-fourth. Drunkenness in women, one-twentieth. The widows and children of drunkards numbered one-fifth of all paupers. These facts prove that the liquor traffic breeds fifty-two per cent. of the pauperism of Manchester. It is just probable that similar investigation in Belfast and other large towns in Ireland would show that alcohol in beer, whisky, wine, etc., is producing exactly the same kind of results. We wish that those who have shares in distilleries, breweries and public-houses would give some attention to this question. If they did, it may be that they would not feel so comfortable as they do by being made rich by making paupers of their neighbors.

HALL'S Vegetable Sicilian HAIR RENEWER.

The great popularity of this preparation, after its many years of test, should be an assurance, even to the most skeptical, that it is really meritorious. Those who have used HALL'S HAIR RENEWER know that it does all that is claimed.

It causes new growth of hair on bald heads—provided the hair follicles are not dead, which is seldom the case; restores natural color to gray or faded hair; preserves the scalp healthful and clear of dandruff; prevents the hair falling off or changing color; keeps it soft, pliant, lustrous, and causes it to grow long and thick.

HALL'S HAIR RENEWER produces its effects by the healthful influence of its vegetable ingredients, which invigorate and rejuvenate. It is not a dye, and is a delightful article for toilet use. Containing no alcohol, it does not evaporate quickly and dry up the natural oil, leaving the hair harsh and brittle, as do other preparations.

Buckingham's Dye FOR THE WHISKERS

Colors them brown or black, as desired, and is the best dye, because it is harmless; produces a permanent natural color; and, being a single preparation, is more convenient of application than any other.

Miscellaneous Selections.

No rations of tobacco were served out to the heroes of Thermopylæ; no cigar strung up the nerves of Socrates; empires rose and fell, men lived and loved and died during long ages, without tobacco. History was for the most part written before its appearance. "It is the solace, the aider, the familiar spirit of the thinker," cries the apologist: yet Plato, the divine, thought without its aid, Augustine described the glories of God's city, Danta sang his majestic melancholy song, Savonarola reasoned and died, Alfred ruled well and wisely without it; Tyrtauis sang his patriotic song, Roger Bacon dived deep into nature's secrets, the wise Stagirite sounded the depths of human wisdom, equally unaided by it. Harmodius and Aristogeiton twined the myrtle round their swords, and slew the tyrant of their fatherland without its inspiration. In a word, kings ruled, poets sung, artists painted, patriots bled, martyrs suffered, thinkers reasoned, before it was known or dreamed of.

CONGRESS has passed an amendment to the appropriation bill providing that whisky distilleries which mash ten bushels of grain per day or less shall be exempted from the provisions of the law regulating larger distilleries except as to payment of the tax. This amendment is designed to encourage the establishing of small distilleries all over the country—the very sort that the government finds it most necessary to watch. The amendment was championed by representatives from districts where small stills are most numerous. It is a scheme in favor of more whisky factories; and if it should become a law its result will probably be the establishment of one-horse whisky distilleries all over the country.

"SUFFRAGE, for a large class of women in France," says the San Jose Mercury, "is coming about as a natural result of their every-day life, without any great struggle on their part. In the rural districts of that country are commercial courts to try all cases arising between merchants and traders. For these special judges are elected. As women almost monopolize the retail trade, it is proposed not only to let them vote for these judges, but to be eligible for these places themselves. The idea is said to be very popular and will be a success. This accomplished, the business women of France will take the ballot at all elections."

THE Mexicans have a fashion of giving fantastic, but at the same time very truthful titles to their grog shops. One would think that "The Vesuvius," "The Shipwreck" and "The Delirium Tremens," would render powerless "The Charms of the Seductress," and make "The Life Eternal" in "The Little Hell," very undesirable.

Not less significant is the index finger and warning, "The Road to Hell," displayed by an Iowa saloon keeper.

Signal Notes.

AN orange eaten before breakfast often allays the craving for liquor and improves a disordered stomach.

THE Madhi, Mohammed Ahmed, is a total abstainer. Not alone are wine and spirituous liquors forbidden, but severe penalties are inflicted upon smokers and coffee-drinkers.

THERE has nearly always been a good wife behind every great man, and there is a good deal of truth in the saying that a man can be no greater than his wife will let him.—Edward Eggleston.

A MAN who abstains from liquor at twenty years of age has a chance of living forty-two and two-tenths, years; at 30,36.5 years; at 40,28.8 years. An intemperate man's chance at twenty is 16.6 years; at 30, 13.8; at 40,11.6.—Insurance Tables.

MRS. A. M. WORRILL, of this city, has commenced suit in the circuit court against Ed. Argast, Jno. Haas and Mike Hauptman, saloonists, claiming $10,000 damages on account of their having sold liquors to her husband, and as a consequence having been compelled to support the family and herself. The summons was served last Saturday, and the case is set for trial at the June term of court.—Nauvoo Independent.

THE king of Sweden never loses an opportunity of saying a good word for temperance. An English company is at present engaged working a gold mine in Norway, and the king recently had an interview with the heads of the concern, who presented him with some gold jewelry, the produce of the mine. The king, on being informed that a large number of the miners were temperance men, said, "I am very glad to hear it, because they are just the sort of men to give satisfaction."

THE Tacoma (W. T.) News publishes a classified list of that city's 1200 registered voters, and the largest under any heading is that of "Housekeepers, 158." Women are also represented in various other callings. Does anyone believe that the city of Tacoma can be otherwise than benefited by having the wishes of 158 home-keepers expressed at the ballot box? The home is the bulwark of society, and certainly no good man will regret that the vote and influence of the home is doubled in the city government.

AN Iowa exchange says: Quit talking about Dubuque and Davenport and Iowa. It cannot be possible that the census man made a mistake, when he said that he counted more than 1,500,000 people in Iowa, and 44,000 in Dubuque and Davenport. If the type-setter did not get the figures reversed—if these cities don't have millions as against Iowa's thousands—then what? Why, rebellion won't pay. Did it ever occur to Mynheer Mayor of Davenport, or His Honor of Dubuque, that the state of Iowa, which grants charters can annul charters?

THE temperance people of Michigan heretofore held the opinion, that when a saloon-keeper offered his bond properly signed and executed with good and sufficient sureties, that the township, village or city board were lawfully bound to approve it. But the supreme court of that state, has recently decided that if a city council, village or township board should deem bonds presented by liquor dealers insufficient on the ground of the character or of the financial ability of the surety then the court will not interfere to compel such council or board to approve the bonds. The law says the bonds must be approved to be valid, but it also says that the council may approve or reject as they elect.

IN a lecture upon the laws of health and right living, delivered in Cambridge, Henry county, in February, 1881, by our philanthropic Mrs. Livermore, she said: "What business has Matt Carpenter to be lying dead at the nation's capital?" The Cambridge Chronicle replied: "Exactly so. What business has Matt Carpenter, brilliant, big hearted Matt Carpenter, to be lying dead in the zenith of his fame when he should be at the zenith of his powers! He owed years of service yet to his country and his countrymen—to his fellows everywhere—service greater than other men's in proportion as his abilities were greater. When we applaud the brilliant genius and the generous heart of such a man, and point out his great attainments and his great services as models for the youth to emulate, we ought also to note how his death, the wasting of his great and vigorous, and much enduring physical manhood, emphasizes the fact that the violation of the laws of morality (which are but the laws of health) will surely bring down the brightest and the strongest, as well as the weakest, and that station, and wealth, and genius are nothing then. Any school boy is worth more, or may be worth more if he will, than a 'Matt Carpenter dead.'"

When instruction in the effects of alcohol, tobacco surfeiting and debauchery of all kinds upon the God-imaged temple is legally made a part of the curriculum of our schools; when in nation, state, church, school and home there ceases to be an example among heads and leaders that is antagonistical to all mother and home influence, then will a school boy living be worth more than a "Matt Carpenter dead." To give a pure, undefiled habit of living as an example for the boys to follow is what fathers "can and ought to do in the temperance work."

THE BY ALL ODDS BEST EQUIPPED RAILROAD IN THE WORLD.

Let it be forever remembered that the

Chicago & North-Western RAILWAY

is the best and shortest route to and from Chicago and Council Bluffs (Omaha), and that it is preferred by all well posted travelers when passing to or from

CALIFORNIA and COLORADO.

It also operates the best route and the short line between

Chicago and St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Milwaukee, LaCrosse, Sparta, Madison, Fort Howard (Green Bay), Wis., Winona, Owatonna, Mankato, Minn., Cedar Rapids, Des Moines, Webster City, Algona, Clinton, Marshalltown, Iowa, Freeport, Elgin, Rockford, Ill., are amongst its 800 local stations on its lines.

Among a few of the numerous points of superiority enjoyed by the patrons of this road are its DAY COACHES, which are the finest that human art and ingenuity can create; its PALATIAL SLEEPING CARS, which are models of comfort and elegance; its PALACE DRAWING ROOM CARS, which are unsurpassed by any; and its widely celebrated

North-Western Dining Cars,

e like of which are not run by any other road anywhere. In short, it is asserted that IT IS THE BEST EQUIPPED ROAD IN THE WORLD.

All points of interest North, Northwest and West of Chicago, business centers, summer resorts and noted hunting and fishing grounds are accessible by the various branches of this road.

It owns and controls over 5,000 miles of road, and has over four hundred passenger conductors constantly caring for its millions of patrons.

Ask your ticket agent for tickets via this route AND TAKE NONE OTHER. All leading ticket agents sell them. It costs no more to travel on this route, that gives first-class accommodations, than it does to go by the poorly equipped roads.

For maps, descriptive circulars and summer resort papers, or other information not obtainable at your local ticket office, write to the

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 26. CHICAGO, JUNE 26, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

THE Licensed Victualler's Gazette (Eng.) says of the liquor traffic, "The trade is today like a ship in distress, with no one coming to its help."

OUR nation was born of resistance to tyranny. If it is redeemed it must also be by resistance to the tyranny of bad habits, of false notions, of wrong customs and of political parties.

THE Chicago Interior and the Boston Congregationalist agree that whatever may be the result in November, the country is still safe. Put this on record for the hotter days of the campaign.

MR. MOODY made the statement in England a few weeks since, that on returning to that country and looking up the converts of eight years ago, he found that among the backsliders nineteen out of twenty had fallen by the way of strong drink. What an argument for temperance sentiment and work in the church.

THE Scepter Life Assurance Association, an English company on the "double basis" of total abstainers and moderate drinkers, has recently made up the quinquennial statement of losses in both sections, by which it is seen that for the five years past, the number of expected deaths in the temperance section (153) has been cut down to fifty-three, the one hundred, "appointed for death" having "persisted in living" and through total abstinence, prevailed.

THE Illinois liquor dealers organ, the Champion, insists that the challenge of the National Prohibition Camp-meeting association be accepted, and that some Goliath of the traffic step forth in the arena at Decatur next month, to meet the temperance Davids. Money is asked that this may be done. Goliath always was well fitted out with all that money could do for him, but David's smooth little pebbles have a truer ring and aim than all the whisky coinage.

GOVERNOR ST. JOHN gives a happy illustration of the inconsistency of the partisan howl against "breaking up the Republican party" by way of a little story. It is of a ruffianly boy who had murdered his father and mother, had been tried, found guilty and was about to be sentenced, and the judge asking the usual question, "Have you anything to say why sentence of death shall not be passed upon you?" received the astounding answer,—"No, nuthin' but this, please remember that I'm an orfin." The application is made before the story is half told."

IT is said that an undertaker in Dayton, O., when asked to sign a petition to the legislature to submit a prohibitory amendment to the people, refused on the ground that it would hurt his business. Perhaps it is unfair to accuse him of counting the cost of losing the patronage which the liquor traffic supplies with its sixty thousand victims annually, but we should rightly deem the man a brute who refused to sign a petition guarding against death by hydrophobia, yellow fever, or small pox, on such grounds.

A CERTAIN journal says of the recent action, or non-action, of the Republican party: "The sovereign American citizens who retail beer in Chicago, Milwaukee and New York are, at this particular moment, of vastly greater importance to the Republican party than the moral support of all the women on the continent." The Republicans then must be made to feel that they have forfeited not only "moral support," but votes, by this choice. The temperance people must become as "sovereign" as the brewers and retailers of their beer.

THE closing sentence of Miss West's Leaflet on Temperance in Public Schools, is an epitome of W. C. T. U. endeavor and accomplishment. Read it and reflect: "Gail Hamilton once went out to build a barn. 'Not,' she said, 'that I was good at barn building, but I knew I could keep up such a terrible racket that Halicarnassus would come and build it.' Till we get the ballot we cannot build the barn, but we can keep up such a racket that Halicarnassus will be obliged to build it."

A GREAT national congress of temperance workers was held last week in St. George's Hall, Liverpool. Every phase of the temperance question was discussed by the ablest minds. It is pleasant to see in this great council the recognition of the British Women's Temperance Association denoted by the association of Mrs. Margaret Lucas with that of the Lord Bishops of the Church of England and other equally prominent dignitaries in the general officiary.

A GOOD deal of animadversion on the recently enunciated policy of the M. E. church with regard to woman's preaching, is going the rounds of the press. We hear little, however, of this sort of thing from our good women who are actually in the pulpits, whether by vote of conference or vote of the people. They are too busy preaching to discuss their right to preach — too much engaged to advocate the feasibility and propriety of doing that which the Lord has so often blessed, and of which the church has reaped the abundant fruit.

WE have heard of a poor widow who at a missionary meeting of great enthusiasm and proportionate giving, cast into the treasury, not "two mites — all her living — but her two boys — all her loving. When the contribution plate was passed her, she threw in a slip of paper on which the following words were written: "I give my two boys to foreign missions."

Christian women, are you so interested in the temperance reform that you will give not only yourselves, but your boys? If you do not give them to temperance, the age will soon mortgage them to intemperance.

THE Juvenile Temperance Unions of Massachusetts, of which there are a great number, recently held their annual "Children's Festival" in Tremont Temple, Boston. The organizations are so numerous, and the membership so large, that only the Children's Unions east of Worcester unite in this festival—and they send delegations representing only one-tenth of their membership. This however packs Tremont Temple. The exercises consist of singing by the children, solos, duets, choruses, a trained choir of three hundred children leading the choruses with recitations, little operettas, etc. A choir of colored boys was one feature of the festival, who sang marching songs, carrying flags, and keeping step to their own music.

Rev. Dr. Duryea, Rev. O. F. Gifford and Miss Elizabeth Greenwood, of Brooklyn, addressed the children. Mrs. Livermore, president of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., presided, and it is under her management that these Children's Unions are formed.

During the festival, one dear little girl, Effie Hunt, of Melrose, was taken ill and left the ranks. She was carried home, in extreme suffering, and died in three days. When dying she besought her mother's permission to wear her temperance badge when lying in her coffin—a request that was granted, for the little one was staunch in her temperance principles and never-failing in her attendance on the temperance school. At the funeral, her school-companions stood around the casket, like the dead child wearing badges, and sang a low, touching song of farewell, and of faith and trust when they deposited their white, odorous flowers beside their sleeping playmate, and followed her to her rest in the beautiful cemetery.

OUR BATTLE.

How goes the fight with thee—
The life-long battle with all evil things?
Thine no low strife, and thine no selfish aim;
It is the war of giants and of kings.

Goes the fight well with thee—
This living fight with death and death's dark power?
Is not the stronger than the strong one near,
With thee and for thee in the fiercest hour?

Does it grow slacker now?
Then tremble; for, be sure, thy hellish foe
Slacks not; 'tis thou that slackest in the fight;
Fainter and feebler falls each weary blow.

Dread not the din and smoke,
The stifling poison of the fiery air;
Courage! It is the battle of thy God!
Go, and for Him learn how to do and dare!

Look to thine armor well!
Thine the one panoply no blow that fears;
Ours is the day of rusted swords and shields,
Of loosened helmets and of broken spears.

Heed not the throng of foes!
To fight 'gainst hosts is still the church's lot.
Side thou with God, and thou must win the day;
Woe to the man 'gainst whom hell fighteth not!

Say not the fight is long—
'Tis but one battle and the fight is o'er;
No second warfare mars thy victory,
And the one triumph is for evermore.

AM I MY BROTHER'S KEEPER?

ANNA E. DICKINSON.

Well, you say, what is to be done? We have established an admirable school system; we have built school houses; we appoint teachers; we pay our taxes; we elect officers of the law to see that these matters and these people are looked after. Nothing more remains. If any prefer to be ignorant, helpless, vicious, criminal, let them pay the penalty.

Meanwhile we too suffer,—as we ought.

We have done all we could, and more than any one has a right to demand of us. You certainly cannot expect us to go into the highways and byways, and call aloud, and even compel these children to come in.

Even so.

The man who reads this, and who so speaks, lives on some broad avenue, or some cleanly and wholesome street. Day by day he comes out of the front doorway of his house, and meets people who live in homes and among surroundings like unto his own.

He knows that the rear windows and doorways of his house look out on narrow winding alleys, or over crowded courts, or filthy streets. He knows it. He does not realize it.

He knows that human beings are packed into vile dens, or rotting tenements, swarming from stifling garret to mouldy cellar. He knows that out of this overcrowding, under-feeding, filth, and wretchedness, disease is born, and stalks day by day gathering its multitudes from left and right. He knows it. He does not realize it.

He knows that consumption is stalking through the alley; aches and pains, shivering chills and burning fevers, are stalking through the alley. He knows it. He does not realize it.

By and by he hears that, following this ghastly procession, the loathsome giant of small-pox is stalking through the alley.

Then what does he?

Does he say, There are the city ordinances. There is the board of health. There are the laws and the officers for such emergencies. I elected them; if I didn't somebody else did. My taxes help support them. If they choose to neglect their duty, what's that to me? It is no concern of mine.

Is that what the man says?

Or, does he say, It would be a pity for the law to interfere with those children: I hear it is children who are dying of that horrible disease. Poor little wretches! What possible future is before them? They will be infinitely better off out of this world. It is thwarting Providence to compel them to live. It is a good fate that has befallen them. Let them die unmolested.

Is that what he says?

Or, more mercifully disposed, does he say, There is no doubt those health officers do not half attend to their duty. I will tell my family physician to step into the alley and see what he can do to alleviate its misery. And his family physician coming back, announcing that the ignorant wretches who there abide are afraid of him and his medicines and his interference, and will have none of him and his work, does the man answer, Very well: a man's house is his castle. I cannot force entrance even to save his life. If he will die, my hands are clean, and my skirts clear.

Is that what he says and does?

The man knows that sweeping up from the infected alley, borne on the wings of the wind, impalpable, intangible, disease loathsome, death awful, are being carried toward the rear windows and rear doorways of his own home. And if health laws are insufficient, if health officers are careless, are slow, are inefficient, he rushes himself to the alley. Do the people bar window, and lock door, door and window must give way. Do they cry, "This is mine! you shall not interfere, you shall not enter!" they are swept aside while the little perishing wretches are carried away to the hospital in which they can be nursed and nourished into life and health once more, while the pestiferous place is fumigated and cleaned.

He does it; and he has the right to do it, by that first law of nature,—self-preservation.

There is no disease more subtly penetrating, none more destructive, more surely death freighted to such a government as ours, than that of ignorance. And if those who are infected, having the means provided to wash and be made whole, refuse so to do, then, in self-defence, we ought to see that the means they reject are used, and used efficiently to a healing and wholesome end.

We need a moral nuisance board of health, backed by the active support of every decent and vigorous element in the community.

And this should be done in behalf of the tax payer, in behalf of the child, in behalf of the general weal.

The state has a right to do whatever it believes essential to the preservation of its security, prosperity, and life.

Upon this belief is the system of free schools founded. Upon this belief is levied the general tax for its support, demanded by state law, collected by state authority.

The state comes into a man's house and says to him, I take your money for the public good, and since it is for the public good, you cannot refuse, and no man may hinder. I take it from you, a property holder, because a republican government cannot live unless there be intelligence among the people. Unless the masses are educated, there can be no security to life and property. In many a case such a tax payer as you may receive no direct benefit from the money claimed, since the heaviest tax payers are not those who usually send their children to the public schools; yet advantage comes in the maintenance of good laws, and the increased security to life and property which education brings.

Such as he may properly exact and ought to exact, that the money he is compelled to surrender for the education of the people shall accomplish that result.

There can be no debatable ground here. If the state asks, and, when it is not given, arbitrarily takes, from its citizens money enough to support its schools thirty or forty weeks in the year, its citizens should stipulate that the state shall compel the attendance of children thirty or forty weeks in the year.

If the one law is just, the other must be equally just.

If public opinion assents to the unqualified right of the state to force a man to sustain schools for the benefit of his neighbor's children, that he may be indirectly benefited in turn, the man has an equally unqualified right to claim of the state that it educate his neighbor's children, or be branded as a spender or waster of money exacted under false pretences.

Take, for illustration, two of the states that have the best school laws in the country—Massachusetts in the east, Illinois in the west.

In Massachusetts one-fifth of the whole expenses of public schools are lost through absenteeism; and in some towns the percentage of attendance is as low as sixty.

In Illinois, with truant laws in force, the average percentage of absenteeism for the last ten years has been about nineteen. One out of every five or six has not been so much as enrolled in school. Of those who are registered, not more than forty-five per cent. are in regular daily attendance during the time provided for them by the state—six and a half months.

The public school fund—raised by the state from the people of the state, with the direct pledge that it should be used only for school purposes and with the direct assertion that the amount raised was the amount needed—has been used only for school purposes, but has been used in such manner that more than one-half of it has been thrown actually away.

The citizen may well say, I am taxed to support schools for all the children in the state, through six months and a half in the year. One-fifth of these children do not attend at all; and one-half of the remaining four-fifths are in attendance less than one-half the time. More than one-half of my tax, then, is extortion.

Here is a suggestive summary from the last census: The school population of the United States is thirteen millions, eight hundred and seventy-five thousand. Of this number but eight millions and ninety thousand are enrolled in any school. Of these but four millions, five hundred and ninety-one thousand are in average daily attendance.

In a word, in behalf of the tax payer, study in school should be compulsory for the child, for the same term through which the maintenance of the school is compulsory for the tax payer.

An equitable law for tax-payer and child alike.

The school code of Brunswick, Luneberg, so long ago as 1738, enacted that "parents must not imagine, that, because the children are theirs, they can do with them what they please, but must remember that their children are also members of the commonwealth; that it is the duty of the government to have them educated, in order that the country may not be peopled by illiterate, brutal and ill-mannered inhabitants."

The child is the ward of the state. If socially, no one may come between a parent's right and a child's duty, politically, no one, whatever his relation, may come between the state and its subject.

A man has no right to pursue a course that will certainly burthen society with criminals and paupers. If such tendency is manifest, society has a right to coerce him in self defence.

If the state protects the father's field from the spoiler, it should equally protect the child's field of the mind.

The state asserts its power and duty to restrain the parent who would dwarf the body or maim the limbs of his child. To dwarf the brain, and maim the intellect ought to be regarded as worse than disabling the body; more harmful to the child, and freighted with worse calamities to the nation.

The system of compulsion protects the rights of the child, while it enforces the duties of the parent. To enforce duties is not an invasion of rights.

For the state to provide education for every child, but fail to provide that every child shall qualify himself by such education for citizenship, is to maintain that the right of the parent to perpetuate ignorance—and, in consequence, thriftlessness, intemperance and crime—is above the right of the child to be educated, and the right of the state to self preservation.

Chancellor Kent once said, "The parent who sends his son into the world uneducated defrauds the community of a useful citizen, and bequeathes a nuisance."

The state should abate and abolish nuisances.

It enforces the right to send back from its shores paupers and criminals already raised. It should enforce the right to prevent their being raised in its midst.

Criminals and paupers are not created; they grow.

It holds that the majority shall rule. The majority has decided, from the foundations of this government, that the entire body of its people shall be educated; yet it supinely consents to the constant impeding and violation of this law, and tamely submits to the incessant overthrow of the will of the intelligent majority, by the reckless or selfish minority.

It grants to all its male citizens, not disqualified by crime, the authority of the ballot. Suffrage is power over others; and, to power over others, no right can possibly exist. Whoever wishes to exercise it is bound to acquire the necessary qualifications, as far as their acquisition is practicable to him; and the conditions should be such as all can fulfill. An educational condition, and that of no mean order, is one that the poorest can, and that the poorest should be compelled to, fulfill.

A WOMAN'S SERMON FOR WOMEN.

THE HEALING OF THE CROOKED WOMAN.

JENNY BLAND BEAUCHAMP.

On one occasion, when Jesus was teaching in the synagogue, He saw a crooked woman, bent toward the earth and unable to raise herself. He called her to Him, laid His hand upon her, and immediately she was straightened and glorified God.

The punctilious ruler of the synagogue was offended because Jesus had healed on the Sabbath day.

As an apology for His act the Savior asks, "Ought not this woman, being a daughter of Abraham, whom Satan hath bound, lo! these eighteen years, be loosed from this her bond on the Sabbath day?

The healing of the crooked woman represents,

1. The conversion of the sinner. He is bound by sin—a slave to Satan. He can not raise himself from his degraded position. He does not even apply to Christ for relief till he is called. Jesus alone can free him.

It also represents the way. The devotee is freed from the spirit of bondage imposed by a ritualistic religion.

Jesus frees us from the yoke of the ceremonial law. Being himself the fulfillment of the law, He discharges us from the obligation to observe its rites. To the burdened ritualist He says, "Come unto me all ye that labor." The one that so comes will also be freed from the curse of the moral law.

It also gives the church of today the solution of the woman question.

1. Shall Christian women have Christian liberty? These Christian women are daughters of Abraham by faith.

2. They have been bound not for eighteen, but, taking a year for a century, which is allowable in prophetic interpretation, for eighteen hundred years.

3. They have been bound by Satan.

4. They should be freed on the Sabbath day, or the Christian dispensation. As only the last two of these propositions will be disputed, we will consider the church bondage of Christian woman.

Bonds are restraints. That there are restraints thrown around women in the church, on account of sex, none will deny. Only two bonds will I mention.

1. They are not allowed free exercise of their spiritual gifts because they are women.

2. They are subordinates, and are in subjection even in those churches which profess a democratic form of government.

Some will argue that the Holy Spirit imposed the first of these bonds through Paul, in these words:

"Let your women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak, but they are commanded to be under obedience as saith the law." And suffer me to say, this comprehends everything else in the whole Word on the subject of woman's church subjection. Wife subjection is elsewhere spoken of, but this is an epitome of the teaching on church subjection. Here Paul certainly refers to a bond, and counsels the Corinthian church to observe it. But who imposed this bond? It was imposed by the law. What law? Christ, the only law-giver of His church, never made such a law. On the contrary His legislation was directly the reverse. "Call no man master." "Be ye not called master." "One is your master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren." Perfect equality is here taught. We do not go to the Old Testament for a law to govern a New Testament church, but if we did we could not find it there, and I defy any one to find such a law in the New Testament. It is not there. Yet it existed when Paul wrote, but it was a civil law to which he refers.

A Greek writer mentions the existence of this law in almost the same words used by Paul. He says in effect: "What have women to do with the Ekklesia? Nothing. It is not permitted to them." But this Greek law to which Paul refers and which he found it expedient to observe, (although he tells the Corinthian women in this same letter how they should wear their veils when they prayed and prophesied) had its inception in the garden of Eden. It reads, "He shall rule over thee." But this was a curse or bond instituted by Satan.

When God created men and women he gave them dominion over the earth—joint sovereignty. Sin came, man fell in consequence thereof. Might usurped the place of right, and woman the weaker party went under. This was not her original or normal state, and "He shall rule over thee," is not a command but a prophecy, and oh, in the long weary years that followed how sad to woman its fulfillment. Woman's oppression and degradation is the most sorrowful story of all the ages.

But Christ was manifested to destroy the works of the devil, and He has destroyed this bond in the Christian family. The Christian husband does not rule over or order his wife around. He says, "My dear, obey your conscience." It was expedient the wife should obey her husband till he was sufficiently Christianized to know that Christ, and not himself, was her law-giver.

And this bond is falling off in society. This must needs be, as society is only an aggregate of families. And this is meet. The liberalizing influence of the gospel has manumitted the slave, loosed the captive, freed the serf, brought peasants to the level of princes, and shall not woman share in its benignity? She does. Governments are gradually becoming more just to her. They are discarding those laws, as relics of barbarism, that discriminate in favor of man. She now is permitted suffrage, in some form, in twenty of the states and territories.

But the church has not relented. It still insists that women shall wear these bonds. The church is not herself an infallible guide, but she has an infallible guide—the Spirit. The Spirit, must, of necessity, lead her on softly to the acceptance of some truth. He often does so, not by the direct teaching of the Word, but by the hand of Providence. Thus was it led to the work of missions and to ministerial education and support. Every century or so He turns over a new leaf of the Bible for the church. It reads it again and again in the light of God's providence before it sees that it means just what it did not want it to mean.

So it will be in regard to woman's church bondage. Indeed it seems it is already time we had learned this lesson, when we remember how many thousand of souls are born through woman's preaching and her great success as a Bible reader, and how the whole work of foreign missions has been made to turn, as it were, on the pivot of her hand.

Shall she "be loosed on the Sabbath day"? The question was never before so pertinent, indeed the world was never before prepared to answer it. Woman's sex imposed upon her one limitation—physical weakness. In the ruder ages she needed a constant bodyguard, but since society has built up around her the defences of law, extricated her from beneath the grinding wheel of domestic toil, placed at her disposal a thousand conveniences, she has outgrown this limitation in a large measure. That is, a Christian civilization has placed its a under her and lifted her above it.

The churches can not have consecrated womanhood till we do loose these bonds. Consecration presupposes that woman is free to follow the leadings of the Spirit. But the leadings of the Spirit and the restraints of custom and prejudice are often diametrically opposed. If she is free from these bonds the result will be she will "glorify God." Frances Power Cobb says on the authority of a long continued and intelligent observation, "When women are free to work they prefer to work in the philanthropies and reforms." This is said of women as to their natural inclinations, but it is more intensely true of Christian women.

Women compose two-thirds of the membership of our churches. When her church bondage is at an end it wil be a great incubus lifted from the church. It will be a long stride toward the millenium.

The healing of the crooked woman is to us a great tableau. She is the typical woman of the ages bowed down by centuries of shame and oppression. Jesus laid his hand upon her. By the influence of His gospel, woman is raised to the full stature of free and perfected womanhood. The tableau may have had its meaning to Christians of other ages, but the great central truth was reserved for us. It is the solution of a problem the church was never before prepared to consider.

But let her no longer regard the woman question a puzzling one. Jesus answered it eighteen hundred years ago. The crooked woman is woman of the past, but the unbound, erect woman is the ideal church woman. If the Christian man becomes a free man in Christ Jesus, shall the Christian woman remain a bond woman?

But her bonds are growing weaker and weaker, and we will soon see what the world never saw only as an anomaly—a free woman in Christ Jesus.

Denton, Tex., March 13, 1884.

SHORT TEMPERANCE TALKS.

MISS C. S. BURNETT.

No. 10.—What can I do?

Since the conscience of our Christian women has become aroused I am so often asked the above question. Dear sisters who read this article are you asking the same? Well, I cannot tell just what you can do, for I do not know the circumstances that surround you, but, I assure you there is something for you to do, and God will hold you responsible for the manner in which it is done. The poet truly says, "If you want a field of labor you can find it anywhere." I fear we often omit the good we might do in consequence of thinking of that which is out of our power to do. We wait and long for opportunity to come, never thinking the present the right time to seek it. Carlyle says, "Our duty is not to see what lies dimly in the distance, but to do the work that lies clearly at hand." Let each anxious seeker after a field of labor offer this prayer: "Lord what wilt Thou have me to do," with special emphasis on me, and light will be given. I will suggest a few ways in which the humblest woman can work. You can subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL. You can read its pages, and become familiar with our work and the methods by which it is carried on. Here as elsewhere knowledge is power. One cannot be fully interested in what one but partially understands. You can become a member of our union, and add your mite and your influence to aid in carrying on the good work. You can early instil temperance truths into the minds of your children, or the young that come under your influence. You can give a temperance tract or card to the little waif on the street, or to that restless boy in your Sunday school class. A tract thus given arrested the attention of Judson and gave India her greatest missionary. You can speak a kind word to a fallen or tempted one. Such a word saved John B. Gough, and thus gave our cause its greatest worker and the world its greatest orator. You can invite some wayward one to Sabbath school. Such an invitation led to the conversion of Stephen Paxson, and gave America her greatest Sunday school worker. Again I say, only become interested in the work and more ways will open than you can possibly enter. It is the little acts of our everyday life that tell most surely, if any act of a life so eventful as ours can be termed little.

Sisters, have you ever thought what a grand privilege it is to be a member of this wonderful army of women who are, in the majesty of their womanhood, marching against King Alcohol? Lord Nelson said to his soldiers on the eve of an eventful battle, "England expects every man to do his duty." So our leader has a right to expect as much of us. Let us not disappoint her.

INSIST that those who make our laws
Shall pledge for truth and temperance,
For prohibition, to advance
The greatest good to all; and free
Our land from ruin. * * That party dies
Which leagues with sin. Our nation's life
Needs men and women for the strife. —Sel.

AMONG THE CONVENTIONS.

Louisville, Chillicothe, Parkersburg, Cincinnati.

Dear Union Signal:—This is certainly "convention season" for the undersigned. Four "national, political, presidential," to which the "Memorial of the American Home for Protection from the American Saloon," must be presented; one "International Sunday School," one "National Educational," two "State Sunday School," (Indiana and Iowa) and five of our own state W. C. T. U. conventions (Indiana, Michigan, West Virginia, Ohio and Missouri) and nearly all of these in June. Of all, thus far, I have tried to give you some account. That great Sunday school convention at Louisville claims a letter of itself, and our steadfast Lucia Kimball agreed to send one. I simply wish to emphasize the fact that our heroic band at Louisville did grandly in the work of preparation and "organized success" for us by the care and completeness of their arrangements. Colonel and Mrs. Bain were unremitting in their efforts to assist our ladies, and no man in America comprehends the spirit of the W. C. T. U. better than Kentucky's "Harry Clay of the temperance reform." The presence of Mrs. Chapin gave great satisfaction, and her two addresses had all the vigor and passion of earnestness for which she is remarkable. Great, sisterly heart! Her W. C. T. U. sisters prize her "above rubies." Her accounts of the South's growing enthusiasm are inspiring. She says we never saw such a band of southern women as she will bring to St. Louis. Of the elegant reception given by Mrs. Carrie Leech, president of the Y. W. C. T. U., Lucia Kimball will tell you. I wish to speak of the kindness of B. F. Jacobs, of your own city, in leaving space for our public meeting which he had strongly favored, and in reporting from the executive committee, of which he is chairman, the resolution "recommending the International Lesson Committee to furnish temperance lessons in the new series quarterly in the regular course." He asked me to stand beside him while he did this that the cordial co-operation of the two great societies of which we were representatives might be unmistakably known. I wish also to speak especially of the championship of our constant friend, Hon. Wm. Reynolds of Peoria, one of America's chief Sunday school men, and Rev. Chauncey Pond of Oberlin, Ohio, who first offered the resolution to the convention, which referred it (under the rules) to its executive committee. Mr. Pond is corresponding secretary of the Sunday School Association of Ohio, and a broad, noble-hearted Christian gentlemen who has no public "coldness" or private sneer at the wider work that has in this day come to Christian women. Nor has Bro. Jacobs, I think, or any other leader in the Sunday school work of America, save the older men, born under a regime so different that we could expect little more than their tolerance and should cherish no harsh spirit toward them. As for Dr. Vincent, chairman of Sunday school lesson committee, he is sui generis.

His position I find it impossible satisfactorily to explain to my own mind. I regard him as one of the noblest and most generous of men, a loyal truth seeker, an open and honorable opponent, but one whose sensitiveness and deeply rooted antagonism to woman as a speaker, a leader, and a possible element in government, is phenomenal among the men of liberal spirit with whom I am acquainted. His utterances upon this subject in public and private have pained me more deeply than those of any man among our contemporaries. The sense of his profound disapproval of our presence at Louisville and his strong opposition to the quarterly temperance lesson (while he is an earnest temperance man) largely diminished my pleasure in the decision rendered by the convention whose spirit was enthusiastically with us. But Dr. Vincent has invited us to Chautauqua and assigned August 15 and 16 to the National W. C. T. U. for its anniversary exercises. This is a proof of his desire to be fair, although he frankly says, "I invite the women against my own preference, because the public desire to hear them."

The knowledge that the chief presiding officer at Chautauqua holds and freely states this opinion, detracts greatly from the satisfaction of going there, and keeps some of our most gifted women from accepting invitations. My own thought has always been, however, that no one person's opinion, however honored by us, should swerve our society from the expression of its purpose in any and every influential circle possible to be reached by the W. C. T. U.

I found our beloved Jennie Casseday, though in constant pain of body, rejoicing as always in spirit because of the remarkable success that attends her sweet gospel mission of flowers. Her sister, Mrs. Fannie Casseday Duncan, is Jennie's constant ally, and her literary ability and influence in Louisville journalism is of great value to our cause.

Among the new members of the international committee we have a strong friend in Rev. Dr. Burger, of Dayton, Ohio, whose wife is a prime leader in the W. C. T. U.

We spent Sunday in Chillicothe with a sister of Mrs. Hayes' mother. This conservative old town was the birthplace of "Lucy Webb" and I had great pleasure in learning that her grandfather was a warm friend of woman's progress and so ardent in his adherence to the temperance cause that he pledged his children to educate their little ones from their earliest years in total abstinence principles. Fathers and mothers pray take notice! You are training those today who shall be presidents of the Republic. It is not improbable that the little girl is born who shall yet preside at the White House, not as hostess only, but as chief executive of the Republic! "Brother Jonathan" sadly needs "Sister Deborah" at his side. Bachelor housekeeping, in national, municipal or fireside affairs is the opposite of home like!

From Chillicothe we went to Parkersburg and witnessed the rallying of the clans for the first time on their own soil—this state union having been organized last summer at Mountain Lake Park camp meeting, Maryland. Our dear Jennie Smith is really its "procuring cause" and our heroic Mrs. I. C. Johnson its chief sponsor. Twenty unions are already organized and Mrs. M. L. Wells, of Indiana, a West Virginia woman, with her lovely daughter Nellie is traversing the state and building up new auxiliaries with amazing success.

Miss Taylor (who, by the way, presented an elegant gavel to the convention), long our vice president of the National W. C. T. U. in that state, has been prevented by her cares as president of Wheeling Female College, and latterly by illness, from entering into the work as she would otherwise have done.

In Miss Emma Fowler, of Wheeling, a graduate of Pittsburgh Female College when I was a teacher there in 1864, we have a gifted and cultured woman, capable of serving our cause grandly. In Mrs. Geo. Parsons, of Keyser, Mrs. Dr. Kendall and Mrs. Merrick, of Parkersburg, and many others I would be glad to name, we have the elements of strength and victory. But the quiet little woman, shut up in her room all winter with bronchitis, who wrote five hundred long letters to ministers, editors, teachers and "mothers in Israel," sending them our leaflets and documents, telling them "how to begin" and imploring their aid, I recognize as a heroine whose name should be ever lovingly cherished by West Virginians.

Mrs. I. C. Johnson, of Parkersburg, she it was who met us at the train, conveyed us to the elegant and hospitable home of Mrs. Wm. Caswell, superintended all the plans, from securing speakers to decorating the church with exquisite floral designs, evergreen arch and standing vases of plants, the genius loci of dauntless brain and tireless devotion.

After our evening meeting we asked the audience to "take stock in the work of the W. C. T. U. on the following plan explained by Mrs Wells: Twelve young ladies went through the audience, one beginning at the rear and one at the front of each row of pews with a little book apiece, and asked for subscriptions to shares of stock. Each share costs five dollars, payable at the rate of one dollar per year and any person could take as many shares as he would. Handsome certificates are to be issued for each share or multiple of shares. No obligation is incurred for any amount beyond that actually subscribed. The stock simply represents the interest and faith of West Virginia people in the work of the W. C. T. U. and gives a basis of actual "wherewithal" to the workers. We raised four hundred dollars in a few minutes this first time trying, and similar meetings will held throughout the state. As a result it is proposed to salary the president and corresponding secretary and keep them constantly in the field.

Dear sisters of all the state, territorial and local unions, I urge you to go and do likewise. The people's hearts are with us. They will stand by us, only we must put before them a simple and practical plan of finance. I believe this is the plan. It has worked well wherever introduced, I call attention to it most earnestly, especially of our southern presidents and those in the new northwest. If you will take it up, your progress will rapidly outstrip that of our older unions without such plan.

Anna Gordon, with her corps of helpers, secured 80 "trial trip" subscribers to The Union Signal from forty towns in about twenty minutes of quiet work among the delegates. I hear the praises of our paper on every hand. Its practical helpfulness, its gospel spirit, its educational value are constantly emphasized by our workers in public and in private. The (West Va.) Freeman is a great favorite as a state paper, and justly so.

Dr. Warren, the state organizer of the gentlemen's society, is the ablest coadjutor we have in the field. He goes often on horseback, fording streams, taking the chances of rough mountaineering, but declares this the happiest work of his life. Our W. C. T. U. has been introduced by this noble man wherever possible. Hurrah for West Virginia! No state ever did so well in time so brief.

We went by night to Cincinnati, breakfasted with Mrs. Dymond whose city home, like her warm heart is ever open to our workers. Then we repaired to Trinity M. E. church to be present at Mrs. S. K. Leavitt's nine o'clock prayer meeting. How can I do justice to this decennial convention of the crusade pioneers? It caps the climax. Why shouldn't it, for are not these "the mothers of us all?" The church was trimmed with flags of all nations. As I saw Ireland's green flag bearing

> "The harp that once through Tara's halls,
> Its sweetest music poured,"

I thought of Father Mathew, Francis and Edward Murphy, Bishop Ireland and Father Hagan, those good and gifted Celts, with their warm hearts, ready eloquence and vast result for humanity. As I saw the Union Jack my heart rejoiced in classic Canon Farrar, Sir Wilfrid Lawson with his "gay wisdom," Robert Rae, the gentle-hearted national secretary, our Margarets Lucas and Parker and our Wilhelmina Haslam. Esther Pugh had a lovely bouquet of water lilies, as the fit emblem of the W. C. T. U. The pulpit was enwrapped by stars and stripes and the most elegant illustration of our motto that I have yet seen, in great gilt letters on a crimson background, decked the great gallery front, "For God, and home and native land."

Ohio has five hundred local unions and the delegates made a large congregation of themselves. The leadership of the crusade state was there, Mary A. Woodbridge, just from a most painful illness (the result of overwork) and presided with the dignity of a senator. I could but contrast her masterly presence and manner with those of Gen. Henderson, chairman of the recent Republican convention. Mrs. Phinney makes an ideal corresponding secretary in beloved Jenny Duty's absence. Esther Pugh, la capable, was recording secretary with an admirable assistant whose name I can not recall. Mrs. Fisher, of Lytle Hall W. C. T. U., (which entertains the convention)made in a most graceful and elegant manner a model address of welcome—so much a model that I captured her manuscript and enclose it herewith for the help it may be to others. [To be given next week.—Ed.] Mrs. Clevenger, of Wilmington, Ohio, a Vassar graduate with clear-cut mind, responded, and her manuscript has packed into it the best resume of recent temperance victories that I have heard. I shall try to get it for my own behoof at least.

Next (while Anna Gordon was organizing a Y. W. C. T. U. in the church parlors), we had the anniversary exercises; and "Here's richness!" must have been everybody's verdict. Think of ten minute addresses from the following: Mrs. S. K. Leavitt, Mrs. Eliza J. Thompson, Miss Henrietta Moore, Miss Esther Pugh, Mrs. I. B. Weakley, Mrs. Mattie McClellan Brown — all redolent of choicest crusade memories. It was a rich feast. Dear "Mother Thompson" said: "When we women started out we hadn't an idea in our heads outside of our own little rum-cursed Hillsboro; but what hath God wrought! The women remind me of an Indian who put his ear to the ground and heard forces coming from a distance to the rescue, while the men, standing up, and strong in their manly pride, didn't seem to hear. But I tell you God is coming — the victory is near."

Esther has a fine figure of the difference between raw recruits and disciplined armies; the praying bands and the W. C. T. unions. Mrs. Brown brought down the house by a thrilling story of the crusade. Mrs. Leavitt, "the human pippin," full of mellow nutritious thought, told of the esplanade and the prison episodes in Cincinnati's heroic story, contrasting it with the disgraceful scenes of the recent riot. She called on all the crusaders to rise and I thought three-fourths of that audience of noble women stood up. "How glad I am that I was one," was heard on all sides. But one quiet school teacher was just as glad, looking through tears upon these chastened faces, that their heroic story had power to win her heart to that blessed movement "which, not having seen she loved."

Always yours in good cheer,

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

TIMELY HINTS AND DIGRESSIONS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—As the national holiday approaches, I feel impelled to urge upon our people the need of instituting temperance celebrations upon that day. When the whole country side turns out in jubilation over the possession of a free government, ought we not to try to raise their standard, as to what properly constitutes such a state? It ought to be a sacred occasion to every patriotic heart, but it has been prostituted largely by designing politicians to serve as a special occasion for working the party "machine."

Let us rescue the public on that day, as far as we can, by preparing for them decent and helpful entertainment keeping as many as possible out of reach of the liquor shops, under pure and elevating influences.

It has degenerated into an occasion of senseless gratulation upon being born in a good place, and over the achievements of their forefathers. Rather it is a fit occasion upon which to call attention to evils which are undermining and endangering our liberties and to search for remedies which will rescue and add lustre to our stars. Let us no longer silently permit them to be dimmed by the foul vapor of saturnalian revelry which has crept into the national observance of the day.

In response to an appeal for help in such a celebration, I received the following letter which portrays the sentiment of many honest party men at this critical period. The writer has been a staunch Republican through all his three score years, and for most of that time was the leader of the party in Kankakee county, one of its greatest strongholds.

He wrote before our leader had made the party define itself on the liquor question, or still more vigorous words would have been used. We are steadily gaining such men and their aid ensures our ultimate triumph.

MRS. G. M. SINGLETON,—Dear Madam:—Your kind letter of the 9th is received. I cannot tell you how greatly I was pleased. There is a common sympathy, and blessed Christian spirit in this great work for God and humanity that we cannot express, but it blends human hearts into an experience of love to God and good will to all mankind, and especially to the unfortunate. It is Christ like.

First, I want to confess my error. Four years ago you and Bro. S. and others wanted to nominate a temperance ticket. I opposed it, for I really thought then that the Republican party would take up this great and all important question, but I soon after saw my mistake, and cut loose from that party, and for three years I have been trying to make amends for the wrong I did four years ago, and I ask you and Bro. S. to forgive me for the wrong I did then. I am fully convinced that the Republican party is getting farther and farther away from this issue, and I have been for two years, and shall continue to be, and work for a party pledged not only to give us prohibition but female suffrage, by which means we can and will enforce prohibition. But more of this when I see you, which I hope will be soon. As to the picnic on the Fourth, we will have a business meeting of our Rescue Club on Friday evening, when the matter will be considered. At our public meeting last night I called attention to your proposition, and requested a full attendance Friday evening. Some think if there should be a rain Shelby would be rather a poor place for two or three hundred or more people. We could move chairs from our Rescue Hall into the court house square, fix up a speaker's stand and have a grand picnic here and invite the temperance people all around us to join in a grand temperance Fourth of July. We will fully discuss your kind proposition Friday evening and I will then report. I am glad you started this idea and whether it be there or here I hope it will be a grand success and result in great good to our glorious cause.

Very truly yours, JAMES MCGREW.

Will you tell sisters, H. N. Austin and Grandma Think-and-work, that their words have removed a weight of discouragement from at least one heart.

I believe the matter of hygienic cookery to be "the bottom line," and my communication relative to mince pies was penned under the sense of the urgent need of attracting general attention to the matter of needed reform and drawing out of abler pens. The only immediate response was the one voice of wounded dissent from "Grandma Work-and-think" which in its turn gave me a pang upon seeing that I had treated the subject so unskillfully as to pain one of our own band, and apparently failed in my prime object. But I rejoice at the appearance of the able pens, armed with the scientific knowledge necessary to the proper handling of the subject.

The establishment of a separate department of hygiene is a sure means of giving us, in time, much information which we need, but to those who are fully conscious of their ignorance upon household chemistry, the time will seem long between the founding of the department and the practical establishment of district institutes, which will carry knowledge to those in remote corners, who cannot leave their homes to attend the state meetings.

May not the usual period of incipiency be shortened by our talking up the subject through our precious telephone (under limitations as to space) and beginning at once to live up to the extent of our knowledge. The first step is to banish from our tables such dishes as produce discomfort to certain members of the household, or are commonly known to be lacking in nutrition properties. The use of such cannot properly be called epicureanism, it is gluttony of the worst sort, even if the quantity consumed be not large.

Deliver us from the ignorance which causes a tender Christian mother to place before her family dishes which please the palate but do not nourish the body, because "they are fond of them." The sense of taste designed as a guide in the selection of food, becomes perverted by wrong education, becomes "refined out of us" by epicurianism, so that it receives at last substances which it persistently rejected in the normal state.

Our wrong living is the result largely of an improper understanding of the different systems of laws. We separate the moral and physical instead of studying them in conjunction; we think of the first as regulated by God and of the second, by Nature, a word whose meaning is much confused and we do not always realize that we write it with a capital because it is another term for the holy name, which we apply to Him, when considering a particular class of His laws.

The physical law is just as important and as infallible as the moral, and so closely are they interwoven that we cannot draw a clear line between them. It is our duty to live so as to maintain the perfect equilibrium of the two systems in so far as our knowledge goes, and it is consequently a very important part of our moral obligation to avail ourselves of every possible source of information.

If it is sin to break one of God's laws, it is sin to break any and the sacrilegious mind which would dare to control the physical forces in any way antagonistic to the established order is guilty of sin. We must recognize any infringement of the law of health as sin, and expect such to retro act with debasing effect. God speed the day when we shall know what to eat and drink, and when and how! Help us to elevate the labors of the kitchen from the plane of drudgery to the realm of high art!

Let us take courage, weary mothers, while other artists deal with pencil, plaster and pigment, we will work in God's grand material the human body, building up with strong sinew and firm tissue; moulding into lines and curves of grace; tinting with the beautiful hues of health and so sustaining and continuing God's work.

An earnest temperance worker who was sent as a delegate to a recent Republican convention in northern Indiana, was also appointed by the temperance society to which he belongs, as one of a committee to present the following resolution:

WHEREAS, Ours is a government of the people for the people and by the people, whenever any considerable portion express an earnest wish to make a change in the fundamental law of the state, it is the duty of the servants of the people in the legislature of the state to take the necessary action to submit the proposed change to a vote of the people of the state: and,

Recognizing the truth and binding obligation of the principle above stated, and having in view the great good of temperance and the great evils flowing from intemperance, we hereby instruct the candidates here nominated to work and to vote to secure the submission to a vote of the people of Indiana, as soon as may be possible, the amendment to the constitution heretofore proposed and commonly known as the "Prohibitory Amendment".

Yielding to the earnest request of parties interested in the nominations to be made, our delegate deferred offering the resolution until after the selection had been made. Only two or three of the party leaders knew of the nature of the resolution to be offered and they prudently fled from the wrath to come.

When it was read, a prominent party man sprang to his feet before the mover had relinquished the floor and moved to lay it on the table; fifty voices instantly seconded the motion and the chairman without allowing any opportunity for discussion immediately put the motion, which was carried with seeming unanimity.

Query: Did this convention mean by this action to negative the right of the people to demand a change in their fundamental law? or:

Did they mean to assert that temperance is an evil and intemperance a virtue?

Or was it a contemptible, cowardly cringing to the rum sellers and drinkers (their allies and confederates) by men whose blood should tingle with shame at the recollection of what they did?

GERTRUDE M. SINGLETON.

THE CHRISTMAS SOUVENIR.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I am much interested in the temperance souvenir prepared by Mrs. Hunt of Portland during the time she was "called aside" by a painful accident. I am sure it is full of merit and will meet a much felt need. We do not realize this as fully these summer days as we shall when the holidays come. Already there comes a pledge from the president of New Jersey W. C. T. U. to a thorough canvass for its circulation, and added words of good cheer for the venture. Most certainly Maine, through her president, would follow New Jersey. Who will be next? It is to be hoped the National W. C. T. U. will "adopt" the Souvenir, as it is, in my opinion, to be a financial success.

L. M. N. STEVENS.

THE Melrose (Mass.) W. C. T. U. have presented the town with a Steck concert grand piano, to be permanently located in the handsome town hall. The price was $1,050, but a reduction was made the ladies. The circumstances were such that the raising of the funds and the gift were a part of temperance work.

Our Children.

THE RAINBOW.

MRS. M. B. MCCLURE.

[To be recited by seven children, each costumed in one of the colors representing the verse spoken, jaunty tissue paper cap, sash about a yard and a half long by three-eighths of a yard wide, extending front and back, terminating on the left shoulder with rosette, and confined at the waist under the right shoulder. They enter in the order of the rainbow colors, and form a semi-circle before speaking.]

(Introduction spoken by all in unison.)

The rainbow colors blended bright,
Show us how fair are rays of light.
In union we with heart and hand,
Work for the conquest of the land.

RED.

In blushing red, like queenly rose,
Or sunset sky at evening's close,
I give no license to the bowl,
Where lies the foe that drowns the soul.

ORANGE.

I come in richest orange hue,
To image forth our cause most true;
No evil genius' deadly art
Pierced me with alcoholic dart.

YELLOW.

All yellow, bright with glittering light,
The wily tempter weaves his spells,
But leaves his victim dark as night,
Where he a wreck his virtue sells.

GREEN.

Green as the meadow in the spring
Threaded by streamlets' generous flow,
So free and pure my mottoes ring,
Stick to the pledge! that's right, I know.

SKY BLUE.

Pure as the blue in summer's sky,
With which no other shade can vie,
Here let us pledge our honor bright,
To shun all drinks that are not right.

INDIGO.

Blue like the ocean's rolling tide,
Forming the arch with span so wide,
The bow of promise I proclaim,
No baleful foe in my domain.

VIOLET.

In modest violet I'm arrayed,
No earthly skill can reach my shade;
I teach in pure celestial light,
Shun every drink that blinds the sight.

AN UNKNOWN HERO.

"Evenin' Telegram, fourth e-di-tion!" All about—the bulls an' bears, totterin' dynasties—an' furrin affairs! Telegram, sir? only a penny."

Above the tumult and roar of Broadway the shrill little voice piped its song in the ears of hurrying humanity. The shadows were beginning to fall, and the lamplighter, intent upon duty, ran past with his ladder and link.

Two living, breathing tides surged in opposite directions through the great thoroughfare. Each looked out for himself; no one thought of his neighbor.

"Evenin' Telegram, fourth e-di-tion!"

The thin little voice in its sharp staccato was alone sufficient to conjure in the mind of the imaginative a picture of hunger and want, and youth without childhood, coupled with the experience and sorrow of age.

All this, in addition to the legion woes of his tribe, a hance glimpse of the pinched little form conveyed.

He was a boy of a dozen years, perhaps, with a freckled face and a pair of honest blue eyes, whose whole vitality seemed to have centered in a remarkable shock of brick-colored hair. He stood pressed against a lamp post, with his bare feet drawn close for safety, and the ragged jacket buttoned to the chin; under his arm was a bundle of papers, and a grimy little hand flourished one in time to his shrill little tune:

"Buy a paper, sir? Telegram; only a penny!"

But somehow the hurrying crowd cared little for the news, and the pennies accumulated slowly in his ragged pocket.

He counted them over now and then, spreading them out on his palm:

"One, three, seven, ten, fifteen! No dinner tonight, Tim, if you don't do better than this."

For a moment his face would fall, but he would sing a line or two of "Sweet by-and-by," and then, as if the inspiriting words had given fresh courage, begin again:

"Fourth e-di-tion, Evenin' Telegram!"

Still the crowd surged on; the laborer to his humble home where all his treasures were gathered and in which his joy centered; clerks and shop girls dragging their weary bodies on blistered feet to the doubtful refreshment of comfortless boarding houses; gentlemen of leisure sauntering to their clubs; women whose sole vocation in life was to be as the "lilies of the field."

The honest blue eyes staring out of the hungry, freckled face, scanned them all as he offered his paper with nice discrimination to those only whose mien was inviting.

The shadows fell swiftly now, and a myriad of gas jets burst into light, while a sudden cry of "fire" caused the struggling streams of life to rush yet more frantically each in its own direction.

"In the sweet by-and-by," sang the newsboy, watching with his bright blue eyes the efforts of a beautiful young woman to free herself from the crowd. As she neared him Tim put out his hand and touched her sleeve.

"Move this way, lady; come here on the curb by the lamp post, an' stand still for a minit. I won't let you get hurt."

"Oh, thank you, my boy; I am so frightened," she answered, slipping into the place Tim made vacant, while he put his little form between her and the struggling mass of humanity.

"There's nothing like a Broadway crowd this time o' day, lady. But the rush'll soon be over; the cry of fire made it worse, and everybody's a-going to dinner just now; leastways, everybody wot's got any dinner to go to," he added, gravely.

One pretty arm, clothed in its blue velvet sleeve, was wound around the lamp post for safety, but as Tim finished she slid it down without removing it, and laid that hand on his ragged shoulder, saying:

"Do you ever have to go without dinner?"

"Very often, lady," he made answer, looking with honest admiration into her sweet face.

"How is it tonight; will you have a good dinner?"

"Not very, I guess, 'less I sells enough papers to pay for my stock an' dinner too, and I ain't done that yet, lady."

"Are you very far off?"

For answer he held up his bundle of papers, and spreading out the pennies en his hand counted again:

"Three, eight, ten, thirteen, eighteen, twenty-three; not a very sumptoous dinner tonight, lady."

"Will this help toward it?" she asked, laying a bright silver dollar among the small coin.

"It will pay for a feast, lady. Clam soup, roast beef, huckleberry puddin' an' all," he answered, with an unction that showed the pretty young lady how little he was accustomed to such fare.

But he picked up the silver coin from among the others and held it out to her.

"I'm very much obliged, lady, and its oncommon kind in you, but I couldn't take it, cos I likes to earn what I eats."

"But you have been of service to me, my lad, and yov can be still more, if you will go with me across the street and call a coach; then you will have earned the money."

"Thank you, lady; but it's werry big pay for a little work."

Then they threaded their way through the lessening stream of people, Tim always a step or two in advance to clear the road. When they reached the middle of the street an engine drawn by a pair of powerful black horses, frantic for the fire, came dashing past with breakneck speed. Tim turned and saw his companion's danger, threw himself forward with reckless heroism and thrust her back, while the great beasts bore down and trampled him beneath their feet.

When he opened his eyes hours afterward and found himself in a wonderful place whose floor was covered with rich carpets and walls were hung with tapestry, himself lying on a couch whose softness and luxury brought a sense of ease to his crushed form, he could only look with wonderment at all this beauty, touched with a soft rose-colored light, and whisper:

"There's a land that is fairer than day."

In a moment light feet passed around the bed, and the sweet face was bending over him.

"My dear child, are you easier now?"

But his memory was clouded still. He thought he had reached "the sweet by-and-bye," and the beautiful face was that of a seraph, until she began to smooth his shock of brick-colored hair with her soft hand. Then a light came into his eyes and he whispered:

"You are the lady wot I met on Broadway?"

"Yes my boy; and you are the hero who gave his life for her."

"Won't I get well, lady?"

"I fear not, my dear boy; but tell me where is your home?"

"Home?" he repeated the word as if it was a stranger to his vocabulary, and yet the next sentence, spoken painfully, showed that he felt dimly all the sweet possibilities it embodied.

"Home? I haven't no home, lady. Leastways, none to speak on. I sleeps in a flat-boat down on the wharf, an' I never goes there till after dark an' the cops is scarce."

"But have you no father or mother?"

He shook his head negatively.

"What is your name, my child?"

"Tim."

"What else?" she asked.

"Nothin' else as I knows on."

"Could you eat something, Tim, or drink a little wine, if I feed you?"

"No, thank you, lady; I ain't hungry or thirsty any more."

"But you saved my life, dear Tim, by giving your own in its place. I can never repay you, because you cannot live, and I want to do something for you. Think and tell me, is there anything you would like me to do?"

She had covered the little hand lying on top of the silken quilt with her own soft, rosy palm, and bent over him waiting. A tremor of delight ran through all the bruised little form at the touch, the honest blue eyes looked into her sweet gray ones above as he asked:

"Do you sing, lady?"

"Yes, Tim."

"Then I'd take it werry kind, dear lady, if you'd hold my hand an' sing me 'Sweet by-and-by.'"

A little group gathered outside the half-open door saw a slender arm clothed in blue velvet slide gently beneath the shock of brick-colored hair, while the other palm held close a grimy little hand; then all the room was filled with the melodious voice:

"We shall sing on that beautiful shore
The melodious songs of the blest;
And our spirits shall sorrow no more,
Not a sigh for the blessings of rest."

With the last seraphic burst the last grain of sand had slipped through the hour-glass, never more to begin its work again until inverted in

"A land that is fairer than day."

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S TALK.

DEAR CHILDREN:—I think most of you know what a glorious Fourth of July they are going to have in Iowa this year—because on that day all the saloons in that great state are to be closed. The boys and girls of our Prevention Army are to take part in the grand celebration. The church and school bells will ring, there will be long processions, in which our brave little soldiers will march, with banners and mottoes, and will sing "Tremble, King Alcohol, we shall grow up," "Get ready for the Jubilee," and other rousing temperance songs. Fourth of July this year will mean a great deal more to the Iowa boys and girls, and so to us all, than any other they have ever known. They will have something beside fire crackers, torpedoes, and fire works to think of. Our General—whom all the little soldiers know and love, though some of you may never have seen her—suggests that the Bands of Hope everywhere join in this new kind of Fourth of July celebration, and make the whole land ring with our joy over King Alcohol's downfall in Iowa.

On the program for "Children's Day," I saw this subject for a speech, "The Lord's use of small things to accomplish great results." The brave little Iowa soldiers did a great many little things to bring about the great result of Prohibition. What they did all our little soldiers can do, and no one of you must think—I can't do anything—but just be bound you will do something.

Supposing you talk about this grand celebration in your next Band of Hope meeting, and we will see if one cannot be arranged for every Band in the whole United States.

God help us all to be "ever brave and true"—to "dare to do right" at all times and everywhere.

PREPARING FOR HOME.

M. A. PAULL.

Mrs. Sinclair was a kind-hearted lady, who took a loving, kindly interest in her fellow creatures. But she was an invalid, and compelled to limit her life to two rooms on one floor, about which she wheeled herself in a mechanical chair of clever construction.

After doing a certain amount of work every day—for she could not afford to be idle—she treated herself to a long rest by her window, which looked out on a busy street, and was right opposite a less busy street, which, of course, opened into the other. She often congratulated herself that her window was such a cheerful one from these circumstances, and she enjoyed the sight of the busy life outside extremely. About six months before, her landlord had had her two rooms papered and painted, and she lived in one while the second was being done. This business had introduced to her notice the painters and paper hangers employed by her landlord, and their kindness and civility, and anxiety not to disturb her, had made her anxious to do them, if she could, a kindness in return. She had some pleasant talk with them; and as the season was extremely warm, she provided for them every afternoon in the long interval between their dinner hour and leaving work, some fruit and biscuits or cake, or some lemonade and plain wholesome cake, all of which was extremely and gratefully appreciated.

They became such good friends that she broached a subject very dear to her—that of total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors. They were not teetotalers: painters as a rule need a great deal of reform in this matter, and these were no exception to the rule. They believed a little drink did them no harm, though they agreed with her that excess was unmanly and disgusting. She furnished them with some facts and arguments which were quite new to them, and they promised to read all she gave them, and to think about it.

Now, it was Sunday afternoon about five o'clock, and she saw one of her young friends, a painter, walking up the street opposite to her window with a young woman about his own age; and it was very natural, at all events it was natural to Mrs. Sinclair, to watch the young couple with kindly eyes. They were a nice looking pair. The young painter was of medium height, light build, with a bright carmine color on his cheeks, a clear though dark complexion, and curly black hair and moustache. The young woman was fair, with light hair and blue eyes, and rather a pale complexion; she was very neatly, almost plainly dressed, for her class and her sex and her age, to all of which finery, as a rule, is dear.

It was astonishing how many times the young man found it necessary to look into his companion's face as they walked. Every minute or two his head moved round that way, and very often it persistently remained so till she in her turn had looked at him. Mrs. Sinclair was very clear-sighted; she knew this was one symptom of the fascination exercised over him by his companion, and that the young painter was fast falling in love, if he did not already acknowledge to himself that, for him, the one woman worth winning was by his side at that moment. To Mrs. Sinclair's mind this young love was a sacred, a holy, and a beautiful thing, not to be lightly talked of, or trifled about, as is too often the case. If she smiled to mark the signs she knew so well in her young friend, it was a very tender smile; and how earnestly she desired for them them that the affection so charming and so interesting to them both at this moment, might never be quenched or clouded or weakened by sin. She knew perfectly that the blight caused by strong drink had spoiled many beginnings as fair, and she wondered whether she might not use this new era of the young painter's life to win him to embrace one surety against the destruction of home happiness.

But she must not be precipitate. It was possible, though not in the least probable, that this was merely the companionship of an hour or a day, and by treating it as fixed and certain she might spoil everything. She would wait some weeks.

Meanwhile, Robert Sandford, the young painter, was head-over-ears in love with Bessie Long; that is to say, he could not get her out of his thoughts all day, and had not even the wish to do so. He dreamed about her at night, and if he had painted her name on every wall he touched it would scarcely have been surprising. The society he had most cared for hitherto now appeared tame and uninteresting, and his young mates, finding out what was the matter, chaffed him considerably. Sometimes he got "riled" with them for this, and at others he rather enjoyed the chaffing. One day, several of them wanted him to go into a public house as usual, but he refused steadfastly, and then they told him, in a joke, they supposed that he could not afford to drink, now that he was preparing his home.

Robert colored and frowned, and turned away, piqued at their words; and then he began to think. Mrs. Sinclair's arguments the year before, almost forgotten, came back to him, and the idea even occurred to him to go to her for advice. But he was too shy to do that—as yet, at all events. When he got part way home, he looked in at a furniture shop, which did a respectable ready-money business, and consequently having no bad debts, and no booking comparatively, was able to offer the stock at a cheaper rate. This window had a great attraction of late for Robert Sandford. Chests of drawers, tables, chairs, took quite new aspects, when he imagined them to be the furniture of a nice room of which Bessie should be the happy mistress. He saw himself coming in, and finding her waiting for him with a nice little tea ready, etc.

But tonight he was more in the mood for reckoning what he could get for the four or five shillings a week he was accustomed to spend in drink, which, as often as not, grew to eight or ten if friends had to be treated, or anything extra was going on.

Chest of drawers! Yes, that one was very much to his liking, and he thought it would just suit Bessie, too. How much? Twenty-eight shillings, marked as plain as a pike-staff. Five's in twenty-eight—five, and three over. Why, that was his in a month if he went without the drink. And there was tobacco, too. Bessie would not let him smoke when he walked with her; she said it looked common and vulgar, and she wasn't going to be seen walking with a vulgar-looking young man. Robert smiled as he thought how prettily she had said it, and wondered if he could give up tobacco to please her, dear little soul.

What did it cost him? Why, not less than eighteenpence a week; because if you had a tobacco-box you must give a fellow a bit if he asked you. Why, he might get a pretty little work-table, or a little fancy chair for Bessie in a few weeks. However was it he never thought of this before? The fellows were right, a man preparing for home could not afford to drink nor smoke either.

"I'll take the pledge," said Robert Sandford to himself, "and then I can say I am a teetotaler, and they know they don't move me very easily when I've once made up my mind. And I'll go to that lady to take it; she told me she kept a pledge-book, and if ever I wished to, she would be delighted to see me; and so here goes."

But he felt a little nervous as he rang the bell, and asked for Mrs. Sinclair; he did not believe she would remember him, and she might think him "cheeky" for coming to her.

"Mrs. Sinclair in?" "Oh! yes," the servant answered, and led him to the sitting-room he had painted in the autumn; where, beside the table, writing a note, was the gentle lady he remembered so well.

She looked up as he entered, and said kindly, "Robert Sandford, I am very glad to see you; please take a chair, and come and tell me how you are getting on."

The servant left the room, and they were alone.

"Please, ma'am, I've come to sign the pledge," said Robert, coming to the point at once.

"This is a most curious and pleasant coincidence," said the lady; and she took up the note she was writing, and put it in the young man's hand. Thus it began:—

"Robert Sandford,—I think you will understand my motive in writing to you. I have felt interested in your welfare ever since the time when we had those conversations together about teetotalism; and, lately I have seen you sometimes in circumstances which led me to think it would be an especially good thing for the future happiness of yourself, and the one whom you love dearest on earth, if you would sign the pledge."

It was impossible for either Mrs. Sinclair or Robert Sandford to help laughing; and that merry laugh cleared away all difficulties. The young man found it both easy and pleasant to tell the lady all about his hopes and prospects for the future; and she in her turn counselled him affectionately and wisely. "But, you know," said she, "that what has been happily called the Addition-table of the New Testament, teaches us to 'add to our faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity.' So, you see, that to have only the one virtue, temperance, and not the other graces of God's Holy Spirit in our soul, is not to truly honor God. You are doing well so far; but you must do even better yet. You are preparing for your home on earth: are you preparing for the home that will be for eternity? Don't rest till you have answered that question!"

Robert Sandford did not speak. The words of Mrs Sinclair were true words, and he knew it. After a pauset she said, as she opened the desk before her, and brough out some pledge cards, "Is Bessie a teetotaller?"

"I never heard her say," he answered.

"Then, you had better ask her; and if she is not and will agree to sign the pledge, you can bring her here to do so. I think so sensible a young woman will be sure to be willing to sign with you."

So when it was Bessie's "evening out," her lover brought her to Mrs. Sinclair, for she was more than willing, she was delighted to begin her married life with her home free from the taint of alcohol, and the possible danger of strong drink.

The chest of drawers, and the work-table, and the low easy-chair, and many another good article found its way into the house, as the result of total abstinence and the abandonment of the pipe.

Robert and his wife are not rich, and do not expect to be, save in their love for each other, and in the dear little children God has given them, yet they have a treasure laid up in heaven, which many a millionaire on his death-bed would give all his wealth to possess; and the gentle Christian, Mrs. Sinclair, blesses God for the word in season He enabled her to speak to Robert Sandford, when he was preparing for his home.—British Temperance Leaflet.

The Sunday School Lesson.

July 6.] Third Quarter, No. 1. [1884.

TOPIC: DAVID, KING OVER ALL ISRAEL.

LESSON TEXT.—2 Samuel 5: 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—I have found David my servant, with my holy oil have I anointed him. Psalms 89: 20.

TIME.—1046 B. C.

PLACE.—Hebron and Jerusalem.

1. God's leader is not always hidden away among his brethren, but is often developed in the sight of all the people, as was David for ten years after his secret anointing.

2. There always is some one to guide the hosts to victory. A king dies, and the people shout, "The king is dead, Long live the king,"—not without reason, if so be they trust in God as the head of all governments.

3. It is a striking commentary on the emptiness of human opposition to God's plan, that Jerusalem, which boasted itself against David saying, "the blind and the lame shall be sufficient to keep them out of the city"—was known through all subsequent Jewish history as the CITY OF DAVID. The opposers of righteousness and temperance in our own government will do well to heed this teaching of history.

4. David was by his success constrained to believe that God had indeed ordained his kingship. Nevertheless it was clearly impressed upon him that it was not for his own sake, but for the prophet's sake whom God had chosen for His very own. Leaders have much to make them humble.

A SIGNIFICANT ASSEMBLY.

Last week, in the city of Bloomington, Ill., four hundred men and women were gathered together to nominate candidates for the various state officers on a Prohibition ticket, and to elect delegates to the National Convention of the Prohibition Home Protection party. These men and women were regularly constituted delegates on the basis of the vote for Prohibition candidates of two years ago, and represented a constituency of 13,000 people. They were ministers from nearly all the Protestant denominations, they were lawyers, judges, editors, farmers, housekeepers, manufacturers and commercial men. They were not and never have been politicians. That was evident from a careful observation of their methods as well as a careless glance at their general appearance. In orderly fashion the convention was organized, with a clergyman, Rev. W. H. Tibbals, as its chairman. In a gentle, fatherly fashion he presided over the novel conditions of this new idea in party politics. Governor St. John gave the assembly a concise and conclusive statement not only of his own position, but as to that of a large proportion of the convention, the "come-outers" from old parties. He was heard with intense interest, for this was his first declaration of third party principles. It was manly and consistent with his convictions. No other course is open to one who has championed for the last ten years, as he has done, the incorporation of prohibition in party politics. If a party is necessary to the enshrinement of this principle in government, and if no existing party will undertake that responsibility a new party is the inevitable outcome of the necessity.

This is Governor St. John's position and that of nearly all who were gathered at Bloomington. A few heroic souls were there who have voted a Prohibition ticket for the past twenty years, irrespective of everything save the principle, but the large majority of the delegates are men and women whose past devotion to the Republican and Democratic parties has been of the nature of a religion.

Mrs. Elizabeth Boynton Harbert, president of the Illinois equal suffrage association, was heard with glad interest in behalf of her "cause" and a letter from Miss Willard following up the suggestion of "no sex in citizenship" was heartily applauded.

Col. Jesse Harper, as the representative of another and entirely distinct idea, was not accorded the courtesy of a hearing. To some this may seem unwise, the more so, as the Greenback convention was most courteous in its reception of the W. C. T. U. memorial, and placed a quasi prohibition plank in its platform. But these earnest people would not tolerate the imputation so soon to be charged upon them if the request were granted, that they were seeking or accepting affiliation for the sake of victory without regard to principle.

There were delegates of strong leaning to the Greenback party who nevertheless felt that the issue of "The Home versus the Saloon" was the sacred charge of the convention, not to be endangered by complications.

The platform of the party was the central thought. Offices, barren of possibility, were not the object of the assembly, but were to be accepted as DeTocqueville says of life, as "a serious business, to be entered on with courage and in a spirit of self sacrifice." The enunciation of the party's principles and not its remotely possible gains, was the engrossing care of the convention. Men and women of thought and judgment were associated together in a strong committee to this end, Judge Pepper, a life long Democrat, at their head. Judge Irwin, Rev. Dr. Jutkins, Mrs. Mary E. Holmes, and others like unto them, made up the responsible group whose deliberations abundantly satisfied the convention.

The platform as constituted, includes a careful and candid setting forth of the reasons for the formation of the new party—a strong denunciation of the liquor traffic, a declaration of the belief that the police power of the government is sufficient for its overthrow, and that the government which will not exercise its power should be reconstructed, an arraignment of the several legislatures of the past seven years, for their refusal to allow the people to speak out and be heard on this question; regretful criticism of the schemes proposed by the two national candidates of the Republican party, for fastening the traffic upon the country; honest condemnation of the entire license system; endorsement of equal rights in citizenship, civil service reform, education of the young, and that to include thorough and scientific temperance instruction. The hearty applause which greeted such sentences as, "The price paid for the power to do wrong never made the wrong right," and "We believe that every adult, intelligent, law abiding citizen should have a voice and a vote," showed that the assembly in its collective capacity was following Lincoln's advice and keeping "close to the people."

Nominations were made rapidly and in the usual order of such conventions. The name of J. B. Hobbs, another "man of Maine," was received with round after round of applause. Almost equal in enthusiasm was the feeling for Rev. James Haney, a young Methodist minister of heroic blood and ancestry as well as successful reputation of his own. Mr. Hobbs received the nomination by a good majority and makes a strong candidate. He has been identified with the commercial and religious interests of Chicago for more than twenty-five years, and in the quarter century of close and consistent juxtaposition of successful business and earnest piety, there has never been stain nor blot on either. This is strong praise but it is truth. The balance of the ticket is as follows: For lieutenant governor, Dr. Perryman, of Belleville; attorney general, Hale Johnson, of Jasper county; state treasurer, Uriah Copp; auditor, A. B. Irvin; secretary of state, C. W. Enos.

After an enthusiastic vote for St. John as the coming presidential candidate, the convention adjourned much more after the fashion of the W. C. T. U. than the political assemblies, with "Praise God from whom all blessings flow" and the benediction. Cheers gave place to prayer, and gentle strife for the best men and measures sought the blessing of Him who alone can give the increase to seed sown in faith, watered with tears and sunned by a luminous love "for God and home and native land."

THE following communication is full of cheer. It will minister blessedly to the dear heart that first inspired the work for Prison Day, and gave her birth day to its floral celebration. It will put courage into the future work of the Flower Mission and strengthen the faith of all of us.

The first is from the chaplain of the Southern Illinois penitentiary, and the second from the prisoners thereof. We wish that the type could show forth the beautiful penmanship of the latter.

NO. I.

CHESTER, ILL., June 18, 1884.

EDITOR UNION SIGNAL, Chicago, Ill.:—The enclosed papers, prepared entirely by the prisoners, have been submitted to the warden, and he authorizes me to transmit them to you for publication, if you see proper to give them a place in THE UNION SIGNAL.

Very truly, T. F. HOUTS, Chaplain S. I. P.

NO. II.

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS PENITENTIARY, CHESTER, ILL., June, 1884.

EDITOR OF UNION SIGNAL,—On 9th inst., or "Prison Flower Day," we were visited by several ladies of the W. C. T. U., who distributed to each prisoner an elegant bouquet of flowers, accompanied by a nice scriptural card. It was a treat we very much enjoyed, and one long to be remembered, not only for the gift of beautiful flowers, but for the kind and cheering words with which they were presented. Many were the hearts that beat with delight as these kind women passed from cell to cell fulfilling their mission of love and sympathy. When we learn that many thousands of unfortunates in like circumstances to our own enjoyed on that day the same bountitul gift of love and remembrance, it should cause every prisoner in the land to express from the bottom of his heart thanks of gratitude to the W. C. T. U.

Prison flower day is but a symbol of the sympathy and kindness of these distributing angels of good, for scarcely a week passes without recording their visits to our hospital with flowers and hopeful words to comfort the sick. Many are the ways by which we feel and recognize the great good being done by this noble band, the W. C. T. U., and let us hope that God will bless their brave efforts to drive from our country the evil (whisky) which has caused, directly or indirectly, more than one-half the men now confined in this penitentiary to suffer the hardship of prison life.

Besides the many tokens of kind remembrance given us by the ladies of Chester, we have the pleasure of enjoying the contents of your valuable paper, The Union Signal, which comes to hand on Sunday morning, and is no doubt read with interest by many unfortunates who have been the victims of rum. Your paper is undoubtedly the best temperance advocate in the country, and I hope through its influence, the recognition of the evil of whisky may dawn upon some of our number, and before leaving the prison they will take the pledge to "drink no more."

Through the kindness of our officers we may soon be able to assist the W. C. T. U. in its work of temperance at this place. We have already organized a society to be known as the Southern Illinois Penitentiary Mutual Reform and Benefit Society, and will very soon desire and solicit correspondence with all the benevolent and prison societies of the country. The object of our society is to endeavor by good conduct as prisoners to make our prison life more pleasant and profitable; to cultivate in our midst honesty and good principles; to ask and seek help in procuring honest employment for those going out who have neither friends nor money. Although we are convicts, we hope with the necessary assistance in this undertaking to accomplish some good for our fellow men which in time may redound to the credit of our country.

Herewith I send certain resolutions unanimously adopted by the prisoners of the penitentiary. Hoping these will find publication in The Union Signal I will close with thanks of gratitude and best wishes to the W. C. T. U. Gratefully yours, Prisoner.

NO. III.

Whereas: The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has extended its field of benevolent operations to the jails and penitentiaries of the country, by contributing papers, distributing flowers, visiting the sick, etc., and

Whereas: The prisoners of the southern Illinois penitentiary have enjoyed the reading furnished, and just received another token of love and kindly remembrance from their hands. Be it therefore

Resolved, That we do hereby tender them our sincere thanks, and would by this means show our gratitude and appreciation for their efforts to cheer and help the fallen to new life and zeal; a special manifestation of which has just been given in the distributing among us of the beautiful flowers and cards by the kind ladies of Chester, Ill., and to whom we would extend our heartiest thanks, trusting that the pleasure of giving was as great as the receiving.

Resolved, That we urge upon the W. C. T. U., a continuance of their good work, until the whole land shall resound with the praise of work accomplished, and the love and sympathy of which prison flower day is but a symbol, shall be shed abroad throughout the length and breadth of this great Republic.

Adopted by the Southern Illinois Penitentiary Mutual Reform and Benefit society, June 11, 1884.

Adopted by entire body June 15, 1884, at the close of chapel service.

It was our misfortune a few weeks since to be misled by a paragraph in a supposedly reliable exchange, referring to Mr. Charrington, the gospel worker and temperance evangelist of London as still connected with the great brewing business carried on by the firm bearing his name. The strangeness of such complication was commented on very naturally, but greatly to our regret now that the facts are known to us, and we hasten to correct a false impression.

Mr. F. N. Charrington became an earnest and active Christian worker some twelve or fourteen years ago, and soon after taking this step felt the incongruity and uncongeniality of a personal, active interest in his father's business. The Christian Herald said of this period in his history:

He began to witness sights that touched his heart. He saw drunken fathers, gin-drinking mothers, ill-used children whose worst enemies were those whom God designed to be their natural protectors. There might seem to be light, warmth and cordials within, but brawls and fights spoiled the glitter; but then above all he read, "Charrington, Head, & Co.'s Entire." In addition to this, the boys and lads were continually asking him questions about the drink that were not at all likely to make his conscience more at ease, and he began to feel that he was pulling down with one hand what he was building up with the other.

The crisis came. Mr. Charrington told his father that he could have nothing more to do with the business of the brewery. This decision came so unexpectedly that it was a great blow to the family. Mr. F. N. Charrington renounced his trade, with its golden prospects, without asking what the consequences would be, and he was allowed to retire in quietness.

It must have been a comfort to him as well as justification of his conduct that his father on his death bed approved his course, and arranged his inheritance so that he should not be in any way responsible for the traffic which he disapproved. His work is in outcast London, whose "bitter cry" reached his heart long before the evangelization of its distressed masses had become the popular measure that it is today. He lives among these people, and shares their lot so far as environments can make him a partaker of it. He is frequently surrounded by a howling, angry mob as he invades the haunts of vice and sin, and has been illegally imprisoned only to preach Christ from a felon's cell. The spirit of his life carries conviction to the minds of his hearers no less than his words. The Union Signal gladly gives these facts, and trusts that in the future we may be able to so fully and accurately report his work as to entirely eradicate the erroneous impressions made heretofore.

Quarterly Meeting of the Board of Directors of Woman's Temperance Publication Association.

The regular quarterly meeting adjourned from May 7, was held at the hospitable home of Mrs. Willard, Evanston, June 6. It was one of the pleasantest meetings ever held by the board, as it showed the affairs of the association to be more prosperous than ever before. During the past quarter this paper has not only paid its own way, but has paid nearly seven hundred and fifty dollars of old indebtedness. Its subscription list is steadily increasing, and under the wise management of our business manager, Mr. Fielden, receipts from advertisements are largely increased, thus making us confident that he will fulfil his promise made to the National W. C. T. U. at Detroit, of securing $5,000 from advertisements this year. We were also greatly pleased at the testimony freely given by many advertisers as to the excellency of The Union Signal as a means of reaching the public.

The association is also doing much in the way of publishing literature. Its Union Signal tracts, including Professor Foster's admirable anti-license articles and Dr. Johnson's article on high license, have had an unexampled sale, and if we can believe the testimony coming from various quarters, have been largely instrumental in carrying no-license in many towns. The Illinois W. C. T. U. have had over six hundred dollars worth of printing done by this association, mostly in the form of leaflets which have been sown broadcast over the land.

Miss Alice Guernsey who in February was elected assistant editor, to begin work in July, has been obliged to resign this position on account of her health, very much to our regret. Miss Ruby I. Gilbert, who was elected to serve in this capacity until Miss Guernsey came, has performed her duties so admirably that she was requested to continue in this office.

In order to bring our paper into even closer connection and sympathy with the work in various states, our editor, Mrs. Willard, was instructed to attend as many state W. C. T. U. conventions in the east as practicable and Mr. Fielden to attend those in the west, also to attend the National Prohibition Convention at Pittsburgh.

Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin having resigned as a director of this board, Mrs. Persis H. McGrew, of West Virginia, was elected to fill the vacancy thus occasioned.

With hearts full of gratitude to God for the light which is breaking on our way, and to our editor who has been an instrument in His hand for accomplishing much of the good over which we rejoice, the board adjourned.

This is the sort of treatment a sentinel gets when she doesn't watch:

Latrobe, Pa., June 21.

Dear O. D.—"Mrs. Mamie Munnell!" How could you! Wasn't she named "Mary?" I once saw a letter addressed to "Miss Fanny E. Willard." Ugh! I've had gray hair ever since. You won't be "wicious" again will you? One who loves you.

No, "O. W. L. Y.," she wasn't christened Mary, but I think it was Nancy—for by some twist of affection she writes herself "Nannie"—and by some twist of the types she was printed M———no, I'll not write it—out of respect to gray hairs.

Reassuring tidings come to me from the beloved Miss Duty. She is better, though improving slowly. A year of European travel is being planned for her so soon as she is able to undertake a voyage.

Miss Annie Edwards made such a success of her itineracy in Wisconsin that she is invited to return as soon as may be and also to go to Minnesota.

* * *

Mrs. President Bascom has yielded to the long continued entreaty of her co-workers in Wisconsin, and will serve the state W. C. T. U. as its president till the annual meeting. If it is not positive cruelty, I hope that annual meeting will take high ground and maintain the nine points of possession.

I had the great pleasure of seeing Governor St. John's beautiful "decoration" last week, the badge of gold and gems given him by the W. C. T. U. of Kansas. It is indeed a thing of beauty, and no one can wonder that the good governor prizes it above most earthly possessions.

That was a pleasant illustration of womanly independence when Mrs. Kepley rose in the Bloomington convention last week, to second the nomination of Mr. Hobbs, directly after her husband's endorsement of Rev. Mr. Haney. Judge Kepley looked as pleased as anybody, and had an air of being about to say "Well, I'd a little rather than not that she should show that I don't rule her convictions."

The new Illinois W. C. T. U. leaflets Nos. 10 and 11 are just out. One entitled "Temperance in Public Schools—What? How? When?" by Mary Allen West, and the other "Juvenile Work" by Mrs. L. H. Gwin. Both are full of practical suggestion. Both are manuals of their respective departments.

This makes over 100,000 pages of temperance literature published since November last, by the Illinois W. C. T. U., under the superintendency of Miss Helen L. Hood—who believes that people, and W. C. T. U. people at that, "hear with their eyes"—and so presses truth right under their spectacles.

Miss Kimball's Sunday school circular which did such fine work at Louisville is good ammunition for everybody everywhere, and I know she will be glad to furnish it to faithful workers extensively.

The governor of Illinois reviewed the First Regiment last Sunday instead of going to church. I cannot help thinking that the several hundred young men who compose this regiment will not get any uplift in morals or religion from such a performance of such a governor.

One thing I know, Governor Hobbs will never so disgrace his Christian profession, the Christian community nor the state. On Duty.

VERMONT.

North Bennington.—Thinking a brief report of our last temperance entertainment might be of interest to some of your readers, and possibly suggestive to some of the workers, I send the following. It was under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. and the Y. W. C. T. U.

The first part of the evening, which was given to literary exercises, opened by the Band of Hope (which numbers over seventy) marching in with banner and song. Scripture reading and prayer followed. There were several fine recitations by the children. One of the misses recited "A tribute to Mrs. Hayes," the "Hayes Memorial" adorning the platform. The children sang "Tremble, King Alcohol, we shall grew up." Some of our young people sang "The Saloon Keeper's Lament," after which three prize essays on temperance were read by pupils from our graded school, our unions having offered prizes of $3, $2, and $1 for the best essays. These exercises were followed by a "fan sale," one of our young ladies singing, "Who'll buy my temperance fans, etc." adapted from "Who'll buy my roses."

Our ladies had prepared about one hundred fans, covering them with plush, velvet, satin, cretonne, and beautifully decorating them with painting and embroidery, placing temperance mottoes upon them, in a variety of ways; some were painted, upon others were placed some of the beautiful cards sent out by Miss Colman bearing such mottoes as,

These two lips of mine
Shall never taste of wine.

C is for cider so simple at first,
Soon it will bring you the drunkard's curse.

There were also many scripture texts, "Wine is a mocker," "Look not thou upon the wine." Many were marked with the initials of our unions and tied with white ribbon. Palm leaf fans were made into slipper-cases. The children were not forgotten, and their appreciation of "temperance fans" was testified by the eagerness with which they supplied themselves with them. The sale was from a beautiful booth at one side of the hall, brilliantly lighted with Japanese lanterns. The fans were sold for from five cents to two dollars each. The proceeds of the evening were about $36.

The hall was crowded and we think the impression made was highly favorable to the cause of temperance. We received our inspiration for this work from a "Fan Circular," sent out by the officers of our state union, and though the Swanton Y. W. C. T. U. made the first "temperance fan," our president, Mrs. E. G. Greene, writes me that ours is the first "fan sale" in the state.

Our general work is moving on about as usual. God has given us some blessed victories in the past, for which we praise His name. We are still working and praying and expect greater victories in the future because our trust is in the living God.

Our Y. W. C. T. U., organized last September by our dear Miss Gordon, is doing good work for temperance.

Mrs. L. C. Partridge.

CALIFORNIA.

Alameda.—We have as yet no Cold Water Army, but a flourishing Band of Hope conducted by Mrs. Gray, a lady of rare spirit and efficacy.

One union has already secured temperance books and papers in the Sabbath schools of the town, and recently I wrote to The Union Signal for the excellent temperance leaves published by the W. C. T. U., for the four Sabbath schools of Alameda.

We have visited our school board, and hope to introduce temperance text books and scientific temperance instruction when the schools commence after the vacation. Have had union temperance prayer meetings in the different churches conducted by the pastors.

The W. C. T. U. gave prizes in the schools for the best essays on the "twin evils," tobacco and intemperance, with delightful results. We sent for Frances Power Cobb's book on "Duties of Women," and will read it at our monthly meetings.

There are many copies of The Union Signal taken (several clubs have been sent, and others will be soon). We welcome it in our homes, and wish it an earnest, loving "God speed" on its mission of mercy.

Mrs. Mary E. Griswold, Sec.

KANSAS.

Leavenworth.—People from other states tell us that Leavenworth's reputation as a "city of saloons" has gone abroad over the land, and that her name is trailed in triumph by the anti-prohibitionists, and that only disorder and defiance of the law prevail. There is too much truth in all this to rouse anything but humility and shamefacedness in the heart of a law-abiding citizen. Still, where so much lawlessness abounds there the W. C. T. U. also flourishes. True, we are a mere handful in this city of thousands, but we are at work. Not so much on the aggressive perhaps, as in preparing and organizing our forces. While we do not boldly enter the camp of the enemy, we do some skirmishing among the pickets. We do it in this way: By scattering tracts among the families of drunkards and even in the saloons; by visiting the jails and prisons and talking with the inmates on the subject of temperance; by circulating temperance literature; by maintaining a public reading room in opposition to the saloon; and in these ways endeavor to force an entrance into their strongholds. We cannot go farther than this at present. We realize that we are in the enemy's country, and every foothold gained must be gained by slow degrees. That we are gaining none can doubt, even though more than one-half of the saloons of Kansas are in this fair city. Driven from other places they pour in here, set up their abomination, and never a protest is made.

"How long, O Lord! How long?"

But the day is breaking. We see it in the churches and in the press. We see it in the little Band of Hope organized and flourishing here. We see it in the gospel temperance meeting, where men with haggard faces and trembling footsteps come eagerly forward to sign the pledge. We see it in that wonderful cloud that has hung over us so long, called public sentiment. We see it in the devices and schemes of the enemy. Yes, the day is breaking!

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Claremont.—The ladies of the Claremont union observed for the first time the call of Miss Casseday to observe flower mission day. Our numbers are small, yet there were ten who braved the threatened, and genuine rain to visit our county almshouse. Preparations were made in the morning, when the sun was shining, and there was every prospect of a pleasant afternoon, and our party was to number twenty or more. Contributions of fruit and confectionery were most abundant. Bouquets (sixty in number), made from the choicest cuttings from conservatory and gardens in our village, with reading for adults and children, rendered our mission of no insignificant import. The welcome by matron and inmates, was most cheering to us. Our president, Mrs. Partridge, had arranged a most appropriate order of exercises which were heartily joined in by the family. Singing of familiar hymns, interspersed with reading of scripture texts, prayer and exhortation was the first part. Distribution of the bouquets, to each of which was tied one of Miss Casseday's text cards, and read as presented. Visiting of the sick and insane, who were detained in their rooms, giving of fruit, confectionery and jellies for their individual comfort followed.

We noticed the absence of little girls, and were so glad to learn that the efforts of this "union" had prevailed, and they had been taken to the Orphan's Home at Franklin, where Mrs. Mack, (its matron) has wonderful success in fitting them for good and permanent homes. After a new feature of music in Miss Hanbirch's selection of gay and happy songs, with Miss Partridge's guitar accompaniments and solos, singing by request of one of the inmates, "Nearer My God to Thee," we bade them all good bye, amid the loud and impressive responses of "God bless you," "Come again," and "Thanks for your coming." We are sure "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

The jail in Newport was visited by appointment, and flowers with the text card given.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Dayton.—The W. C. T. U. of Dayton, held its first annual meeting on the 22nd of May 1884. The officers elected for the coming year are, president, Mrs. L. S. Peachy; corresponding secretary, Miss Eliza R. Hatch; treasurer, Mrs. Emma L. Wheeler. In the evening the union enjoyed the good cheer of a most stirring and encouraging address from Rev. J. C. Van Patten, of Walla Walla, who heartily approves of woman's enlarging her sphere of usefulness as the expanding gospel enlarges her heart. We read on that occasion Miss Willard's muezzin call for the 27th, which was duly observed by the union, the pastors of the city co-operating. The consciousness that scores of thousands of sisters all over this broad land were praying at the same hour for the same objects and for us, gave unction to those who spoke and touched the lips of those who prayed as with a live coal from off the altar, making the place whereon we stood seem to us as hallowed ground.

It was a scene long to be remembered by the few who availed themselves of its priceless privilege. One of our pastors complied with the request to preach on God in government on the preceding Sabbath, and two more will on the following Lord's day.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Mercer County.—We are busy circulating the compulsory temperance education petition. Letters officially signed have been sent to the nominees for assembly, asking their position on the temperance question. At this date only one reply has been received, and that from Dr. Van Eman, one of the Democratic candidates, who writes a very courteous letter, promising to do all in his power to help us in the legislature if elected.

Greenville union, Mrs. Waugh president, has recently had Mrs. Hunt, who gave "The Key to the Situation," to an appreciative audience in the opera house. The most conservative paper in the town spoke favorably of her effort the next morning.

Nearly all our unions observed the day of prayer.

Salem union has been trying to do some Sunday school temperance work. A committee of ladies presented the sample package of Sunday school lesson leaves to the superintendents of the different schools, asking that temperance lessons be used quarterly, the union to furnish the leaves. The M. E. superintendent has the matter under consideration. The superintendent of the Baptist Sunday school brought the subject before the school, a motion in favor of the lesson leaves was made by the secretary, promptly seconded by the assistant superintendent and heartily and unanimously voted on by the school.

This union had a lecture last month on "Tobacco," by Rev. Higbee, of Mecca, Ohio. The lecture was highly spoken of, and was listened to by a full house. At the close a committee of young ladies circulated Dr. P. S. Henson's tract, "What I Know about Tobacco."

The county W. C. T. U. press committee are doing splendid work.

Our county executive committee met Tuesday, June 17, at Mercer to lay plans for the campaign. The nominating convention of the Prohibition party was held the same day at the court house. Our Prohibition brethren are awake, alive and at work.

CANADA.

The president of the Ontario W. C. T. U. gives the following encouraging information in a letter to the press:

The work of the Ontario W. C. T. U. is still making progress, seven unions having been added to the list during the last few weeks.

The county superintendents are arranging with the unions in each county to offer prizes for the best essays on "The Evils of Alcohol." These prizes will be given at the time the county fairs are held throughout the province, of course with the permission of the county fair authorities. Several unions have on hand quite a large sum of money to be given in prizes in their own towns and cities for best essays on the subject mentioned. In Eglington, at the request of the union recently formed there, the public school teachers have willingly consented to give the children instruction in "Temperance and Hygiene" once a week.

The Hon. Minister of Education will feel that he is being beseiged by the W. C. T. U. ladies, for, at nearly every point in his tour a deputation has waited on him in reference to this question of scientific temperance instruction in our public schools. At Brookville, the delegation consisted of ladies from Brockville, Prescott and Gananoque unions. It is gratifying to know from the Hon. Minister, that this subject will be placed on the school curriculum for the fall term, not as an optional study, but as part of the ordinary school work. It will also be necessary for students in normal and model schools to pass an examination on this subject before receiving their certificates.

Some of the teachers' associations meeting this month are to be favored with an address from Mrs. Hunt, of Boston.

In Ottawa the coffee house movement is meeting with great success. Several prominent temperance gentlemen of means having taken hold of it with a will, a central location has been secured, and it is confidently expected that this venture will be of great benefit to the city, as well as a paying investment to the shareholders.

At the late meeting of the synod of Montreal and Ottawa, a communication from the Ontario W. C. T. U., was received with applause, and a resolution passed expressing hearty recognition and appreciation of the good work in which this society is engaged. A full report was presented by the temperance committee appointed by the synod. Among many recommendations was the following: "That we encourage the active co-operation of women in the prohibition campaign," and "our session recommends securing for women a vote in this matter, as in matters connected with the public schools of Ontario." Also, "elect members of parliament who are already staunch prohibitionists, and who do not need to be told their duty and educated to it, but who, by legislation and otherwise, will educate the masses, make prohibition a principal test of a man's qualifications as legislator," etc.

NEW JERSEY.

GLEANINGS BY R. P. PENFIELD.

Dunellon.—A temperance meeting held in the Presbyterian church in this place, was addressed by Chauncy Shaffer and Mrs. J. T. Ellis, April 29. The following morning a W. C. T. Union was organized of faithful, earnest hearts, ready and glad to take hold with God.

Westfield.—The following afternoon Mrs. J. T. Ellis came to Westfield and there met a large company of ladies in the parlors of the M. E. church to form a W. C. T. U. Fifty-two ladies were enrolled and are now actively engaged in the good work.

Plainfield.—Mr. Hoyle, of Manchester, Eng., visited Plainfield and at a reception at the residence of Aaron Powell, gave an exceedingly interesting account of the work of the British Temperance Alliance Association, also the manner in which coffee houses were conducted and sustained in the old world. All persons present were greatly edified and encouraged. Many prominent citizens were present with a large delegation from the W. C. T. Union. Responses were made by Rev. Dr. Hurlburt, Ex-Mayor Harper and Mr. Leonard of the Central Times, also by a member of the W. C. T. U. We cannot do justice to Mr. Hoyle's address in so brief a not ice, but his visit to us has been a benediction.

RAHWAY.—The temperance revival is at fever heat, extra meetings were held before the arrival of Mabee and English. Their stong and cheering words with sweetest song, drew many a hard drinker into the temperance fold. Many have signed the pledge and wear the typical ribbon of red. The reform club now numbers four hundred and twenty-five and still they come. A reading room over the post office has been opened.

NEWARK.—We are having quite a revival here ever since we opened our new hall. At our all day prayer meeting on the 27th ult., we had a special outpouring of the Spirit and souls were converted. There were representatives present from Montclair, Bloomfield, Hoboken, Jersey City, Bellville, Orange, Elizabeth, Rahway, New York and Brooklyn. Twelve have been converted since we entered this new hall. Among them are ten heads of families, one a mother, two girls, members of our young people's union.

NEW BEDFORD.—A very interesting meeting was held in the Baptist church of this village, conducted by a deputation from Plainfield Reform Club. Quite a number signed the pledge and now wear the red ribbon. One of the converts said: "I used to buy a quart of whisky and a gallon of beer of a Saturday night to put me through till Monday, but since I have signed the pledge and saved me money I have bought a cow and now we have the milk for ourselves and the children." It is expected that weekly meetings will be held in this same place. We sent several parcels of tracts on cider and some Gazettes to the meeting, and they were scattered through the pews.

DOVER.—Will give one hundred solid votes for prohibition. A Prohibition League was organized and they will "hold the fort." Mrs. Downs, by invitation, was at the W. C. T. U. annual meeting.

WILLIAMSTOWN.—The pastor of the M. E. church preached on a recent Sunday morning a temperance sermon with blackboard and other methods of illustrating the sin and evils of intemperance.

SWEDESBOROUGH.—A W.C.T.U. formed at this place. Mrs. Downs met them by appointment on Thursday, May 22. Thirty-one members.

HANOVER.—There is no public place for the sale of intoxicants in this community. There is no squalor, no appearance of extreme poverty, and no rowdyism. The church, blessed with a temperance pastor, Rev. Mr. Ferguson, has been educated into sound temperance doctrines. The morning sermon recently was an appeal to the church for Christ's sake to put forth its power through its citizenship, and save the people who are perishing through rum. And the people have a mind to work.

WHIPPANG.—Still retains its old Indian name. What it means no one knows. The Old Presbyterian church controls the most of the religious sentiment of the people at the present time. Its pastor, Rev. Mr. Bardwell, is a fearless, outspoken advocate of the temperance cause, and does not hesitate to go into the courts with his opposition. The tavern does its work of death while the church is doing her work of prevention and cure.

FLORENCE.—At a meeting of the officers of the Baptist church on Monday evening, six young men appeared, to sign the pledge. They came voluntarily, having agreed among themselves to take this step. Mrs. Hammer, of Newark, addressed the temperance school workers at a meeting of the Alliance June 5.

SALEM.—W. C. T. U., a young organization, was visited by Mrs. Downs in May; has had a temperance prayer meeting for years. Mrs. Patterson is the young and energetic president. A reading room is in operation.

MONMOUTH COUNTY.—Not long since a hotel long established, kept by James H. Dangler, was given up, and a prayer meeting was held in the bar room. The hotel keeper, his wife, and four of their children have been converted and joined the church. Mr. Dangler is a man of great respectability and influence in the community. There is great rejoicing among the people.

Another case is that of a man having license to sell lager beer. He was sick and sent for a friend to pray with him. He was told that prayer could do him no good so long as he sold lager beer to his neighbors. He promised, as did his wife, that they would give up the business. On Saturday evening, May 10, a prayer meeting was held in the bar room of this saloon. We bless God for the victory. Meetings are being held in Long Branch and other places in the county. We are moving in the direction of organizing a county alliance.

RED BANK.—Has had a complete victory for temperance. Temperance sermons were preached for two successive Sundays in the various churches. The election took place on Monday afternoon from one to four o'clock. An omnibus, with a large sign on the side, reading, "Vote for Temperance," drawn by horses arrayed in sleigh bells, gathered up the voters and returned them to their work. A very large vote was polled, and the temperance men were elected by an average majority of seventy-five.

NEW YORK.

The New York state W. C. T. U. will hold a three days' meeting at Round Lake, N. Y., July 4, 5 and 6. Beside the officers Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, Mrs. Pearson, of England, Mrs. Mary E. Hartt, and other prominent state and national workers will be in attendance. Extensive preparations are being made by the Round Lake Association for the coming of the W. C. T. U., and the meeting promises to be one of great power. The union will also have a day at Silver Lake, N. Y., August 15. MARY T. BURT.

COLUMBIA COUNTY CONVENTION.

A convention was held at Chatham, June 10 and 11 for the purpose of organizing a county W. C. T. U. On March 5, 1884, when the organizer for Columbia county began her work in the county, there was no society of the kind there, and the people had very little knowledge of the work of the W. C. T. U. Since that time three unions have been formed, and such an insight into the work attained, and favorable sentiment secured, that a strong, well officered, county organization is the result. Representatives were elected in eight towns to look after the interest of the work in their own localities, and open the way for the organizer. Of these, three made application then and there for the organizer.

Mrs. M. T. Burt and Miss Emily Underhill, state superintendent of young woman's work, were present and rendered very valuable assistance in convention. Miss Underhill addressed the children in the afternoon, and Mrs. Burt and Miss Underhill were the speakers at the mass meeting in the evening. Mrs. M. G. Underhill, and Mrs. M. E. Bennett, of the Poughkeepsie union, were also present, as efficient helpers; the former speaking from the subject, "How shall we educate public sentiment," and the latter made the text, "O woman, great is thy faith," the foundation of her remarks. All of these efforts were listened to with marked attention, and were suited to the occasion.

While Mrs. Burt was giving the charge to the new society, and during the consecration meeting which she also conducted, men and women all through the audience wept like children, because the Holy Spirit's power had touched their hearts. The women of the Chatham union were untiring in their efforts to entertain the convention and advance the interests of the cause.

The officers of the Columbia county W. C. T. U. are: president, Mrs. Geo. T. Powell, of Ghent; secretary, Mrs. R. J. Seymour, Chatham; treasurer, Mrs. J. W. Jones, Chatham. One man expressed himself as being converted to the temperance cause at this meeting, and we trust many others were.

R. A. THURSTON, Organizer for Columbia Co.

MISSOURI.

THIRD DISTRICT CONVENTION.

The W. C. T. U. of the third district of Missouri, convened at Cameron, May 27 and 28. Several unions sent delegates, who gave cheering reports of the work. Mrs. Clara Hoffman presided, confirming old friends in their opinion of her, and making many new ones. The hours devoted to prayer and praise were blessed in their influence. Vigorous, helpful discussions, and bright, practical papers by different members, were marked features of the convention. Dr. A. M. Collins almost dazzled us by his presentation of the "Mission of the W. C. T. U." Every union in Missouri ought to secure this brilliant and profound orator for a series of lectures on prohibition before the fall elections.

The first evening was devoted to the addresses of welcome, acceptably given by Dr. Z. E. Watkins and Capt. Kimball, and a remarkable address by Dr. T. E. Potter, mayor of Cameron, on "The Relation between Spirit Drinking, Insanity and Crime." It was the same given by him the preceding week at the Missouri State Medical Association held in Sedalia. I hear it is to be printed in pamphlet form. If so every union in the land should secure as many copies as possible for free distribution. The last evening Mrs. Hoffman made a thrilling and powerful plea for prohibition.

The organization of the district was completed the last afternoon, and the election gave us for president, Mrs. Dr. Watkins, of Cameron; for secretary, Mrs. John McMichael, of Plattsburg; and for treasurer, Mrs. Mary Brown, of Gallatin, all known as ladies of ability and earnestness in reform work.

These district conventions are potent in securing action, united effort in the different unions represented, and in bringing those who have occupied neutral ground into the ranks of temperance workers.

JULIET H. SMITH.

LAMAR.—Our W. C. T. U. held its first anniversary meeting on the evening of June 12, 1884, before a large and apparently deeply interested audience. Exercises were opened with the singing of that good, glad old song, "Joy to the world the Lord is come," followed by scripture reading and prayer. Then came a few stirring remarks from Mrs. McQuaid, president of the W. C. T. U., again placing before the people the great aim and object of our work, giving a short synopsis of what had been accomplished during the past year, with an earnest call for new workers. Different officers and departments then submitted their reports. The secretary reported a membership of fifty-two; superintendent of literature reported having circulated 200 UNION SIGNALS, 7,000 leaflets; having on hand a small circulating library of cheap temperance books. Treasurer's report showed that $250.00 had, during the year been generously donated to the W. C. T. U. by the citizens of Lamar, $225.00 of which had been expended in local work, and with all accounts balanced a small amount still in treasury. Reports were also submitted by superintendents of hygiene, press work and visiting committee, all showing that though small in numbers, we at least have the spirit of "going forward" in our great and grand work. We then had some very encouraging remarks from a few of our leading citizens. A call by the president for new members was responded to by the addition of ten names to our roll. MRS. J. G. PORTER, Cor. Sec.

STATE NOTES.

Mrs. Belle Downey, president of the fourth district, has been organizing in Atchison county. She formed unions at Rockport, Tarkio City, Westboro, Fairfax and Watson. Mrs. Laura C. Cochran has organized a Young Woman's Union in Mound City. They are working to maintain a public reading room.

The thirteenth congressional district now boasts of eighteen unions in its twelve counties, against four, twelve months since.

Verona, has a large Band of Hope, under the care of Mrs. Dr. Gregg.

The Young Woman's Union of Nevada supports a reading room.

ILLINOIS.

DU PAGE COUNTY CONVENTION.

The fourth quarterly convention of Du Page county was held June 4 in Downer's Grove, the president, Mrs. Stratton, of Wheaton, presiding.

After devotional exercises came welcoming words by Mrs. Ripley, and response by our Mrs. Hagans, district president.

The sessions, three in number, were full of interest. Reports from Naperville, Prospect Park, Elmhurst, Wheaton, and Downer's Grove, all encouraging. In Wheaton, Band of Hope and Y. W. C. T. U. both flourishing finely. Mrs. Lumry, who gave report from Wheaton, also said over 2,000 German tracts had been distributed in the county; Mrs. L. paid a handsome tribute to THE UNION SIGNAL.

A brief paper on "Temperance Instruction in our public schools," read by Miss Jessie Janes, was very cordially received. Mrs. Stratton suggested that this matter be brought before the county institute this season, and a committee was appointed to make the necessary arrangements.

The work in Naperville, reported by Mrs. Kletzinig, was very promising.

Mrs Hagans, a grand collector, by the way, made a rousing little speech toward the close of the afternoon session, and raised $25 in a few minutes, to be applied on the county's pledge of $60 for state work. Had she made the appeal earlier, a larger sum would have resulted; an approaching storm and the lateness of the hour had sent many away.

A generous collation was served at noon in the church parlors; all united in assuring Mrs. Naramour, committee on courtesies, that the W. C. T. U. was a peerless hostess.

In the afternoon Madame Calkins, of Indiana, was introduced to the convention and spoke eloquently of the need of earnest and continuous work; stated that when in 1838 invitations to a temperance meeting were issued, people were astonished; every one drank more or less liquor. Their preacher always wrote and preached his sermons on brandy, but later, when trying to ascertain the reason there were no conversions under his preaching, decided to trust to the Spirit of the Lord instead of the spirit of alcohol, when his labors showed better results. Madame C., who has worked fifty-five years in the temperance cause, prophesied quick fruitage, now, from the grand work of our women. As the dear old mother resumed her seat many a silent blessing followed her.

Mrs. Rounds delivered a fine address in the evening. Unfortunately the continued rain storm kept many away who were at a distance from the church.

I cannot close without a word of the beautiful flower mission of which Mrs. Marks spoke at some length; the following Monday being set apart for this work among the sick,—and the sin-sick!

Several ladies recalled long forgotten experiences of the sweet gospel carried to the prison cells, through the ministrations of the old-time flower missions, which consisted of a single member each,—missionary work which, no doubt, led to the organized work of the present day. Mrs. O. C. Gibbs told a story connected with her individual flower mission years ago, that I may be allowed to repeat, some day, perhaps, in THE UNION SIGNAL.

MARY DYE, Sec. pro tem.

CHICAGO.—The South Side W. C. T. U. (formerly known as the 22nd Street Union) held an extremely interesting session at its regular monthly meeting June 3.

Our beloved sister, Mrs. Anna Smith, made us glad once more with her presence, and with Mrs. Kelley returned from her California trip, and Mrs. Dr. Smith removed from Englewood into our midst, we are feeling quite rich again. Miss Helen Clark, the missionary, reported ninety-five visits for the month, and gave some very interesting accounts of the Tuesday evening gospel temperance meeting at 2809 State street. Thirty were reported in attendance at the mothers' meetings, which for the month have been in charge of Mrs. J. M. Latimer. These meetings are held once a fortnight, alternating between State street and Portland Ave., and it is believed have been productive of great good. After a lunch is served, and "the cup that cheers but not inebriates" has worn away the diffidence of the overworked and often discouraged mothers, they are led to speak of the trials of the home life, and gladly listen to words of instruction and encouragement.

The night school on State street, which has been under the tutelage of Miss Clark and Miss Hatch, closed during the month with a pleasant entertainment, consisting of music and reading. This school has been one of the most hopeful branches of the winter's work. Thirty boys and girls, who have had no other means of instruction, have been taught two evenings each week, in a pleasant room, lessons to be remembered for a lifetime. It is proposed to call them together one evening for temperance instruction exclusively. The Band of Hope on State street has been discontinued for the season, but the one on Portland avenue is favorably reported.

At the May meeting the union became responsible for the support of a German kindergarten teacher at Bridgeport, and at this meeting we had the pleasure of listening to the first month's report of the teacher, Miss Johanna Pethka. This young lady is a devoted Christian, lately from Berlin, with her heart full of love for her people. We bespeak for this new and much needed kindergarten the encouragement of all our friends. The school is located at the corner of James and Ullman streets. Visit there if you can and give the teacher an assurance of your sympathy in the shape of something to adorn the new room. An entertainment is to be given at Trinity M. E. church Friday evening, June 20, to aid in carrying on this work.

PRISON DAY AT JOLIET.

Sunday morning previous to prison day a goodly number from the Joliet union and several that were here from other towns, attended service at the prison chapel. About nine hundred prisoners were present. After reading Miss Casseday's selections of psalms, the warden read the little paper which had been prepared explanatory of the Flower Mission, and told them of our plan for coming to them the next day with flowers. A vigorous clapping of hands followed, and many eyes grew suddenly light and moist.

After the close of the chapel service we went to the woman's department, where we had an interesting meeting conducted by the W. C. T. U.

Monday morning flowers came to us from ladies in Ottawa. A delegation came up from the Elwood union with baskets full, and the Lockport and Plainfield unions were well represented. We hoped to benefit the prisoners, but I think all who participated in the work felt as if they had received a blessing. Women who have not before assisted us in our temperance work gave flowers liberally; old people and children brought them. One face I remember particularly; for a moment it was framed in the doorway, then the woman drew back timidly, and with one hand reached out her flowers, and with the other gathered her faded shawl about her. The face was weary and sad, and under the worn garments I doubt not the mother heart was aching for some one gone astray. One lady florist in Joliet sent sixty bouquets, and a lovely one to the matron.

We tied the knots of white ribbon to which the texts were attached, hoping that He who holds even the birds in his tender care would direct them, and that "the word" and bloom might go together, scattering seeds from which flowers of the spirit will bud and blossom.

It was a sight that gladdened our eyes when the flowers were all arranged in baskets, and there were enough to give to fourteen hundred and eighty a bit of color and perfume, and a touch of "something white," as an emblem of our great sisterhood. Here and there were sprinklings of clover and sweet brier, wrought in with the thought that perhaps to some one they would bring up the memory of home and mother, and with the memory perhaps might come the aspiration towards a better life. L. M. M.

AMBOY.—The Amboy W. C. T. U. held their annual meeting June 3. Officers elected: Mrs. C. P. Miller, president; Mrs. M. E. Benedict, corresponding secretary; Mrs. A. Browne, treasurer.

In connection with this meeting the Lee county W. C. T. U. met in convention, presided over by our district president, Mrs. G. P. Mingle. Delegates were present from most of the unions in the county. Mrs. R. E. Shaw, of Lee Center, was elected county president. Encouraging reports were given from the several unions, two original papers were read and one selection.

Among the visitors were Mrs. Huff and Mrs. Chaplain, of Sterling, and Mrs. J. Benedict, of Princeton. Rev. Mr. Fuller, Baptist minister of Amboy, addressed the convention Tuesday evening, and Miss West, our state president, Wednesday evening. We adjourned feeling benefited and encouraged.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—Mrs. Rounds is at DeKalb from the 14th to the 19th of this month, and from there goes to Reddick. Send to headquarters for terms and dates.

—Bunker Hill union, organized in March and now numbering but ten members, has just had a week's work from Capt. Linscott. Good meetings and deep interest are reported. A Band of Hope has been doing good work for more than four years.

—The next state convention will be held in Peoria, October 7, 8, 9 and 10. Miss F. E. Willard will speak on the evening of the 7th; the annual address of the president, Miss West, will be given on the 8th, Mrs. J. E. Foster delivering a public address on the 9th.

—A temperance camp meeting under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. of the seventh district will be held at Franklin Grove the 9th and 10th of August. Miss F. E. Willard, Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, Mrs. M. B. Willard, Miss M. A. West and other workers are expected to be present.

—Over $500 have been spent in printing our "Workers' Leaflets," $317 for state reports, and $40 for Miss West's reports. Eighty-nine thousand tracts have been printed, and fifteen thousand are now in the printers' hands, to be ready this week. Large orders have been received from Ohio, Missouri, California and other states for these "Workers' Leaflets." To any Illinois unions or workers they are sent for 15 cents per 100, mailing cost, to outside states $1.00 per 100.

The state central committee of the Prohibition Home Protection party is constituted by districts as follows: 1, George C. Christian; 2, T. B. Hilton; 3, C. J. Haven; 4, A. J. ## OTHER CUTTINGS.

LUCY H. WASHINGTON.

First a word of the Monroe county (N. Y.) convention, which was one of the most enjoyable I ever attended. Why? Because the county is well organized, the attendance was so large, the reports so good, and the entertainment so bountiful. Notwithstanding the busy season many of the husbands, brothers and sons of the union were present during the entire sessions of two days. And this in Henrietta, where, more than a quarter of a century ago I had listened, when a mere school girl, for the first time to a woman in the pulpit. Public sentiment, at that time, did not allow Rev. Antoinette L. Brown to preach in her native place on Lord's day, but did allow her to occupy the pulpit on Thanksgiving day, when I heard her. Now, an express train stopped, by special order, to accommodate perhaps fifty women, who came to "occupy" and conduct a W. C. T. U. convention. This talismanic combination of initials was unknown when Antoinette L. Brown did her part so courageously in moulding—or, should I say, creating—public sentiment, and preparing the way for our gigantic work.

Monroe county has twenty-three unions, with only one town unorganized, that town having efficient Good Templar orders.

My next work was in our old home, of Pittsburgh and Allegheny, Pa., where June 8th was spent. Here Mrs. Swift, the state president, seems overwhelmed with the work which is growing so rapidly in her state. Only three conventions were on her program for the coming week.

June 12th was spent in Bridgton, N. J., where our daughter Mattie was one of the sixteen graduated from South Jersey Institute. She presented "A Plea for a Creed." If creeds are essential to activity, and must vary with advanced experience, and increased light, who can even faintly portray the work that may come to the daughters who are being fitted for the conflicts of life today.

And now a word of Allentown: Last evening occurred the third anniversary of the union organized by Mrs. Wittenmeyer. The secretary's report told of faithful work: Sixty members on the roll; temperance school of 200, averaging 130 scholars; 39,667 pages of literature distributed; all members of school boards, as well as all teachers in the county, supplied with enlightening tracts on compulsory education, etc.

There are but two unions in the county. They need a German to canvass and organize, as the people are largely German speaking. Mrs. Yeager, who has led in the work, is one of our most energetic workers, and that is saying much.

MRS. J. R. NICHOL'S APPOINTMENTS.

SOMERSET COUNTY PENNSYLVANIA.

June 21, Stoystown; June 22, children's meeting 3 p. m., Disciples church, union meeting 8 p. m., Lutheren church: June 23, Freidens; June 24, Centreville; June 25 and 26, county convention, Myersdale.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

A Y. W. C. T. U. of twenty members at Batavia, is a recent acquisition of the New York union. Miss Julia Smith is the corresponding secretary.

MR. C. J. HOLT recently held a series of gospel temperance meetings under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. of Butler, Mo., with marked success.

MRS. HOBART, president of the Minnesota W. C. T. U., addressed the Wasioja graduates (all of whom were young ladies) on the 11th, especially on Woman's Temperance Mission.

THROUGH the kindness of Prof. Slade, of Almira College, the Greenville (Ill.) union served refreshments at the college the evening of the art reception, from which we realized $31, which is to be used for state and district work.

THE W. C. T. U. of Batavia, N. Y., furnished refreshments to the members of Upton Post on Memorial Day; also to the firemen, members of the order of A. O. U. W. and of the Band. About two hundred and fifty guests were served.

OF the sixty-two members of the union at Cyrus, Pope county, Minn., eighteen are Americans and forty-four Scandinavians. The president and recording secretary are of the former, the corresponding secretary and treasurer of the latter nationality.

THE W. C. T. U. of Meadville, Pa., improved the opportunity Decoration day afforded them, by presenting the soldiers and college cadets with bouquets, to which were attached the leaflets "Shall we license the dram shop?" and "Work for 1884."

A BAND of Hope picnic group marching through the main street of Knobnoster, Mo., not long since, with banners flying, the children singing "Away the bowl", was a noteworthy incident, and one well calculated to arrest thought and arouse interest.

CARTHAGE (Mo,) W. C. T. U. recently held a moonlight festival in the interest of the district W. C. T. U. which netted twenty dollars. As a matter of course so wide awake a union will send a goodly delegation to the state convention at Sedalia.

FROM Marseilles, Ill., comes the following good word: "The first Monday in May God gave us such a victory as we have never had. Not one license vote was cast. Only one ticket was placed in the field. The whisky element seemed hopeless of success and so made no effort."

THE W. C. T. U. of Bloomington, Ind., has ordered a $30 library for the Indiana University, nine dollars of the amount being contributed by the faculty, which fully appreciates the good work of the union, an auspicious beginning for this year's work in the scientific temperance department.

A VERITABLE bright and practical idea comes from Corvallis, Oregon. The town proposes to "celebrate," and the W. C. T. U. sisters at once decide upon "a cooling drink stall" right on the "grounds." They also propose to offer to each of their customers the prettiest and most attractive pledge card which Miss Julia Colman can devise, pledging them not to enter a saloon on that day and evening.

REV. L. PFEIFER of Beaver Falls, Pa., is ready to enter the field of German work for total abstinence and prohibition. He has studied the nature of the alcoholics and their effects on the human system, and is now occupied in translating Julia Colman's Catechism on Alcohol into German, hoping there will be a call for its publication in that tongue. He may be written to at Beaver Falls, Beaver Co., Pa.

THE East Gaines (N. Y.) union of the W. C. T. U. gave a temperance concert Sunday evening, May 18. The terrible curse of intemperance was vividly presented through an impressive object lesson. The title of the lesson was, "The Mississippi of Intemperance." A large chart representing the mighty river intemperance, with its tributaries, follies, vices and habits, leading to the common end, gave the outline of the study.

AT a temperance meeting held in Christ church, Indianapolis, June 5, in connection with the Diocesan convention, an address was given by Robert Graham, and a "Church Temperance Society" formed. Mrs. Nichols was also invited, by the rector, to bring forward the W. C. T. U., which she did by memorializing the convention and making a special appeal to its members to work for the passage of Indiana's scientific temperance bill.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

WASHINGTON.—I would like to give a brief account of the work of the W. C. T. U. in this city. There are several ladies actively engaged in the work, the field is unusually large, such a variety. First the Band of Hope work as superintended by sister Rogers. It has been our privilege to address the Band of Hope at Seamons Retreat. Here the children are remarkably good singers (which is providential) as it is in midst of saloons, the children's singing bringing those who are in saloons out from the haunts of vice, into the chapel, where they frequently sign the pledge, become sober men and Christians. The work here is truly wonderful. A young man come forward to sign the pledge one evening and while singing, the voice of his mother broke out upon the silence, crying "My boy! Oh my boy!" she clasped her arms around him weeping tears of joy, many in the audience joining with her. We find fifteen Bands of Hope in D. C. with a fine corps of workers at the head.

Next is the work at Soldiers' Home, Mrs. Rowan superintendent; fifty signed the pledge; more to follow. Men who for many years have been addicted to this vice are now sober, earnest, working men, saved by the grace of God. The jail work is fully as interesting as the other. Under the superintendent, M. Chapin, much good has been done in circulating papers, visiting cells and regular services held weekly in the jail. Last Sabbath several raised their hands for prayer. Sister Russel of Illinois is matron, and manages her department with that rule governed by the milk of human kindness. Sunday night meetings have been regular at Baltimore and Ohio railroad station, Mrs. E. Lewis superintendent. Then we have the work at the Arsenal, Seamen's Retreat, on the wharves, an organized band in each place with these noble women who have begun the work and see that it is sustained. Sister Lewis has a ragged mission school. There is the kitchen garden work and the young ladies have seven societies. Sisters Roach, LaFetra, Moffat and others we might mention, exchanging work, making out programs, looking up speakers, unceasing in their labors for suffering humanity.

They speak of the noble women of Illinois, we wish to mention the noble women of the District of Columbia; such perseverance, such interest, such fervency of spirit, is not often found. Their very faces indicate the beauty of their lives. We can only add that the Alliance and I. O. G. T. are doing efficient work in their respective places, joining in with the W. C. T. U. whenever they are needed. There seems to be perfect harmony and we feel it is an inspiration to see the organized forces in District of Columbia working so zealously for God, home and native land though the powers that be seem to move on 'gainst the home. Yet the watchword in the temperance ranks is, "Forward, Onward, till the enemy is conquered and victory perches on the old prohibition banner."

I begin the summer work in New York at Towonda, July 13.

MRS. C. H. ST. JOHN.

GEORGIA.

Mrs. E. E. Harper, superintendent of prison and jail work, in her report for March last—a model of its kind—gives the following interesting items:

Total amount contributed in papers, lesson books, tracts, hymn books and magazines, 1,g27. These have been distributed in convict camps and jails, where regular visits have been made, hymns sung, the Bible read, and talks given.

Her quarterly report gives the total contributions as 2,451; distribution 2,123; visits 22; letters received 11; letters written 10; cash received $14.85.

Signal Notes.

Thus far, it is affirmed, about seven hundred Iowa saloon keepers have closed their saloons preparatory to engaging in legitimate business. A prominent wholesale and retail firm in Davenport have decided to close out their stock, and have advertised their store for rent after July 1.

The C. R. I. and P. R. R. has announced that no intoxicating liquors will be received for transportation points within the state of Iowa when such transportation cannot be completed before July 4, unless the required certificate granting permission to sell is produced.

It is said that of the 300 or 400 employes of the Crump Label Company, who recently refused to print labels for liquor, wine, beer or cider, there are not more than half a dozen who have not signed the pledge. Some of them were hard drinkers. When the great temperance movement started in Montclair, the men began to feel its influence, and the company felt that it should do something to show its sympathy with the men—and so declined all alliance with the liquor business.

Walla Walla, Washington territory, a city of 7,000 inhabitants, is a model place. Its mayor, General Tannatt, who has been visiting in the east, says it has a municipal ordinance, which is strictly enforced, prohibiting any boy or girl who is under fourteen years of age from being out alone after dark. A child sent for a physician must be given a permit to do so. No tobacconist can sell tobacco or cigarettes to children less than fourteen of age, and Sunday liquor selling is punished by $28 fine for each offense.

The temperance fight goes on in more than one city. At Madison, Wis., the saloon-keepers arraigned for violating the Sunday law were all released, or granted postponement, on some pretext or other. The only man fined was a member of the side of the prosecution who chanced to draw a weapon when out on detective duty. At the same time we read that by the casting vote of the mayor, the city council of Decatur, Ill., has decided to revoke all saloon-licenses. So we do not, after all, lose entire confidence in human nature of the office-holding description.

The Springfield, Ohio, Globe has let a little light into the mysteries of the retail whisky traffic in that city. Quietly purchasing half flask samples of the whisky retailed over the counters of ten of the most popular bars in Springfield, it forwarded them to Professor Wayne, of Cincinnati, for analysis. Of all the samples, but one was found to be pure sour mash whisky, and that lacked the needful age to eliminate the poisonous fusil oil. There was some samples of pure "sweet mash," a vile article at best, and all the others were more or less doctored to make them palatable, but compounded of materials most pernicious to the human system.

The New York legislature has just passed a bill making guilty of a misdemeanor, whoever "sends, lends, gives away or exhibits to any minor child any book, pamphlet, magazine, newspaper, or other printed paper, devoted to the publication or principally made up of criminal news, police reports, or accounts of criminal deeds; or who exhibits upon any street or highway, or in any other place within the view, or which may be within the view, of any minor child, any book, magazine, pamphlet, newspaper, writing-paper, picture, drawing, photograph, or other article or articles coming within the descriptions of articles mentioned in the first and second subdivisions of this section, or any of them." This wise law, duly enforced, will abolish the obscene illustrated journals from every news-stand in the state. Not only so, it will make it exceedingly difficult for children to get any prurient literature. Every right minded citizen may well constitute himself an agent for the purpose of securing the enforcement of this most salutary and righteous law.

Miscellaneous Selections.

REV. JOSEPH COOK notes as one of the significant signs of the time, that "in the city of Cleveland the ladies who are endeavoring so promote the cause of temperance will not receive into their parlors the wives of liquor dealers," and adds: "Social sentiment is rising so high in the state of Ohio that it is now a kind of social disgrace to know anybody connected with the liquor trade." This may be a token of good, as indicating that the liquor traffic has received the brand of Cain at the hands of the pure and true, and will hereafter be hunted and punished as a murderer. But the W. C. T. U. desires rather to reach the hearts and consciences of those engaged in this awful business, and so seeks to wine their wives and children, that by their loving devices those dear to them may be also won.

A WONDERFUL temperance revival has been in progress at Medina, N. Y. For a month past the opera house has been crowded with all classes of people to listen to Mr. P. A. Burdick, who, by the way, is a reformed drunkard, and pronounced a second Gough. He seems to have roused the whole community by his eloquence. It is said that more than half of the people able to write have signed the total abstinence pledge, and the very best and most influential citizens are included. The liquor saloons are almost deserted, and many owners thereof desire to get out of the business. A Law and Order League has been formed, into whose treasury a thousand dollars have already been paid. Mr. Burdick opened a campaign in Albion, Sunday, June 8, which gives good promise of resulting in as great a moral revolution as Medina has experienced.

THE local option law in eighty-seven out of the one hundred and thirty-eight counties of Georgia has transformed over one-half of the state into temperance territory, and compelled the thirsty to resort to various devices for procuring liquor. The Southern Express Company was, for a time, a very popular and successful medium of transportation. Jugs of liquor were sent out C. O. D. the company claiming a right to deliver such goods. Seeing the demand for jugs, the earthenware works of the state, which had been falling out of business, picked up enterprise enough to meet the demand, and the result was the manufacture of thousands of gallon and half-gallon jugs, which would be filled and sent out to the dry customers. Over forty thousand such jugs have passed through the express offices since last January. The temperance people made the point that, under the United States laws, dealers could only sell at their places of business, and that a sale C. O. D. does not come within the meaning of the law. The commissioner of internal revenue at Washington sustained the latter, and thus effectually disposed of the jug business.

WE have read so much of horrible London that it is quite a relief to come across one instance of a voluntary effort to bring about a practical reformation. I heard the other day of a lady of title, who has resolved to devote her life to the poor women and children of Bethnal-green. She now lives in a single room in the neighborhood, and employs her whole time in visiting her poorer neighbors with the object of first inspiring a love of cleanliness in the matrons and girls of the locality, and the ambition of helping themselves to independence by work. Her system is thus described in the Queen newspaper: "She knocks at the door of the miserable room, laden not with provisions and warm clothing, as sometimes depicted, but with soap and scrubbing brushes, a pail, and broom. With these she sets the housewife and daughters to work cleaning and scrubbing the floor and walls, while she minds the children or watches the wretched dinner cooking on the fire. When the job is over she inquires the price of their work by the hour, makes a business-like calculation of the time expended in cleaning the room, pays the price demanded, and bids the people expect her again in a day or two.

THE OLDEST MEDICINE in the WORLD
Is probably DR. ISAAC THOMPSON'S CELEBRATED EYE WATER. This article is a carefully prepared physician's prescription and has been in constant use for nearly a century, and notwithstanding the many other preparations that have been introduced into the market, the sale of this article is constantly increasing. If the directions are followed it will never fail. We particularly invite the attention of physicians to its merits. JOHN L. THOMPSON, SONS & CO., Troy, N. Y.

A SURE THING.

Baldness is only incurable when the hair roots are dead and absorbed, which is a rare condition. In nearly all cases they are simply torpid, and can be stimulated to put forth a new growth of hair by the use of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR, the only preparation that cures baldness and restores youthful color to gray hair.

Baldness Cured and Age Rejuvenated.

J. W. HAMMOND, Lake Preston, D.T., when he was but 40 years old found his hair growing gray. At 50, his hair and whiskers were entirely white. So they continued until he reached 60 years of age, when he began using AYER'S HAIR VIGOR, three bottles of which sufficed to restore their original rich, dark brown color.

MRS. AUGUST VALENTINE, of Buffalo, N. Y., had become nearly bald, and though she made use of many of the so-called hair restorers, none had any effect. AYER'S HAIR VIGOR did what nothing else could do, and now the lady again has a fine head of hair, thanks entirely to it.

GEO. MAYER, Flatonia, Texas, presented an apparently hopeless case. Baldness was hereditary in his family. By the time he was 23 years old he had scarcely any hair left. One bottle of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR started a soft, downy growth all over his scalp, and in a few months his head was covered with soft, dark and abundant hair.

Medicinal Virtues.

The rare medicinal powers, emollient, stimulative and tonic, possessed by AYER'S HAIR VIGOR enable it to cure speedily Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Tetter, Dandruff, Humors of various kinds other diseases of the scalp liable to baldness. It is not a dye, contains coloring matter, and effects its rejuvenation of faded or gray hair simply by bringing back the vigor of youth to the roots and color glands of the hair.

The wife of DR. V. S. LOVELACE, Lovelace, Ky., had very bad Tetter Sores on her head. AYER'S HAIR VIGOR cured them.

The son of JAMES N. CARTER, Occoquan, Va., was cured of Scald-Head by AYER'S HAIR VIGOR.

HERBERT BOYD, Minneapolis, Minn., was cured by AYER'S HAIR VIGOR of intolerable Itching of the Scalp.

MRS. O. DAVENPORT, Williamstown, Vt., became entirely bald at the age of 20 and remained so 38 years, during which time she tried many hair "restorers" without success. Eventually she used AYER'S HAIR VIGOR, four bottles of which covered her head with a fine growth of silky brown hair, twelve inches long.

MRS. O. O. PRESCOTT, Charlestown, Mass., had lost two-thirds of her hair, by its falling out, when she applied AYER'S HAIR VIGOR, and one bottle of it caused her hair to grow out even more handsome than before it began to fall.

MRS. D. N. PARKS, Clio, Michigan, is 57 years of age, and her hair was quite gray, but one bottle of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR restored the color it bore in youth, and she now has "as fine a head of hair as when she was but 16."

VINCENT JONES, Richmond, Ind., lost all his hair in consequence of a severe attack of brain fever. AYER'S HAIR VIGOR brought out a new growth in a few weeks, and it speedily grew long and thick.

A Toilet Luxury.

Where the hair is brittle, dry, harsh, weak, or thin, the use of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR speedily renders it pliant, soft, glossy, and stimulates it to a rich and luxurious growth: it also keeps the scalp free from dandruff, and affords a perfect dressing. Those who lost the hair falling out or turning gray will find no other dressing is so agreeable, so appropriate and delightful to the taste, or so refined a perfume. Without it the toilet cannot be complete.

Ladies who have once made trial of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR never after prefer any other hair-dressing, and many of them voluntarily offer such testimonials as the following, from MISS KATE ROSE, Ingersoll, Ont., who writes:

"While keeping my head clear of Dandruff, and preventing Scald Head, it has also caused my hair to grow luxuriantly, resulting in my now possessing hair forty-two inches long, and as thick as any one could wish it."

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 27. CHICAGO, JULY 3, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

IT is said that the saloon keepers of Cincinnati are in league against the Scott law, and refuse to pay any further tax. It is one of the lessons of history that the advocates and adherents of a bad cause are often its worst enemies. No engineering toward defeat could be more accurate than this action of the liquor dealers. It is one of the ways by which the wise are taken in their own craftiness.

NEAL DOW proclaims Mr. Blaine a prohibitionist of the right sort. The Chicago Tribune is in despair at the mere intimation of such a thing, and begs the Germans to take account of the fact that Mr. Blaine is in nowise responsible for the Maine law, as he did not reach Maine till after it was passed and has never done anything in anyway to help it along.

"FOR God and Home and Native Land" was the watchword given by President Blanchard to the National Convention of the American party, met to nominate a presidential candidate on the platform which seeks a recognition of God in the government, declares for prohibition and woman's ballot and against all secret orders and all monolies. The nominee of the party is Senator Pomeroy, of Kansas.

THE Anzeiger of Iowa refuses to believe the Tribune and notes the fact as ominous that Mr. Blaine's strongest and warmest supporters were from the prohibition states of Maine, Kansas and Iowa. This journal charges upon him the most arrant hypocrisy in that while a prohibitionist at his home in Maine, when in Washington he passes the bottle most freely and passes for one of the most "liberal" of statesmen.

THE railroads that cross the state of Iowa are beginning to shut up the saloon department of the dining cars, while on prohibition soil. The Northwestern railway with its network of Iowa lines, says to its employes that after today, July 3, no liquors of any description will be sold on its cars; that as soon as the westward train touches the bridge of the Mississippi the wine cupboards must be locked and sealed, not to be opened till the same point is reached again on the eastward bound trip. The penalties for violating the law, are so severe that the company notifies its employes that it will not stand between them and harm in case of any infraction to these rules.

THE "buzz saw" is the new name for temperance in politics, and the Democratic organs are advising a severe letting alone of so dangerous an issue. The Democrats should remember that the buzz saw is a very "desaving craythur," and that letting it alone, or trying to do so, may be more dangerous than fitting it into the proper machinery and letting it "whizz" right through the Republican platform. The wool might interfere however and clog its operations.

PREPARATIONS are being made all over Massachusetts, for the coming campaign of the W. C. T. U., when they hope to secure the passage of the bill for the compulsory education of the children in all the public schools, in the hygiene of alcohol and narcotics. Mrs. Livermore has addressed recently the following organizations on this subject: The Massachusetts Teachers' Association, the Society for the promotion of the University Education of Women, the Girls' Normal School, the Massachusetts Baptist Sunday School Superintendents' Union, the Bay State Unitarian Sunday School Association, the Middlesex County Teachers' Association, besides speaking on the same subject at eleven temperance meetings in different parts of the state.

A DISGRACEFUL opposition of President Bascom, of Wisconsin University, has been manifested in certain quarters. We term it disgraceful, because it is evidently inspired by the liquor interests of the state aroused to this manifestation by Dr. Bascom's fearless advocacy of total abstinence and prohibition. When a great state surrenders its educational interests to the liquor traffic, the commonwealth is indeed endangered, but we have little fear that Wisconsin will so demean itself. The temperance forces are all with Dr. Bascom as a matter of course, and the Christian people of the state form a body guard like that of Napoleon. Like the intrepid hero that he is, the president moves on *un*moved, speaking for temperance law enforcement in the beer fortress of Milwaukee last Sunday night, and in all ways showing himself unable to descend from his position of principle, sound reason, and devotion to truth.

THE removal of Bishop Simpson to his heavenly home will be keenly felt in philanthropic as well as church circles. He was born a humanitarian, and his life was devoted to human welfare—the bodily as well as the spiritual. Of him as of Hector, one always felt in his sympathetic and helpful presence—"Thy great heart will wear thee out"—but it is a matter of devout thanksgiving that so many years were lent him in which to work wisely, kindly and aggressively for God and his fellow men. And now that he has passed on, we shall feel that he is working still with us and for us; that he has joined the innumerable company of those whose "shadowy hands are tugging at the ropes" of all the blessed craft whose sails are set toward the better shore.

A DEAR LADY of much influence in an Illinois town recently received a request to canvass for votes for prohibition, concerning which she said to a friend: "Much as I love the temperance cause, I cannot make up my mind to draw any votes from the party for which my husband, who has gone to his heavenly home, so long voted." But a short time afterward, as she read the action of the Republican convention in Chicago, in her righteous indignation she resolved to begin at once and canvass for votes for the party inspired by principle and not policy. The action of this convention has eliminated many voters who had been averse to stepping out from party, confidently expecting a recognition by it of the great army of temperance workers.

A PARAGRAPH of deep significance is this of Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson's in the American Reformer concerning the Day of Prayer of the National W. C. T. U. "That there are so many women praying possibly may not be of so much importance; but that there are so many women who care enough to pray, is an item that should not be overlooked in the summing up of forces against which the liquor interest must wage its unrighteous war. Two hundred thousand eyes opened to see the mischief wrought by intemperance, to the children and the home, make just so many eyes to weep over the shame of it, and to flash back defiance as, step by step, the enemy moves on. One hundred thousand women ought to be able to barricade the hearthstones, to camp round about them, since they can no longer guard them effectually from within. To guard them from within! Every woman of them would have rejoiced by this means to save them and others;—and oh! how many have tried and seen their dear ones slain by a foe that reached them by striking through the mother's heart.—One hundred voices to pray means just so many more to plead and to protest. Hands lifted in prayer are not dropped idly when the time for praying is done. There is a spirit astir in the land, as swift and silent as the wind, that found only faint utterance in the day of prayer, that cannot be properly voiced in words either to God or man—a spirit, subtle, potent, charged with real heart sorrow and anxiety over the nation's need.

RECOGNITION.

Dear Union Signal:—Years ago, when a pupil in a Massachusetts normal school, I "fell in love" with one of my instructors there. A teacher myself since then, if my pupils love me as I learned to love her during the brief time we were thus thrown together, I am fully content, so far as love is concerned.

My friend soon left us, and I lost sight of her for years; but her memory has ever been precious, and words of her penning have been a help and a comfort to me in hours of bitter trial, and, through me, to others.

And now, what should bring us together but this blessed temperance work? for I am persuaded that Mrs. Maria Upham Drake, mentioned in The Union Signal for June 12, is none other than my dear Miss Upham, of the Salem Normal. I doubt not that she has forgotten me; but I feel sure she will forgive me for sending to you her own sweet words, that they may strengthen weary, fainting hearts. Yours ever, Alice M. Guernsey.

How the seeming good and ill,
Of our being shall fulfill
His own tender, loving will,
Is not shown.
Starry hopes are ever fleeting,
Life ideals want completing,
And the meaning is unknown.

When we reach the shining strand,
Where the waiting angels stand,
In the far-off fatherland,
We shall know
In the happiness unending,
Of a blissful comprehending,
What our life-work meant below.

In the fulness deep and wide,
Weary souls by sorrow tried,
Seeing, shall be satisfied,
In His rest;
Finding in the perfect sweetness
Of an infinite completeness,
That God's ways are always best.

IN MEMORIAM.

MARY A. LIVERMORE.

Died in Somerville, Mass., at eight o'clock on the morning of Saturday, May 24, 1884, Mrs. Lurinda B. Barrett, wife of William M. Barrett, M.D., aged 65 years, 1 month and 4 days.

Thus closes the record of an unselfish and noble life, devoted to the loftiest personal aims, and to self-sacrificing labors for the good of others. Our departed friend's life was no holiday affair, but serious and earnest. From her earliest girlhood she addressed herself to its duties, as one whom "God had anointed with his odorous oil to wrestle, not to reign." Falling in the harness, with her hands full of work, her associates, who "sorrow that they shall see her face no more," are unable to understand how the gap in their ranks can be filled, so large a place did she occupy among them. For the Massachusetts W.C.T.U. has lost its most useful officer—the woman who was instrumental in calling it into being, who gave to it the exclusive devotion of the last ten years of her life, and who, when dying, left one imploring request—that the women of the union, and her co-laborers would remain unflinching in their fidelity to the great cause they had espoused.

Mrs. Barrett was born in Grafton, Mass., April 20, 1819. She was one of a family of seven children, all of whom she survived. Her father was a prominent Baptist clergymen of that day, devoted to his profession, successful and beloved in his various pastorates. Her mother was a gentle, refined and intellectual woman, of whom Mrs. Barrett always spoke in the language of reverent affection. She was educated very carefully, her parents giving the best educational advantages that the times afforded to women. She studied at the Ladies' Academy, at Townsend, Mass., also at the Academy at New Hampton, N. H., but she completed her studies, and graduated from the Female Seminary, in Charlestown, Mass.

In this latter institution Mrs. Barrett was my classmate for years, and a girlish friendship sprang up between us which the experiences of maturer life cemented and perfected. I remember her as a proficient in mathematics, and with a passion for sketching, drawing and painting, which she studied and in which she excelled. All through her busy life she found leisure to sketch and to paint, and with brush and palette in hand, forgot weariness, sorrow, anxiety and physical suffering. She united with the Baptist church in very early girlhood, and to the close of her life honored the church of her youthful choice by the nobility of her Christian life and character. I remember the religious oversight and motherly care which characterized her intercourse with her younger brothers and sisters, while her relations with her pupils were so faithful and tender that she retained a strong influence over them in all their future years.

In November, 1846, Mrs. Barrett assumed the responsibility of married life, and thenceforward knew the joys and sorrows, the hopes and fears, the sacrifices and compensations that come with wifehood and motherhood. Into the sacredness of her home-life we may not enter. Never could there be a more devoted wife, never a tenderer or more unselfish mother. She ennobled her domestic relations by the fineness of the spirit that she carried into them. Toil was pastime, duty was pleasure, and sacrifice enriched her, when the objects of toil and sacrifice were husband, children and grand-children. They are blest in the memory of the long years that she dwelt among them, a perpetual benediction.

To the women of the Massachusetts Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Mrs. Barrett was especially dear. The organization owes to her its existence. Always interested in the temperance reform, and identified with it from childhood, she caught the spirit of the "woman's crusade," that phenomenal movement in southern Ohio, which, ten years ago, was born of the despair as well as of the faith of women. My engagements during the winter had taken me through that section of country where the "crusade" was most effective. Consulting a few clergymen and personal friends, Mrs. Barrett, on my return, arranged for a meeting in the vestry of the First Baptist church of Boston, then located on Somerset street, with Rev. Dr. Neale, the venerable pastor of the church, to preside. I was invited to give a narration of the remarkable scenes which I had witnessed, and of the wonderful power developed by the seemingly inspired women who had publicly pledged themselves to life-long work for temperance. Several clergymen followed with stirring appeals, a time and place for a meeting of women was appointed, and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was born in Massachusetts—feeble to be sure, but the promising germ of the present strong organization. This was in the early autumn of 1873. A year later I yielded to my friend's urgent solicitations and joined the infant union, promising to work with her to the end, a promise I have faithfully kept.

Mrs. Barrett entered the work with ardor, and put to its service consecrated energy and unusual executive ability, in which she was surpassed by few women or men. From its inception till she dropped in the arms of death she gave to it her entire time, thought, force and devotion. From one union in 1873, the organization has increased till there are between two and three hundred in 1884, with juvenile organizations attached, that include, it is estimated, upwards of 30,000 children, all holding stated meetings and doing manifold temperance work, and this growth is largely the outcome of Mrs. Barrett's brave heart and busy brain.

She kept a daily diary, during her ten and a half years of service, and ten little books with their hundreds of closely written pages lie before me. They are full of pathos, with their record of rebuffs, disappointments and discouragements; full of cheer in their chronicles of successful meetings, increased organizations and quickened zeal.

I am amazed at the power of patient and persistent work possessed by our friend and revealed in these pages. I am pained at her habitual underestimate of her own worth and ability. I wonder at the wisdom of her plans and her success in securing their adoption; at her comprehension of the temperance work to be done in our state, and that she clearly saw the share of it which belongs to its women.

Increasing years and failing health weighed heavily on her, but she kept bravely at work. Her physician warned her of the incurable heart disease which might end her life at any moment. "Give me palliatives for the pain," was her answer, "and let me die in the harness." Her letters to me during the last winter were written from various parts of the state, where conventions were in session, and where, as usual, she took "the laboring oar," and when I remonstrated against her excessive over-work, she replied, "I cannot stop now to rest, for I feel that the end is drawing near."

The end came, suddenly, at last—and not as she had anticipated. What seemed at first a cold, became a consuming fever, that burned away her life, and the over taxed brain gave way. There was almost no hope of recovery from the first moment of her illness—and with her, no desire to live. "I am too near heaven now," she said, "to be reconciled to a return to life." In her conscious moments, her thoughts were incessantly occupied with plans for the continuance of the work which was dropped from her folded hands. And, one day, not long before her death, there came to her the strength to rise from her bed, and the inspiration to pen to the members of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. the following brief letter. The chirography is irregular and confused, but the thought is clear, and the language concise:

Standing on the threshold of the better land, I see more clearly. I would like to urge the dear workers in our great cause to acquaint themselves more fully with the evil that destroys the beauty and glory of our nation. The desire comes strongly to me to entreat them to put aside all narrowness and prejudice in their methods of work. Dear sisters, hold yourselves open to convic ion! If the ballot were in the hands of woman, as a temperance measure, it would be powerful for the overthrow of the liquor traffic. Then do not fight against the movement to give the ballot to woman, "lest haply you be found fighting against God." L. B. B.

This letter is the more remarkable, because Mrs. Barrett had only quite recently become a convert to the belief that municipal suffrage should be sought by temperance women, that they may wage a successful warfare with the growing intemperance of the state. "I am forced into this belief," she said, "by the logic of events." With the writing of the above brief epistle to the women of the unions, for whom she had a strong affection, her earthly work ended. "Nothing worries me now," she said, at our last interview; "I have given up everything. I lie here and wait God's will." She retained consciousness almost to the last, recognizing the members of her family, and looking into their faces with unspeakable love, long after the power of speech had failed,—and on the morning of May 24 she passed away as quietly as an infant falls asleep.

Our very fears belied our hopes,
Our hopes our fears belied—
We thought her dying when she slept,
And sleeping when she died.

The funeral services were held on Tuesday, May 28, Rev. Dr. Smith, pastor of the Baptist church in West Somerville, with which body Mrs. Barrett had been connected during the last year, conducted the services with the family and friends, at the family residence. At eleven o'clock there were public services in the Shawmut Ave., Baptist Church, where she had been a communicant for years, Rev. Mr. Gifford, the pastor, and Rev. Mr. Potter, reading the scriptures, and offering prayer. Mrs. Livermore spoke of the work and worth of the departed, addressing herself to the ladies of the unions, who filled the body of the church, and to the other temperance organizations, represented by delegations. Floral tributes were sent by friends and organizations, some of them possessing great beauty.

The burial was at Fitchburg, where Dr. and Mrs. Barrett resided for many years, the mortal remains of the beloved wife, mother and friend being laid beside those of her child, who years ago exchanged earth for heaven. The members of the Fitchburg W. C. T. U. accompanied the family to the cemetery, where clergymen of the city, old friends, and a sweet-voiced choir joined them. There was a brief, fitting service around the open grave, a last look at the calm sleeper, who heeded neither tears, nor song, nor floral gifts, and all that was mortal of our friend was committed to the earth, for the spirit had flown to the God who gave it.

——"God keeps a niche
In heaven to hold our idols! and albeit
He breaks them to our faces and denies
That our close kisses shall impair their white,
I know we shall behold them raised, complete,—
The dust shook from their beauty—glorified
New Memnons singing in the great God-light."

AN EARLY WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

MRS. H. M. TRACY CUTLER, M.D.

Nearly forty years ago the women of a little town in northern Ohio, became aware that alcoholic liquors were being brought into the community and sold contrary to law. They besought their husbands and fathers to attempt its legal suppression, but the men did not seem to feel it their duty to "interfere," as they said.

But there was the law plain as printing could make it, forbidding the sale of liquors to minors and to habitual drunkards, and the women had learned to read, and they found the laws better than the customs. Some painful occurrences had made them earnest in their plea that this infraction of the law might be noticed.

After various vain appeals to the men, and after a drunken schoolmaster had been employed in the center district, the women decided to form a temperance society, to see what they could do to suppress the drinking shop.

They met and prayed and deliberated. Then, among other measures, they appointed a committee of elderly matrons to wait upon the offending citizen, and entreat him to discontinue his unlawful traffic. These women were intelligent and influential members of the church and community, and the "merchant" who dealt in all sorts of goods, including whisky, received them politely, and talked in a reasonable sort of way.

He said that his trade was small and if he discontinued the sale of whisky he could hardly support his family. These good women were not unreasonable. They told him that they were desirous that he should become a prosperous and valuable citizen, and they would willingly make some sacrifices to secure his success, if he would dispense with this traffic.

They were accustomed to do most of their trading at the county seat, where, not only were prices lower, but the stock was much better. But if he would do as they desired, he might count on their trade and their influence, and in the end they believed he would realize reasonable success.

He spoke fairly, assuring them that he had no desire to be a bad citizen. But he wished for time in which to make up his mind. They told him they would meet again next week and send a committee to receive his decision.

They returned to the meeting and reported and after appointing a committee of middle aged women to receive his answer, they engaged in prayer, asking the Divine guidance on their efforts to save the community from this terrible evil.

When these good women returned to their several homes, and related what measures they had taken, to their surprise and grief, they found their husbands and fathers and brothers, almost to a man, either ridiculed or condemned their course as foolish, unpractical or calculated to stir up a spirit of animosity on the part of the "merchant."

Some of the men, accustomed to lounge in the little seven-by-nine store, and to pass hours that might have been profitably employed, in incubating nails, or sitting round whittling, for steady occupation, began to frame jokes that they bandied about concerning women who put on pantaloons and attempted to regulate town affairs, till the "merchant" began to think he had quite disgraced himself by his politeness. He swore lustily that he would send the women back with a flee in their ears when they came again, and he would sell all the whisky he pleased, and they might go about their knitting.

The next week we met again, and after earnest prayer and consultation, our committee was sent to receive his decision. In the meantime we consulted the law book to see what his liabilities might be, and also the duties of grand jurymen. Our committee returned and reported that he had only to say that he was not to be frightened by a pack of old women and he should sell all the whisky he —— pleased.

Now we knew there was abundance of testimony to his violation of the law, but we did not choose to appear as prosecutors. We therefore decided that as the grand jury would be in session on the following week, we would inform them of the fact that the law had been repeatedly broken, and name the witnesses who would verify our statement. This work was placed in the hands of a committee, and again the women engaged in prayer and adjourned till the following week. On meeting at the time and place to which we had adjourned, we found that some members of our committee had been forbidden by their husbands to take any action in the matter. But we had our resource. There were present two widows and one maiden lady, and we were chosen a committee to wait on the merchant and receive his final decision.

We found him partially intoxicated, and ready to assert all the dignity of his manhood against poor, despicable women. He told us we might better attend to our own affairs, and not be round meddling with that which did not concern us.

We told him that we were attending to that which did most vitally concern us. We were interested in the general welfare of the community which he was seeking to debase. Two of us had each a son whom we expected to rear in that town, and the moral condition of that people most deeply interested us. The other had nephews and nieces whose future might be largely influenced by their surroundings.

We also besought him, in the name of God and in behalf of his own true interests, to turn from the evil he seemed bent on pursuing. He was not to be entreated. Then we read him the information we were compelled to furnish the grand jury.

"Crack ahead," said he with an oath, "I shall sell all the whisky I please." We returned and reported to the meeting, and decided to send our communication through our prosecuting attorney.

We kept up our temperance prayer meetings and waited developments. After a time we received a flattering letter signed by the foreman of the grand jury, complimenting us in the most beautiful manner, and advising us to make complaint before a justice of the peace.

We did not propose to become prosecutors when we knew it was the duty of the grand jury, having been apprised of a violation of law, to take the matter into their own hands; and we notified them to that effect, and hinted that notice might be taken of their short comings if the case should be overlooked.

This finally led to a presentment and trial, but at the latter he called in a drinking neighbor who testified to his general good character and he was let off with a fine of ten dollars.

This slight check the rather stimulated him in his course. He felt that the men upheld him, and took sides with him against the women. He did all that an insidious, bad man could to debauch the community, yet not a man lifted his hands. They saw some poor women bowed to the dust with shame and anguish over the ruin of their sons and the confirmed drinking habits of their husbands, which brought them to bitter poverty, and in some instances to early death.

Three or four years after this, the same man was proven to have stolen and butchered an ox. Then the men who had helped to bury in dumb silence, one of the loveliest of mothers, brought to her grave by overwork and hard fare in consequence of her husband's drinking habits, rose to the dignity of the occasion and called loudly for his prosecution. He was found guilty and sentenced to three years' imprisonment, so much more valuable was an ox than a man's soul.

This was the experience of one of the first Woman's Christian Temperance Unions. Can any one wonder that some of us who were active in this primitive association, should have early seen and urged the right of franchise for women as a means of warfare against the "great dragon, the serpent," that is seeking the destruction of our offspring, and desolating the homes and degrading the morals of our land.

THE PRAYER OF FAITH.

MRS. W. N. DENNY.

A dear little woman asked me the other day for some plain sewing. I looked at her wonderingly, for I knew it was not necessary for her to take in sewing, and she said to me with tears in her eyes, "I want to make some money to give to the temperance cause. Some money I can call my own." This woman lives on a large farm. She sends twenty pounds of butter to town every week and yet she could not call any of this money her own; but she felt if in her resting moments she did sewing she could call this money her own. There are so many busy women that have not time to attend conventions, and social meetings that realize the danger to husbands and sons and feel they must give something to the women that are in the heat of the battle, and if these women could only be organized into secret praying bands, praying for the sick and for the active workers that God will keep them from sickness and disaster.

One dear sister says: "I love the Christian Temperance Union and how I would love to go and work but I am just a private in this great army and detailed to stay at home, and I can do this when at my work, pray for you dear sisters that you may yet be able to take your place in the ranks."

She sends request for prayer for her daughter. Oh, dear sisters, pray earnestly for her restoration. This is the first request that is presented. In your weekly meetings and in your closet pray as God as has commanded us if possible; fast, for God has said, "The earnest, effectual prayer of the righteous man availeth much." Our sister says: "My daughter has been laid up by sickness about two months. She has been one of the faithful workers in the Christian Temperance Union nearly two years. It is my earnest prayer that she may be restored to health and work." She says, "I feel sure he will hear these prayers for the sick." I think it would cheer and strengthen our faith to know that there were others all over the country praying for the same object. There are, no doubt, some who have faith and could meet their little praying circles who cannot go and do the heavy work away from home, and perhaps have more of a gift for this, than any other work."

The letter of our dear sister has comforted and cheered me and I feel that God will hear our united prayers for her daughter. In my next letter I will give you my experience in my own case, perhaps it will cheer and comfort some suffering and sorrowing one. I think this temperance work has knit the hearts of the women together throughout the land. The incense of their prayers has been a halo around their own heads. I send greeting to all the suffering ones.

A CORRECTION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In one of your late issues you quote Rev. James Birkham, as saying, that "in Burlington there had been a gain of five saloons in six weeks, after the license was raised from five hundred to six hundred dollars." As it immediately followed the mention of Des Moines, I presume he means this city, and am sorry he was no better informed. Will you allow me to set him right?

Previous to April, 1883, the license had been seventy-five dollars, and for the year closing then we had seventy-six saloons. The council was elected on the issue of high or low license, the high being elected by a slight majority. The board of trade had advocated a six hundred dollar fee, but a four hundred dollar bill was introduced. A bitter fight followed, as a part of the council thought two hundred dollars high enough, one member declaring that if it was over that "it would be impossible for the poor man to get a glass of beer."

Petitions were circulated, and the one for the four hundred dollar receiving a few more names than the other, that sum was fixed as the license. Now for the result:

In my work all such items were desirable, and I was at some pains to preserve them. We had seventy-six saloons before and within the next few days sixty-eight licenses were granted. Had this moderately high license restricted eight saloons? Possibly, although passing through the streets you could not see that any were missing. Investigation showed that five out of the eight restricted had applied for the reissuing of their license and had been refused. Their moral character did not reach the high standard which the city of Burlington has set up to which a man shall attain before he purchases the privilege of debauching his fellow men. They had kept such disgraceful places, that I suppose to prove that high license did really make the business more respectable, they were not licensed. Two left the business, at least here, do not know if high license was the cause or no, but the third and last was a widow woman with five children, and the city had been macadamizing the street in front of her little property and that bill must be paid without delay, so after paying it she could not raise the additional four hundred dollars, so closed her saloon.

Is this not something to boast of? The city of Burlington after weeks of struggling, a bitter canvass and a great display of editorial skill, restricted a widow with five children from carrying on the business. Afterward a number of other licenses were granted, so that we have had our usual supply of saloons and not even the poorest man has found the amount of the license any hindrance to his obtaining beer, or any of the stronger drinks. But the Fourth is close at hand, many have signified their intention of obeying the law promptly, while thinking "it won't amount to much." But the county alliance and the unions are planning, and will work hand in hand, and the law will be enforced even here.

Yours in the work, MRS. C. A. DUNHAM.

THAT MISSOURI CONVENTION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—"Many daughters have done virtuously but thou excellest them all." Little did I hope ever to write thus of Missouri—"Poor Misery" we used to call her—but "today is this scripture fulfilled in our ears."

To go back a bit: In 1875 I was invited by Rev. R. M. Beach who had just started "The Temperance Roll Call," to visit St. Louis and try to rally the clans for a W. C. T. U. We had a fair attendance and some interest, organizing a local and the outline of a state W. C. T. U. But the time was not yet. The movement, languid at best, soon died. The W. C. T. U. of the city was repeatedly revived by different workers and almost as rapidly "died for want of breath." Meanwhile Mrs. Mary M. Clardy, first president of the state, with the gospel in her looks and the Bible in her hand, went up and down throughout the state, giving such scripture readings and expository sermons (though she never dreamed she was a preacher!) as struck conviction deep into many a true but timid heart, and were "to bring forth much fruit after many days." No state organization was behind her; no purse nor scrip were to be had, but this dear unworldly (some have said "too unworldly") saint pursued her own work in her own way.

Meanwhile I had organized more than once in Kansas City, where I had two pupils, Mrs. M. P. Swan and Miss Fannie Rice, who for love of the dear old "Lima days" when I was their "Preceptress," stood by as well as they could, and other noble women came to the rescue to some extent. But the thronging to our W. C. T. U. standard in Missouri until the last two years reminds me of an anecdote. My mother is by nature the promptest of the prompt. In the olden time when we were five at home, she was always armed and equipped as the law directs, and ready at the window hymn book in hand, to call her leisurely husband and son and her tardy young lady daughters to behold the passers by and be warned, lest their "dilatory motions" should establish for us the reputation of the latest comers. As she described the throng my father would come to the window and call out in his droll tones, "O yes, wife, there throngs one."

Well, Missouri's "haste to the rescue" was about equally alarming—to the liquor traffic, I mean. But light broke forth at last in Kirkwood (seven miles from St. Louis) and in Hannibal, near the eastern border. They were women utterly "unstampedable," to use Garfield's phrase about his noble wife, who, in these localities determined that our society "should come, and come to stay." The St. Louis Union, in which dear Mrs. Waggoner and a few brave hearts had "borne and labored and had patience," felt the strong re-enforcement of Mrs. S. F. Grubb, Miss Annie Snead and other ladies their co-workers. It has come about that Mrs. ex-Gov. Fletcher is president in that great city. A good work is going on. Rev. Dr. Eliot, president of Washington University, is a strong ally. Mrs. Alice Peterson is developing as an acceptable talker to city audiences. A police matron has been secured, a German W. C. T. U. formed by Mrs. Grubb, earnest legislative work is carried on by Miss Snead (now Mrs. Cairns) and our National W. C. T. U. is invited to convene there "in the pleasant autumn weather." So much for the metropolis.

Years ago a postal or a letter used statedly to come to me containing the Macedonian cry, from Hannibal, and always signed "Rose Phillips." A year ago last spring the urgency of this request became importunity concentrated. Bro. C. J. Holt, of Illinois, had had a great work there; a tabernacle was erected, lumbermen giving material, working men contributing muscle and time, and the ladies, led by that gentlest of Great Hearts, Mrs. P. B. Groat, furnishing them their noontide lunch. Gov. St. John had been written and telegraphed to come and dedicate this W. C. T. U. tabernacle, but he sent word it was impossible. Whereupon a committee of ladies went all the way to Topeka and of course he surrendered at discretion and wonderful was the meeting he held. The next day I arrived to assist in organizing the state union. John B. Finch, Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, George Bain and Col. Geo. Woodford followed in quick succession. The latter has invested one of the grandest years of his life here. Chas. J. Holt has kept steadily at work and has won a large place in the people's hearts by his splendid work; our "Little Dane" has traversed the state; our own editor's name is lovingly repeated for the the good results of her last year's visit. Indeed, time would fail me to tell of the great temperance revival and all the means employed.

At our Hannibal meeting of two years ago, Mrs. Clara Hoffman, of Kansas City, first appeared on the scene and we all felt that she had come to the kingdom for these troublous times. She was at once elected president, much against her inclination, for she had been for years the chief public school teacher of her city and was overwhelmed with work. Rose Phillips was made corresponding secretary and headquarters for the state were opened in Kansas City. I was there a few months after, and in the home of the leading merchant who urgently requested me to use no influence to take the best teacher ever known in that city from her post. For one year Mrs. Hoffman tugged along the double load, but this last year has been devoted to the one work as a president must be who succeeds. In this year the state has come up from forty to one hundred and forty local unions. The salary of $1200 per year for president has been paid without difficulty; also that of corresponding secretary; headquarters expenses met; literature sent out constantly, and today there is money in the treasury. Nay more than that, the next year's salary was all pledged by the late convention; and in addition to that enough to state superintendents and in collections to make a grand total of over two thousand dollars besides a promise that each local union would endeavor to raise one share of stock ($25) for THE UNION SIGNAL.

I never saw a finer convention than this young state work evolved in beautiful Sedalia last week. I never met more quick brained, practical women. They are so courageous, devise such liberal things; believe in "the next thing" so fully and dare to avow their belief. Why, they came right out for woman's ballot, selected delegates to the "third party convention" and declared with rousing "Aye" and Chautauqua salute for Governor St. John as the W. C. T. U. candidate for president. How proud were those to whom I told the pleasant fact that J. B. Hobbs, of Chicago, Illinois, Prohibition Home Protection candidate for governor, is husband of our lovely Mrs. Hobbs, whose department of "Matrons for Police Courts" is the favorite of all in the Chicago work, and whose munificence is only equalled by her Christian grace of character and life.

Our gifted and staunch ally, Col. George Woodford, came out fair and square for Gov. St. John as president and J. B. Hobbs for governor of Illinois, and dealt some telling blows against Blaine's and Logan's record, which is especially unsatisfactory to temperance people all along the line.

The presence of Mary Allen West at this convention was of incalculable value. Illinois has a president with an assorted brain, and systematic methods, which, in the proportion that they become universal, will "organize victory."

Mrs. Nelly Bayley delighted everybody, dear child heart that she is, and Anna Gordon organized a Y. W. C. T. U. from which we shall hear "more anon." Dr. Bessie Cushman made the excellent suggestion that we substitute for "Hygiene" the simple Saxon word "Health" in naming that department.

A beautiful Bible was given to Mrs. Hoffman by Nevada Y. W. C. T. U., and a purse "with enclosures" to Mrs. Clardy. This reminds me of what is too good to keep, i. e. that those dear Hannibal women, Mrs. Groat, Mrs. Allen, Mrs. Hunt, Mrs. Wallace and others surprised me last Christmas at Washington Court House, Ohio, by sending the unique and elegant silk quilt seen by many of us at the Louisville convention. They are certainly "on the giving hand" out in Missouri, and my gift mother exhibits to all visitors with more pride than any other token of good will which we possess.

Mrs. Hoffman's address, though written out after her arrival, is pronounced "masterly" by the city press, and given in full. Indeed, the papers have devoted more space than has ever before been granted our society at any convention, either state or national.

Why have I dwelt thus upon this last of the spring conventions? Not idly, not without a purpose. It is a splendid object lesson for every state, especially for the weak and discouraged. If such success could be here carved out from the thick of defeat it can be done anywhere. Only you must have strong and daring leadership, the daring of a dauntless faith, and devoted loyalty in rank and file. Said one dear woman, "I've learned so much and got so much inspiration at this convention as will last me all the year in the local work, and now I'm going home to save up my egg-money so I can be on hand at the next." FRANCES E. WILLARD.

AFTERMATH.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL.—There are many whose names I would like to mention in grateful remembrance for the efficient help rendered in the line of Sunday school temperance work, but time and space forbid.

Special thanks are due the Rev. Dr. F. A. Noble, of Union Park Congregational church, not only for his preparation of the first lesson but for his earnest and forceful plea for quarterly temperance lessons in the regular course, in a letter written to a member of the lesson committee and used, along with some telling facts put in a circular form, at the Louisville convention and throughout the country.

To Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Fowler and Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, of Chicago, I am personally indebted for a kindly and intelligent interest in this department from the first which has been a constant inspiration, and also for a generous financial aid which has enable me to send literature and instruction concerning this work throughout the entire length and breadth of our land.

I wish they might know, as I do, how large a share falls to them in this blessed victory and onward sweep of a new revelation.

Mr. J. B. Hobbs was the first Sunday school superintendent in Chicago who gave the quarterly Sunday to temperance. Through his kindness, when president of the Sunday School Superintendents' Association of our city, and that of Mr. Harry Vail, the secretary, I was invited to present my plan for temperance work in the Sunday school to that body. It was then an infant, born of a deep conviction that it would meet the need of the hour. I have often felt that if this plan had not met such a kindly reception from a few it might never have become, as it has, a state and national one. For this reason our warmest thanks are due those who gave it the first welcome and encouragement. God works through human agency and usually through those who are free from the trammels of prejudice and custom and wide-visioned enough to read His handwriting, though inscribed in letters that are new.

The crusade required devotion, inspiration, courage. This Sunday school temperance work has required all this, and in addition a steady purpose, a serene assurance and enduring patience.

To Him who alone could give this let us render thanksgiving above all and for all. His own words are the key note of the whole: "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit saith the Lord of Hosts." What now? This question should be asked as earnestly after a victory as after a defeat.

There have been many lapses in the temperance reform just for the reason that its advocates have been lulled into inaction by some good fortune. Let this not be true of our department. More earnestly than ever, and invigorated by the tonic of this evidence of the good hand of our God upon us, let us work for the desired end. Some of the lesson committee are not with us for reasons which seem all sufficient to them, but to us, who know the need in this line of Christian service, seem weak as mere threads of gossamer. But the voice of our Sunday school workers, rising all over the land in earnest petition, we trust and believe will be to them the voice of God.

Will the superintendents of this department in the various states and territories continue the work of securing the names of pastors and Sunday school superintendents to the petition for quarterly temperance lesson subjects?

Arrange the names in a roll and keep them untill called for. Abate not one jot or tittle of any effort in the past which God has so wondrously crowned with his blessing.

The stone cut out without hands shall smite this foe of the human race until it becomes like the chaff of the summer threshing floor. Each one of us can hasten or retard the day. LUCIA E. F. KIMBALL.

CONVENTION STRAWS GATHERED BY MRS. M. J. ALDRICH.

The hearty and long-continued applause with which the remark of Rev. Mr. Wharton, of Georgia, was greeted, when, in response to address of welcome, he said, "We've been busy, in Georgia, legislating whisky out, and Sunday schools in," showed unmistakably the temperance drift of the Louisville convention. And when the convention refused to accede to Mr. Reynolds' suggestion that the chair appoint a committee of seven to nominate the new lesson committee, he stated that the old committee had been nominated by a committee of only five, and queried, "Has not their work been satisfactory?" the cries of "No, no!" in different parts of the house, revealed not only the undercurrent of thought, but the strength of that current. And the W. C. T. U. women were silent delegates too, when the convention ordered that the nomination of the new lesson committee be left to a committee of one from each state and territory represented. Other things perhaps influenced that action, but temperance certainly was not forgotten.

And when the resolution was offered recommending the new lesson committee to furnish quarterly temperance lessons, and the hearts of many "failed them for fear," that through parliamentary tactics the convention would be prevented from expressing their desire by vote, there were men ready, by parliamentary tactics, to prevent an adjournment until such a vote had been taken.

Once only have I seen the calm but determined temperance sentiment of that Louisville convention equalled, and that was in the Republican convention of Iowa in June 1883, when the temperance sentiment in the hearts of the people's delegates was so strong that it turned the leaders whithersoever it pleased. This battle for Bible temperance lessons in our Sabbath schools is God's. He is going before us in the hearts of the people. Let us take courage; learn to labor and to wait; in due time the desire of our hearts will be granted.

OREGON'S DEFEAT.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—You will probably have heard more accurately the result of the election in Oregon than I have. I cannot get at papers as I travel so as to obtain full details. I suppose there is no doubt that the friends of suffrage were badly beaten.

I was unable to form an opinion as to the result up to the day of election, although I had visited towns in all parts of the state. Many audiences seemed warmly in favor and many coldly indifferent to the subject. Some unions begged me not to touch the subject, while others desired a full address upon it. I was asked more than once by prominent ladies and gentlemen to devote my time in the state fully to the question of suffrage, on the plea that such a course would help largely to carry the measure and thus help the temperance cause more than by talking temperance directly. It is certain that many members of the W. C. T. U. are in favor of suffrage; equally certain that many are opposed to it, not seeing the great things that may be accomplished by woman with the ballot that cannot without it.

I am told that many voted in the legislature to submit this question who were opposed to it and voted and worked against it at the polls.

I cannot say that I am disappointed, for my hopes did not run high after I came into the state, but it is a great set-back to all good things in the state. Blessings on the men of Washington territory, who have done their women justice and given them the power to do great things. The first fruits appear at Olympia in the election of a temperance mayor, put in the field by women because they did not approve of the men nominated by the parties. That the women of Steilacoom voted in the interest of the liquor traffic is to be regretted, but when it is known that the town lives on its distilleries and breweries it does not seem so strange. The women of the territory will show themselves in the right, and nobly too.

If temperance people need further evidence that the liquor traffic is ready to "disregard party affiliations" in order to maintain their interests, here is an item for them. The following was circulated in Oregon just before election. W. W. Thayer was the Republican nominee, and L Flinn the Democratic:

STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL.

PORTLAND, Ore., May 24, 1884.

The Liquor Dealers Union of Oregon by a unanimous vote hereby invites your co-operation, and through you all your friends in your vicinity, engaged or interested in the liquor business, towards securing the election of W. W. Thayer and the defeat of L. Flinn for the position of the supreme court of Oregon, for the reasons,

First: Because of Mr. Flinn's well known prejudice against the liquor traffic.

Second: He is a strict prohibitionist, and as such his prejudices must necessarily affect his judicial opinion on the bench should questions involving the liquor interest come before him.

You are also asked to exercise your best endeavors to defeat nominees for legislature in your county who are prohibitionists, irrespective of party.

It is only by a timely exercise of our power that we can prevent our enemies from absolutely destroying our business by which we honestly support our families, and which is taxed more heavily and unjustly than any other business in the Union. Yours truly,

HENRY FLECKENSTEIN,
JOHN BARRY,
BEN. L. NORDEN,
Cor. Com. L. D. Union of Oregon.

Is it not time that the enemies of the liquor traffic, by which men so honestly maintain their families should unite to defeat liquor nominees, and elect prohibitionists, irrespective of party? MARY CLEMENT LEAVITT.

JUSTICE (?) IN BAY CITY, MICHIGAN.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—A few months ago two or three boys, ranging from eleven to fourteen years of age, were arrested for taking a horse that did not belong to them, and for other offences, or accumulation of offences. In the midst of their escapade they bought beer and got drunk. Some of the temperance people thought this a good opportunity to bring the man who sold them the beer to justice. Well, he was brought not to justice, but to "the justice," and the outcome of the trial reminds one of the grammatical difference between proper and common nouns. Note the difference:

Proper nouns are indefinable, individual, exclusive.

Common nouns are definable, generic, or relating to a class; inclusive.

Explanatory note: Justice is indefinable in that it disallows all legal quibbling. It is individual in that it holds every man to his own merit irrespective of class influence. It is exclusive in that it excludes all partiality in its administration. "The justice" is definable in that every justice may define to suit himself. It is generic in that the class always modifies the administration. It is inclusive in that it can be applied to all holding the office of justice.

"The justice" visited one of the mothers, and he laid himself out so flat that the generic justice overpowered and covered up justice in the abstract. See how he did it!

He said that he felt sorry for the poor old man who sold the boys the beer! The pathos of the next is without a parallel in the history of justice. He said, and ye gods of justice listen: "This is his only way of getting a living!" This is truly a case in which justice is swallowed up in mercy. The next remark is ghostly in that it involves a grave subject. He said, "He is a poor old man with one foot in the grave!" He never said a word about that "poor old man's" other foot, whether it was constantly getting hotter or colder; for the "foot in the grave" monopolized all of his sympathy. The "poor old man with one foot in the grave" was honorably (?) discharged, that is all of him that was out of the grave. The boys were sent to the reform school, not because they told who sold them the beer, but because they were otherwise unruly. The mother did not know the name of the justice or of the "poor old man with one foot in the grave," but she told the writer these facts, and these same facts speak volumes to every thinking mind.

Which must go, the saloon or the boy?

"HONOR TO WHOM HONOR."

DEAR UNION SIGNAL.—The following, or the greater part, was published in the Mid-Continent of this city, the last time by special request of some friends. The editors of THE UNION SIGNAL thought it proper to publish, not long since some of the views of Messrs. Blaine and Logan, on the use to be made of the proceeds of licensing the liquor traffic. You will I trust cultivate the spirit of justice to both of the two gentlemen now before the country, as candidates for the two highest offices it has the power to bestow.

Believing this I forward to you for publication the following facts in regard to Mr. Logan and his family, that are facts, not to be questioned by any one. "General John A. Logan's father, who was a physician, built the first brick house in Murphysboro, Jackson county, Ill., and used it as a hotel for many years. No intoxicating drink was ever sold in the building as a beverage.

After his death his widow kept the house several years on the same plan. At her death the daughter took possession, and conducted it as a hotel about twelve years, and on strictly temperance principles. At one time she was offered fifty dollars per month for the privilege of standing room in the office for one bottle to retail drinks to travelers. She could not be bought, as the parental decree had gone forth that no intoxicants should ever be sold under that roof. Mrs. John A. Logan, never treats her guests to any intoxicating drinks."

The history and principles of these two candidates, now becoming known to the whole country, justify the statement that they would be in favor of the people, the masses, the voters, settling the question for themselves, whether to permit that which produces drunkenness, and its many attentant evils; or, that which produces temperance and its invaluable blessings.

LATE SUPPERS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I notice in the plan of the N. W. C. T. U. and in the programs of some of our locals that refreshments are placed at the end of the program. I notice also that we have a department of hygiene and the query arises in my mind how are we to reconcile the two?

Shall we induce our young ladies to study hygiene and then call upon them to serve coffee and cake at 9 or 10 o'clock? If we must pander to appetite at these meetings would it not be better to have tea at the regular hour and have the other exercises afterward, or if preferred have them before in the afternoon?

I have known unions to serve strong coffee after 10 o'clock at night. I must confess that I have occasionally assisted in the serving of late suppers, but I always felt as it seems to me a rum seller must. Can't we educate the people to prefer an intellectual feast?

If all our energy could be spent in providing such an one instead of cooking over a hot stove while preparing our entertainments, it seems to me we could make them well worth attending and be more consistent than some of us are now. CLARA EASTMAN.

GRANDMA'S ANGEL.

"Mamma said: 'Little one go and see
If Grandmother's ready to come to tea.'
I knew I mustn't disturb her, so
I stepped as gently along, tiptoe,
And stood a moment to take a peep—
And there was Grandmother fast asleep!

"I knew it was time for her to wake,
I thought I'd give her a little shake,
Or tap at her door or softly call;
But I hadn't the heart at all—
She looked so sweet and quiet there,
Lying back in her high armchair,
With her dear white hair, and a little smile,
That means she's loving you all the while.

"I didn't make a speck of noise;
I knew she was dreaming of little boys
And girls who lived with her long ago,
And then went to heaven—she told me so.

"I went up close, and didn't speak
One word, but I gave her on her cheek
The softest bit of a little kiss,
Just in a whisper, and then said this:
'Grandmother dear, it's time for tea.'

"She opened her eyes and looked at me,
And said: 'Why, pet, I have just dreamed
Of a little angel who came and seemed
To kiss me lovingly on my face.'
She pointed right at the very place!

"I never told her it was only me;
I took her hand, and we went to tea."

"HELP ME ACROSS, PAPA."

There was anguish in the faces of those who bent over the little white bed, for they knew that Baby May was drifting away from them, going out alone into the dark voyage where so many have been wrested from loving hands; and as they tried in vain to keep her, or even to smooth with their kind solicitude her last brief sorrows, they too experienced in the bitter hour of parting the pangs of death. They only hoped she did not suffer now. The rings of golden hair lay damp and unstirred on her white forehead; the roses were turned to lilies on her cheeks; the lovely violet eyes saw them not, but were upturned and fixed; the breath on the pale lips came and went, fluttered and seemed loath to leave its sweet prison. O the awful, cruel strength of death, the weakness, the helplessness of love! Those who loved her better than life could not lift a hand to avert the destroyer; they could only watch and wait until the end should come. Her merry, ringing laugh would never again gladden their hearts; her little feet would make no more music as they ran pattering to meet them. Baby May was dying, and all the house was darkened and hushed!

Then it was, as the shadows fell in denser waves about us, that she stirred ever so faintly, and our hearts gave a great bound as we thought, "She is better! She will live." Yes, she knew us; her eyes moved from one face to the other, with a dim, uncertain gaze. Oh! how good God was to give her back! How we could praise and bless him all our lives. She lifted one dainty hand—cold—almost pulseless, but better, better—we would have it so—and laid it on the rough, browned hand of the rugged man who sat nearest to her. His eyelids were red with weeping, but now a smile lighted all his bronzed face like a rainbow as he felt the gentle pressure of his little daughter's hand—the mute, imploring touch that meant a question.

"What is it, darling?" he asked, in broken tones of joy and thanksgiving.

She could not speak, and so we raised her on the pretty lace pillow, and her wee white face shone in the twilight like a star or a sweet woodland flower.

She lifted her heavy eyes to his—eyes that even then had the glory and the promise of immortality in them, and reaching out her little wasted arms said, in a weary, flute-like voice:

"Help me across, papa!"

Then she was gone! We held to our breaking hearts the frail, beautiful shell, but she was far away, whither we dare not follow. She had crossed the dark river, and not alone.

"Over the river the boatman pale
Carried another household pet.
She crossed on her bosom her dimpled hands,
And fearlessly entered the phantom bark;
We felt it glide from the silver sands,
And all our sunshine grew strangely dark."

Oh, infinite Father! When we weary and disappointed ones reach our pleading hands to Thee, wilt Thou take us even as the little child, and help us across over the mountains of defeat and the valleys of humiliation into the eternal rest of Thy presence, into the green pastures and beside the still waters, into the city of the New Jerusalem, whose builder and maker is God?—Presbyterian.

THE LITTLE MUSIC-KING.

In the year 1761, any one looking into the sitting-room of the chapel-master of Salzburg might have seen a little figure bent over a table, busily scratching away with pen and ink. The childish hand hardly knew how to hold the pen, but hurried along with marks and dots and strange-looking characters, smeared with ink, and now and then blackened with a huge blot, as the pen dashed from ink to paper with trembling eagerness. The door opened, and the chapel-master entered with a friend; but the little curly head did not stir.

"What are you doing, my son?"

"I am composing a concerto for the harpsichord, papa. I have nearly finished the first part.

The father took the paper, and showed it to his friend. They laughed heartily at the scrawl; but on looking more attentively, the chapel-master said—

"See, it is really composed by rule; but it is too difficult. No one could play it."

"It must be well studied before it is played," said the boy. "See, this is the way it begins." And, running to the harpsichord, he succeeded in playing enough to show what his idea was.

It was, indeed, a musical composition, correctly composed, but containing such great difficulties that an able musician would have found it impossible to execute it on the harpsichord.

The chapel-master was Leopold Mozart; and the little composer, only five years old, was Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, afterward so celebrated in the musical world.

Two years before, he had stood listening at the fireside while his papa gave a music-lesson to his sister Anna.

"Thou teachest Nunnerl, papa. Teach me, too."

"But thou art a baby, Wolferl. Wait, my little man."

But when the lesson was over, and papa gone, the little fellow went to the harpsichord, and standing on tiptoe, groped among the keys, with his baby fingers stretched wide apart, till he found and played a perfect chord. Papa's musical ear caught the sound, and he rushed back into the room to find that his baby, had, indeed, all alone, found his way into the beautiful tone world.

After that music-lessons were for him, too; and he was never far away when Nunnerl was at the harpsichord, but, perched on his father's knee, followed every movement and tone, and often played the lesson after her from memory.

The next year, the family removed to Munich; and the two children were presented at the court, and played before Francis I., the Emperor, to the wonder and delight of all who know them.

Before Wolfgang was eight years old and Anna twelve, they had performed at the courts of Vienna, Paris, Munich and London. At Vienna they saw and played with the little Marie Antoinette; and Wolfgang shocked the fine court ladies by jumping into the lap of the Empress for a kiss. He could play the works of Bach, Handel, and other masters, and in England composed six sonatas, which he dedicated to the Queen.

Returning to France, they travelled about in that country and in Holland; and Wolfgang played on the organs of most of the churches and monasteries.

One evening, being caught in a thunder storm, they took shelter in a monastery. The monks were at supper, and did not know of their guests' arrival. But soon wonderful music began to steal into the hall from the chapel, sometimes sweet and sad, then wild and stormy; now a single voice with pleading tones, again a great chorus of response; now the rolling of the thunder and booming of the wind; and as these died away, a soft, clear, sunny strain, telling that the storm was over. The fathers were in great affright. One and another stole into the dark chapel to listen; and they counted themselves over and over again, to be sure they were all there. But at last a light was brought, the strangers were discovered, and Wolfgang greatly enjoyed their amazement, terror and delight. They could not believe it was he who had played such music, so far beyond what even brother Ambrose played—their fine musician. They thought it was a spell, an enchantment, a holy charm, a miracle. And when at last convinced he was a true mortal boy, they lavished the kindest hospitality on the Mozarts, and bade them godspeed on the morrow, with many a blessing.

At the consecration of a church belonging to the Orphans' Home in Vienna, Mozart composed music for the occasion, and conducted it, although only twelve years of age. At thirteen, he went to Rome with his father; and there, in the Sistine Chapel below the grand painting of "The Last Judgment," which Michel Angelo had painted three hundred years before, he heard the wonderful music of "The Miserere."

This is only performed in Holy Week by the Pope's choir, and no one has ever been allowed to have a copy of the music, or even to see it; but so astonishing was little Mozart's memory, that on his return from the chapel, he not only wrote out the music correctly, but could also sing it perfectly—a feat which made him the musical wonder of the age.—The Best Words.

THE TEMPERANCE STRIKE.—FOR DECLAMATION.

Striking is the order of the day and the fashion of the times.

It is a right thing to strike when one strikes the right thing.

We are on a strike, and shall strike with all our might.

We strike against alcohol, and against all in its service.

We strike for economy, and for the bread of the children made into the father's poison.

We strike for better education to supersede drunkenness, crime and ignorance.

We strike for virtue and law to redeem the nation from the demoralization of drunkards.

We strike against the Black Valley railroad, and smash its engine, juggernant.

We strike for faith and piety to pray for the salvation of perishing drunkards.

We strike against tobacco to save money for the prosecution of the temperance work.

We call upon all good citizens to strike and slay the drunken giant, despair.

"Strike—till the last armed foe expires;
Strike—for your altars and your fires;
Strike—for the green graves of your sires;
God, and your native land."

THE PEBBLE PICNIC.

A LETTER FROM MISS GORDON.

DEAR CHILDREN:—Away over in California, where so many precious things are found, there is a beach about half a mile long washed by the waves of the Pacific ocean, where most beautiful little pebbles lie nestled in the sand, or hidden among the more common stones and shells. This beach is near the town of Pes-ca-de-ro, and for many years people have gathered the pebbles to sell to those who visit the Golden State, and are glad to carry home specimens of all its wonders.

Last year I had the good fortune to go with Miss Willard to California, and we met a pleasant lady who said she had once lived in Pescadero, and had collected a great many of these pebbles, selling them to get money for missions. "O!" I thought, "how I wish the cunning little stones could do some temperance work too." Just a few months after our return home, we had a letter from another good lady we had met in California — Mrs. L. M. Carver — and she told us she was going to live in Pescadero. Mrs. Carver is a great temperance worker, and loves the young folks very much, and I said when I read the letter: Now we can get some Pescadero pebbles for temperance, and the dear little cold water folks, with their bright eyes and nimble fingers are just the ones to find them for us. So I wrote Mrs. Carver my thought, and she had been thinking about it too; and I know you would like to hear of the way they picked the pebbles. On May day the Cold Water Army had a picnic down on the beach, where the grand old ocean comes rolling in with the sunlight dancing on the waves like diamonds. Mrs. Carver told the boys and girls, and big folks too, that this was to be a temperance picnic, and that all the nice stones they could find were to be put into little glass bottles, and sold to help the temperance cause and the W. C. T. U. So they went to work, old and young, down on their knees on the pebbly beach, and they laughed and shouted to each other as they drew the smooth, shining, bright colored pebbles out of their hiding places. Hundreds of little beauties were found that happy May day, and dear little children would come to Mrs. Carver, with their chubby hands full of tiny stones, saying: "Here are some more pebbles to keep men from getting drunk."

Now the stones are far from their home by the Pacific, for Mrs. Carver has come all the way from California to Chicago, and brought them with her. I wish you could see them in the box all wrapped up in cotton to keep them from breaking, each bottle having the name of the one who found them nicely pasted on the outside. The stones are all colors, and some of them are handsome enough to be set in rings and other jewelry.

Mrs. Carver says we may take the pebbles to our National convention at St. Louis next October. Each bottle will be tied with a white ribbon, and will cost about fifty cents. Now, boys and girls, save your pennies, and get mother to buy you a bottle of the cold water pebbles sent you by the little cold water people of Pescadero.

Below are the names of those who went to the pebble picnic, with temperance bottles in their pockets, on May 1, 1884: Your loving friend,

ANNA A. GORDON.

THE CUP OF THE LORD.

ANNIE D. MANSON.

It may not harm, nor you, nor me;
But chance some lamb amidst the flock,
Here, tasting first the fiery draught,
May, at the table of the Lord,
Be bound with chains more hopeless far,
Than all the fetters earth can forge?
Shall such as they, in after years,
Point to the supper of our Lord
As the fell snare which led their tender feet
Into the slippery, dark abyss?
Shall that, which was to be our pledge of faith,
Prove but to them e'en as the gates of hell?

THROUGH THE MISTS.

MRS. GEORGIA HULSE MCLEOD.

"It will be all right when the mists clear away."—Extract from Mrs. Chapin's Letter.

It is true we see not clearly,
For we look up through our tears,
Tears we weep for those loved dearly,
Fair lives wrecked in manhood's years.
But the sun is clearly shining,
Though the blue through clouds seem dim,
God's great love we're scarce divining,
Draws our wand'rers back to Him.

So, sad hearts, be faint no longer,
We are in a Father's hand;
And though wind and wave grow stronger,
He will bring us safe to land.
True, our feet will often weary
Of the thorny path each day,
Soon will end the long march, dreary,
And the mists will clear away.

THE ENGINEER'S REMEDY.

My engineer was a gray-haired, thick-set man of fifty, quiet and unobtrusive, and deeply in love with his beautiful machine. He had formerly run a locomotive, and now took a stationary engine because he could get no employment on the railroads. A long talk with the superintendent of the road from which he had been removed, revealed only one fault in the man's past life—he loved strong drink.

"He is," said my informant, "as well posted on steam as any man on the road; he worked up from train-boy to fireman, from fireman to enigneer, has rendered us valuable services, has saved many lives by his quickness and bravery; but he can not let liquor alone, and for that reason we have discharged him."

In spite of this discouraging report I hired the man. During the first week of his stay I passed through the engine room many times a day, in the course of my factory rounds, but never found aught amiss. The great machine ran as smoothly and quietly as if its bearings were set in velvet; the steel cross-head, the crank-shaft, the brass oil-cups, reflected the morning sun like mirrors; no speck of dust found lodgment in the room. In the "fire-room" the same order and neatness prevailed; the steam-gauges showed even pressure, the water-gauges were always just right, and our daily report showed that we were burning less coal than formerly. The most critical inspection failed to find anything about either engine or boilers that showed the faintest symptoms of neglect or carelessness.

Three weeks passed. The man who had been recommended as "good for five days' work and then two days' drunk," had not swerved a hair from his duty. The gossips were beginning to notice and comment upon the strange affair.

"I should like to speak with you a moment, sir," said he one morning as I passed through his sanctum.

"Well, John, what now!" I said, drawing out my note-book. "Cylinder oil all gone?"

"It's about myself," he replied.

I motioned him to proceed.

"Thirty-two years ago I drank my first glass of liquor," said the engineer, "and for the past ten years, up to the last month, no week has passed without its Saturday-night drunk. During those years I was not blind to the fact that appetite was getting a frightful hold upon me. At times my struggles against the longing for stimulant were earnest. My employers once offered me a thousand dollars if I would not touch liquor for three months, but I lost it; I tried all sorts of antidotes, and all failed. My wife died praying that I might be rescued, yet my promises to her were broken within two days. I signed pledges and joined societies, but appetite was still my master. My employers reasoned with me, discharged me, forgave me, but all to no effect. I could not stop, and I knew it. When I came to work for you I did not expect to stay a week; I was nearly done for; but now!" and the old man's face lighted up with an unspeakable joy, "in this extremity, when I was ready to plunge into hell for a glass of rum, I found a sure remedy! I am saved from my appetite!"

"What is your remedy?"

The engineer took up an open Bible that lay, face down, on the window ledge and read:

"The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin."

THE FOUNDING OF THE BANDS OF MERCY.

A noble English woman, Catherine Smithies, of London, was the founder of the English Bands of Mercy several years ago. The Rev. Thomas Timmins, of Portsmouth, England, the birth place of Charles Dickens, and John Pounds, the founder of Ragged Schools, established a Bands of Mercy nine years ago, not knowing that Mrs. Smithies had organized them before. The American Band of Mercy were organized July 28, 1882, by the Rev. Thomas Timmins, and George T. Angell, Esq., the eminent New England philanthropist, and president of the Massachusetts society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

Mr. Angell became the president of the parent Band of Mercy in America, and Mr. Timmins its secretary. These gentlemen have been unwearied in their labors of love to extend this beneficent organization throughout the United States, and have been signally successful in their unselfish efforts.

Already there are several hundred Bands of Mercy in America, extending from Quebec to Puget Sound, and its membership is beginning to reach into the hundreds of thousands.

In the public schools and Sunday schools of Chicago over forty thousand are already enrolled as members, and the number of Bands is increasing every day. The streets are full of children with the most honorable badge they can wear, the badge of the Band of Mercy, conspicuously displayed. We shall see these Bands organized in every public, private and Sunday school in our city before long.

Open thy lips and speak,
Protect the dumb and weak,
Their cause maintain.
Why should we then abuse?
Why these kind friends misuse?
O! let us never choose
To cause them pain.

The Sunday School Lesson.

July 13.] Third Quarter, No. 2. [1884.

TOPIC; THE ARK IN THE HOUSE.

LESSON TEXT.—II. Samuel 6: 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—He blesseth the habitation of the just. Prov. 3:33.

TIME.—1042 B. C.

PLACE.—Jerusalem and Kirjath-jearim.

1. David was a kingly reformer. Almost his first move was to place the Ark of the Lord in a fitting tabernacle. His purpose was good and pure, but the manner of its execution displeased God. It is very possible for a right thing to be done in a wrong way. It is a sorrowful comment upon poor human nature that even God's behests fail of "that whereto they are sent," through our thoughtlessness or our fault.

2. God has not only appointed a work to be done, but a way in which it shall be done. The Ark was not to be moved save in one fashion. It was to be carried by staves on men's shoulders. David followed the pattern set by the Philistines—a sort of crude reverence—the new cart, and the oxen never before yoked,—but God demanded more sacredness for the Ark of His Covenant. It had been fifty years in the family of Abinadab and lost its hallowed associations to those so unduly familiar with its presence. Uzzah in thoughtless irreverence put out his hand to stay and keep that which God had ordained so divinely sacred that to touch it was profanity. Evil is wrought from want of thought as much as want of heart, and punishment therefor is as certain and timely in the one case as the other.

3. It is evident that David in his eagerness for a better state of things had undertaken the work too much in his own strength. If he had consulted Him whom he was seeking to honor by giving the Ark of His Covenant a suitable tabernacle and resting place, God would surely have given him directions so minute that none of the catastrophes which befell its removal, should have happened. When trouble came David feared and said, "How shall the ark of the Lord come to me?" A question that should have been earlier asked.

4. The courage and faith of Obed-edom is greatly honored. He knew the disasters that attended the presence of the Ark in the camp of the Phillistines and among the men of Bethshemesh, but nevertheless receiving it in love and fear, God blessed him and all his house. Bishop Hall says "The God of heaven will not receive anything from men on free cost. He will pay liberally for his lodging." But it is the spirit of the act that he notes, and not its outward seeming.

"HELP NATURE."

In that charming serial running through the Century magazine, "Dr. Sevier," the philosophic physician of the story, gives to all philanthropists a prescription that bears on it face, the mark of more than technical wisdom.

A sympathetic young fellow has just met him with a subscription paper drawn up and circulated for the benefit of children orphaned by the plague. The doctor in a volcanic mood, breaks out against the folly of dealing with results and ignoring causes. He makes violent plea for deeper digging about the roots of evils and expending force where it will effect most, and though he practically vitiates his own teaching by furtively setting down the largest subscription of the benevolent paper, he winds up his exhortation which has been hot and scathing often, with this gentle admonition that may well be heeded by all who engage in philanthropic reforms; "Do as a wise physician does—help Nature."

The soundness of this advice depends on the truth, that as in the physical so in the spiritual domain, a power works for health, against disease—for righteousness, against sin. It does not strain our orthodoxy to receive this truth. God is in the world today by His Spirit, overruling where He cannot rule—counteracting where we rebel against His direct action, making things most evil in themselves "work together" in His own mysterious chemistry for the utmost possible good.

As the wise physician of today works along the curative line of Nature's potent processes, so all who would make the world better of its sorrow and its sin must fall in with the order of God's reparative movements, is the true teaching of Dr. Sevier's prescription. We can all accept it to advantage. It is the frictionless method of reform. It makes working for humanity as easy and natural as the falling of the dew or the shining of the sun. It is doing because one cannot help doing.

And there is this immense advantage in it that it does not awaken rebellion, or if it seem to do so for a time, it bears such cogent reason in its naturalness that rebels soon lay down their arms. Nature has its occasional convulsions, attendant upon its new births, and we call them phenomena when they are really processes. So in moral economy there is upheaval and apparent cataclysm working out beneficence and restoring to normal place and power that which is out of the way. "Helping Nature" therefore in reform may not always mean the quiet application of resistless force, for noise and violence occasionally become the necessary accompaniment of dislodging evil. The thunder storm in July has its natural mission and accomplishment no less than the silent metamorphosis of the springtime. Thus much to account for the often seemingly coercive and clashing methods of reform.

It is no less true, however, that the proportion of thunder to dew and sunshine is infinitesimal in both worlds, and in "helping Nature" we must recognize that "the still small voice" speaks ever, its quiet monotone often unnoted and unheeded, but nevertheless accomplishing its reiterative impact on the world's brain. It is not overweening conceit of ourselves to rejoice in the fact that the W. C. T. U., born in the throes of whirlwind and cyclone, develops along the line of Nature's processes. Take up its Annual Leaflet, and note its division of labor and plan of work. There is Organization, quiet, systematic, effective; Prevention, wise, cautious, gentle; Education, high of aim and full of inspiration; evangelization, holy, sweetening, purifying; Social efforts, brightening life's pathway like sunshine and letting in the light on dark places; Legal work, with its occasional upheaval and earthquake; an epitome of God's plan in nature and in morals. Who shall believe that He has not inspired the plan so like His own that the gainsaying world is forced to view it askance, and say, "They builded better than they knew."

THE LAST OF THE MURPHY MEETINGS.

An audience of two thousand persons assembled in Farwell Hall last Friday night, the occasion being a grand temperance meeting to wind up the Murphy campaign in this city. The platform was filled with temperance workers, notable among them being Mr. Murphy, Miss Willard, Rev. Dr. Kennard and wife, Mrs. T. B. Carse, Mrs. L. A. Hagans, Mr. J. B. Hobbs, Miss Helen L. Hood, Mr. W. W. O'Brien and daughter, Rev. W. T. Stowe and wife, Col. Clarke, Deacon Willard, J. H. Monroe and many others. The Rev. Dr. Kennard made the first address in which he announced that 11,000 pledges had been signed in the seven weeks of Mr. Murphy's labor. Such a bit of joyful news brought down the house, showing how well disposed a wicked world is after all to the triumph of goodness and temperance. Prof. Lyman and Mr. Stowe were the next speakers, each referring in a manly style to the change in their lives and purposes. Mr. J. B. Hobbs, the Prohibition candidate for governor of Illinois, was loudly called for and made a clear cut statement of his sympathy with both moral and legal temperance reform. Next came Miss Willard, whose eloquent tracing of Mr. Murphy's successful career was in her very best vein. She paid handsome tribute to the third party and its gallant and honored representative upon the platform. Then Dr. Kennard introduced Mr. O'Brien, eloquent by the divine right of Irishmen, full of happy laudation of Francis Murphy and genial fellowship with "temperance folk" generally. And after him came Mr. Murphy himself who was never better in looks, spirit and ability to hold and sway an audience. His speech was a fitting close to the weeks of faithful work for the redemption of souls which has been so blessedly crowned with visible results.

The scene at the breaking up of the assembly was indescribable; men crowding forward to shake Mr. Murphy's hand and to sign the pledge, women blessing him and weeping grateful tears, loving workers cheering him on, and all carrying away a memory that will enrich both time and eternity. God be thanked for the happy homes, the new hearts, the redeemed souls that are the outcome of the Murphy campaign in Chicago. And God bless Francis and Edward Murphy, here and everywhere, now and forever.

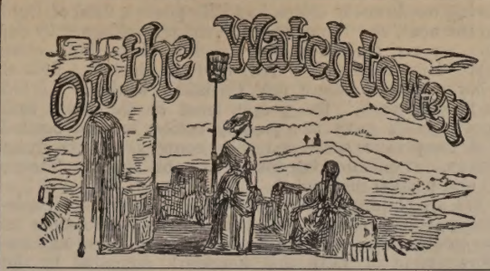
Mr. W. T. Stowe who was one of these speakers at Farwell Hall on Friday night, is one of the converts of the meetings. He was for many years a pastor in the Universalist denomination, serving also one or two Unitarian churches, but succumbed to the power of all-conquering appetite in whose thralldom he has suffered for the past two or three years. He is a man of cultivated as well as bright intellect, and proposes to use his gifts in the service of his Master. He was baptized in the Rev. Dr. Kennard's church a short time since, thus returning to the faith of his father who was a Baptist minister in New England, and will probably be again installed in the pulpit. He is open to engagements as a temperance lecturer, and with his gifts of mind and heart, together with the teachings of bitter experience, cannot fail to be a speaker of great power and interest. He is a strong Prohibitionist as well as a believer in moral suasion, and in a quiet, argumentative, thoughtful speech he will do fine execution among cultured people, as well as reach the hearts and convictions of tempted men.

That the department of work among soldiers and sailors is doing good and increasing service, is evident in many ways. Letters from outlying posts testify to the value of all that has been done and contain great encouragement for the future. A lieutenant writes to Mrs. McClees from Fort Missoula, Montana, as follows:

"A temperance society has been started at this post and I am doing what I can to encourage the men of the garrison to abstain from drink. I was at the lecture of Miss Willard, and am not surprised at her success, for her ways please God. One officer, not now of this post, has not tasted liquor since her visit to Missoula, now so long since.

"You are not unfamiliar with the sad history of intemperance in the army. Having been nearly twenty-two years in the service I certainly should know something of the dreadful havoc of this fearful curse, this greatest enemy God has on earth."

And now, this earnest, God-fearing man, asks for literature for the company that he commands, as well as for a library which the little temperance society has just started. May God put it in the hearts of Christian people to open their purses for this missionary effort to supply the forts in the far away territories with good temperance books. Who will respond to this call, and send money or books for Fort Missoula? Let all who have such generous purpose, address Mrs. Sarah A. McClees, Yonkers, N. Y.



The Y. M. C. A. of San Francisco gave Mrs. Judith Ellen Foster a fine reception in the hall of the association on the evening of June 13, and the Sunday thereafter Mrs. Foster lectured in the same hall.

A kitchen garden drill was given on June 14 by the W. C. T. U. of Cleveland, for the benefit of the kitchen garden school. The beautiful programs furnished the songs of the occasion in full, very much to the pleasure of the finely entertained audience. Mrs. Prather, I hear, was the "moving cause."

* * *

Several medical women of Wisconsin on being refused admission to the state medical association were heard to say, "If the members of the association don't want us, there is not benefit enough to be derived to warrant making a contest about it." Which reminds me that I heard a loyal Methodist sister say the other day of the action of the general conference, in refusing to license women to preach: "Well if they want women going over the country teaching Methodist doctrine without supervision or authority, I'm willing."

* * *

I am not much given to advertising military schools "for the peace of my people," but when I hear of one whose principal takes so noble a position as does Col. Hyatt, of Chester, Pa., how can I help it? At the alumni dinner of the academy, Col. Hyatt absented himself, as did others of the faculty, because the alumni insisted upon serving wine with their dinner. Courtesy alone would have seemed to demand acquiescence in the views of the principal.

* * *

Mrs. Col. D. W. C. Duncan of Charles City, Iowa, is going to Indian territory, and will act as superintendent of Scientific Instruction for that territory. Mrs. D. is the wife of Col. D. W. C. Duncan, a Cherokee lawyer of great talent and graduate of Dartmouth College. He and his brother, who is a minister at Talequah (the capital), are among the most influential men of the Five Nations.

* * *

Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens of San Francisco has recently been in the east and southeast, Baltimore and thereabouts, doing excellent temperance work. The Baltimore papers write her up in glowing style.

* * *

Dr. Elizabeth Boynton Harbert is the new title of the editor of the "Woman's Kingdom," given her by the Wesleyan Female College, Cincinnati—Doctor of Philosophy.

* * *

The Patriot, of San Francisco, claims the first prize offered by the English reformers for the best temperance drink. It is not its own invention or discovery, but we all agree that it, the drink, ought to have the first prize—for it is—WATER.

* * *

A reunion of the sanitary and Christian commission workers, and army chaplains will be held July 12 and 13, at Lake Bluff. Mrs. Wittenmeyer, the former president of the N. W. C. T. U., will be there, and give her thrilling story of camp and hospital life.

* * *

The Hon. Mr. Hunter, of Rapides Parish, La., made a fine speech in the state legislature on the best way of discussing the evils resulting from the liquor traffic. He evidently believes in prohibition.

* * *

A gentleman in New England has promised a gold watch to each member of his Sunday school class who will sign the triple pledge and keep it till his majority. Up to this time he has been called upon to "deliver" six of the watches.

* * *

I hear very pleasant things of Mrs. Florence Williams, of Los Angeles, Cal., who is a daughter of G. P. R. James, the noted novelist, and a lecturer of great ability. I hope she will add a temperance lecture to her repertoire.

* * *

Mrs. Helen Rich, the brilliant lecturer on temperance and other topics, literary and philanthropic, is in Chicago with friends, and ought to be heard in this great city of good people and bad people—saloons and churches, wealth and poverty, heroism and crime—this city of extremes.

* * *

I hope to live to see the day when so good and wholesome (usually) a paper as the Chicago Evening Journal will not advertise saloons and their attractions right in the midst of reading matter, where "our boys" cannot help reading it. It does not make the trouble a bit less that the Journal calls them "sample rooms." The boys are tempted the more to "sample" them.

* * *

The gift of $10 by an Indian Sunday school on some reservation "to Christianize the whites" was reported at the International Sunday school convention. Was that because Christian "whites" sent fire-water into their camps?

* * *

A new song is in—not my mouth, for I am no warbler, but my ear, and it is a charming one—the words by Mrs. S. M. I. Henry and the music by that singer of sweet songs, Mrs. Clinton Smith of Springfield. It is entitled "Joy" and it rings out joyously.

* * *

Somebody who knows tells me that hemorrhage of the lungs or stomach may be quickly stopped by small doses of salt instead of the whisky so often used.

* * *

I hear of an old fashioned Fourth of July celebration at Evanston in honor of Iowa's first Independence Day. Of course the W. C. T. U. are at the bottom of it, and I hope will come out on top, for the proceeds are to go toward a Murphy campaign.

* * *

Mr. Francis Murphy is now open to engagements, having closed his successful meetings in Chicago. Miss Helen L. Hood of 161 La Salle street, is to make his appointments hither and yon over the entire country. "No pent up Utica contracts his powers."

* * *

Mrs. Nelly Bayley will give four more chalk talk entertainments in the month of July. Those wishing her services will please communicate with her at once.

* * *

Governor St. John is one of the attractions at Henry C. Bowen's Fourth of July celebration at his home in Woodstock, Conn. I wonder if it is "significant of much." The Independent is "semi-detached" at present.

* * *

Mr. Bowen always has a temperance "feature" in his program. Last year it was Senator Henry W. Blair with John B. Gough thrown in as "fireworks."

* * *

Mrs. Foster's face is set eastward and homeward. July 6 and 7 will find her at Cheney, Washington territory—14th at Salt Lake City and August 1, will bring her home.

* * *

Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, Rockford, Illinois, is doing effective work for the W. C. T. U. with her new lecture to Christian parents. Everybody is thrice glad that this gifted woman is once more in the field, with health and strength enough to warrant continuance in well doing. I expect to hear of her work in other states than this.

* * *

Mrs. H. M. Tracy Cutler who has an article on the third page of this week's Union Signal, is one of the best speakers for prohibition and woman's ballot. Woman's Christian Temperance Unions of southern Illinois, you will not live up to your privileges if you do not hear her this year, while she is in your vicinity—i. e. at Cobden.

On Duty.

OHIO.

ADDRESS OF WELCOME TO THE STATE CONVENTION AT CINCINNATI, BY MRS LOUISE E. FISHER, PRESIDENT OF LYTLE HALL W. C. C. T. U., CINCINNATI.

SISTERS OF OHIO:—In this great God-given work of gospel temperance, we welcome you to the Queen City of his grand old state! Beautiful Cincinnati bids you welcome with its suburbs of loveliness, its parks and halls, its churches and gardens—peers of the Bois de Bologne of Paris, or Regent's Park of London!

Christian Cincinnati bids you welcome—thrice welcome! Trinity Methodist Episcopal church, from its pastor who has most heartily supported this temperance work, to its trustees, stewards, officials and laymen, all join in a royal hearty welcome!

Wicked Cincinnati brings you no word of welcome. You bring no tidings of good to her. Demetrius-like she sees only her craft in danger by your work of reform. Great is their King Gambrinus! Great the revenue from their traffic in human souls! To no place could you more fitly come. No city needs you more, for it has almost deserved the name of Sin-sin-naughti instead of the euphonious Cincinnati.

Wickedness here of every description has been rampant. Our thirty miles of open saloons invite the unwary within their doors—the paraphernalia of enticement more and more alluring as the population has increased and competition abetted.

Ohio today is not the Ohio of old; the hearts of her daughters thrill at the very name of Ohio—a state so wonderful in its resources, as to be an independency for its maintenance, even though isolated from all others. A banner state, a mother of presidents as well as of generals, but better still the mother of that wonderful movement, the temperance crusade, whose decennial was celebrated in December last, and anniversary commemorated this afternoon of which it has been said, "None greater since Pentecostal flame first sat upon the heads of saints."

This temperance agitation is creating great changes in our beautiful Ohio. Ah! well do we remember how less than a year ago our pulses beat as we waited anxiously for the result of the months of work for the vote on the prohibitory amendment. How gallantly our clergy worked! At the noon hour Lytle Hall, headquarters for the Hamilton County Prohibition Alliance, presented a scene of busy life at that time when it could better claim a little time from the ministers and merchants. The press lent us but little aid, until it could hardly be known just where it stood, in this great question of reform.

Cleveland of course led the van, headed as it was by our beloved Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge. She and her faithful bodyguard of efficient secretaries alone know how arduous and exhausting the toil by day and by night. But it was for God and home and native land, and eternity itself can only record their work. All over our beloved state were women at work and 323,189 votes, was a grand showing for prohibitory sentiment and woman's work. The lecturers you sent us, Campbell and Finch and Reynolds and Bain, left grand records behind them of growth in public sentiment for our glorious cause.

Women of Ohio, I congratulate you! A decade of years has wrought a great change in our beloved state, for in these years has been going on one of the grandest moral struggles the world has ever seen. A prominent politician says "It is the heaviest blow the kingdom of darkness has had since the resurrection." Aye! what strides has not been made in the last twelve months? The question of today at our political conventions is the temperance question. At our general conference of the M. E church lately assembled at Philadelphia, the report from the committee on temperance says, "The most important question of reform now before the public is that which relates to the prevention of intemperance and the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors to be used as a beverage;" urges the formation of juvenile temperance societies and organization of annual conference temperance societies in all the annual conferences. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is an organized power in the land; under the banner of prohibition we are marching on; we hear the still small voice "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit saith the Lord of Hosts;" our Joshua leads us and while we stand for God and home and native land, are factors in the solving of the greatest problem of the age. This warfare is just as great and glorious as that of our brothers in the late war, for we are fighting the forces of evil to preserve the peace and purity of the home; bringing all our resources of wit and tact and endurance and self sacrifice to bear against this gigantic power of sin, for the heaviest, deadliest curse of the home is the drink. It is a long fight, that sometimes wearies brain and heart, but our God is leading us and we rejoice in the promise of the crusade psalm "The way of the wicked shall be turned upside down"! Five hundred unions are dotting our beautiful Ohio throughout the length and breadth of the state, showing our Joshua is both our vanguard and our rearguard. His plans reach out in the future, one little step taken in loving obedience to His call and He pours a flood of light on the next, and the next, until, though maligned by our foes, we are trusted by our friends. Like Luther we say, "Here we stand." Ah! never so glorious a field of labor opened up before any Christian worker. All bid us "Go forward," the people trust us, the press that once scarcely gave us a passing notice, is now flooded with temperance sentiments, the country expects great things, our enemies tremble, let us not fail now "to go up and possess the land."

We are children of the churches, are voicing its Christianity. We welcome you here, our beloved sisters in this godly work; we want your words of cheer and encouragement of faith and heroism! Appalled by the evils of Cincinnati, we want your heart of fire to touch us and inspire us with your courage and enthusiasm. At the last convention nine years ago held here, you marched five hundred strong to our grand esplanade, kneeling there in public solemn consecration with our dear Mrs. Vickers, invalid three years since, sitting at my left tonight in her invalid chair from her sick room, to God and gospel temperance were filled with His Holy Spirit. A blockade of an opposite order but lately disgraced our fair city, when men and boys filled with the spirit evoked by liquor caused bloodshed and murder, one fair young life blotted out among the many others, bringing sorrow and anguish to a mother's heart.

Dear Ohio! Your children gather here today to do you honor. Only eternity can tell the influence for good. Year after year you send from your sheltering arms your daughters for this Christian temperance work, and though the years are leaving their finger points upon many of us, our ranks depleted by some brave, noble hearts who have fallen by the way, yet others come quickly forward to take their places and life grows purer, nobler, grander, with a broader meaning, as we press on "still achieving, still pursuing, learn to labor and to wait."

God only knows the paths that have been trod, or how weary it is for some tired feet, but the grand lessons of life's work, and responsibility are learned that it is not alone to enjoy, but to live for others, thus making life a deep, grand reality with a halo of joy around it, bringing back the very romance of youth.

We hail you as representatives of a new moral estate which is rising up to take its place as a peer of other great moral movements. It is woman roused to redress a moral evil. This church is honored, this city is honored, this age, this 19th century, this grand old year 1884, by such a convention! In the name of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Cincinnati and vicinity, of Walnut Hills, with its faithful membership, and our adjoining state of Kentucky, we bid you welcome! thrice welcome! We hope much from you. It has been said, "that the floods and the riots have been the only successes this year in Cincinnati." We hope the impressions for good, the impetus for work will be most effectual from this goodly company of splendid women.

Allow me in closing to quote a wonderful prophecy written over forty years ago by the father of one of our gifted temperance workers, and in the light of today, before this convention assembled, realize its thrilling significance.

> Oh! American women! Arise in your might,
> To you, we must look for the dawning of light,
> To you we must come and assistance implore,
> Your influence, your faith, your prayers, aye more—
> May God speed the day, and speed it He will,
> When your hand shall destroy the snake of the still.

The following was among the resolutions adopted at the state convention:

Resolved, That the W. C. T. U. of Ohio, in convention assembled, send united and tender greeting to our beloved recording secretary, Miss F. Jennie Duty, of Cleveland; and to the family our earnest sympathy in the trial of her long illness resulting from her wonderful work as a leader in our great army; that we earnestly rejoice in the good tidings of her gradual improvement and unitedly pray for her perfect restoration to the wide circle of Christian work and Christian friends to whom she is so essential and so dear.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA.

THE UNION SIGNAL shows that no one has written you of how much we have enjoyed Mrs. Foster. A fine reception was given her at Mrs. Dr. Glenn's beautiful residence upon her arrival from Southern California. Mrs. Glenn's parlors, indeed the whole house, was upon that occasion lined with flowers. Music also filled the spacious rooms; a hundred or more ladies came upon short notice to welcome Mrs. Foster, and her golden words to us upon that day we shall never forget.

Two of the largest churches in San Francisco opened their pulpits on the next day, May 11, to this most gifted woman. In the morning she spoke to fully one thousand people in Rev. Mr. Dill's church, Methodist. In the evening at Plymouth Congregational, Rev. Mr. Noble's, a larger audience yet greeted her.

At San Leandro, the W. C. T. U. held a quarterly convention on May 13, an all day and evening session. This community is scattered for miles around, but the church was filled at evening session to hear Mrs. Foster on "Constitutional Prohibition." Mrs. Sturtevant Peet, president, presided with grace and dignity.

On the evening of May 18, Mrs. Foster spoke to an overflowing house out at the mission. Then she left us for San Jose, Hollister, etc.

On June 1, Howard street opened its doors and hearts to her, only it was morning service and people do not crowd the churches to hear temperance in the morning, in San Francisco. In the evening of that day, Mrs. Foster spoke at Rev. Mr. Kincaid's (Baptist) church. Here she had a house full, and the W. C. T. U. had a good collection. Indeed that has been a feature of all her lectures in this city. During the past week she has been at Chico, Woodland, Sacramento, etc. She returns to San Francisco and will attend a reception tendered by the Young Men's Christian Association to W. C. T. U. for Mrs. J. Ellen Foster. She will give a gospel temperance talk to young men at this same hall on Sabbath, June 8, and in the evening will speak at Rev. Mr. McKenzie's church.

We women of California think Mrs. Foster is wonderful. Before her arrival we had thought there was only one bright, very bright star in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union firmament, but now we think there are two. We can't believe there are more because we havn't seen them.

L. P. WILLIAMS,
Rec. Sec. Cal. W. C. T. U.

VERMONT.

CALEDONIA COUNTY INSTITUTE.

We have, like some other counties in the state, organized ourselves as a county union. Any local union may become auxiliary by the payment of ten cents per member. By this means, and by occupying ground at the county fair, we are able to raise funds for speakers at our institute and for other county work.

Our program consisted of addresses, papers, remarks and question boxes upon the work of the departments, closing with an address by Mrs. Barney.

The following resolutions embodying the plan of work for the coming year were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That returning thanks to God for His mercy and guidance during the past year, and imploring the same for the year to come, we prosecute our work with renewed zeal.

Resolved, That we recommend to local unions the circulation of the voter's pledge issued by the N. W. C. T. U.

Resolved, That we recommend that a county superintendent of fair work be appointed, and request the appointment of local superintendents of the same by each union to co-operate with her.

Resolved, That deploring the prevailing use of tobacco we will endorse methods to secure the prohibition of its sale to minors.

Resolved, That believing that the enforcement of our prohibitory law requires that the ballot be placed in the hands of woman we endorse the position taken by the N. W. C. T. U. for home protection.

Resolved, That we recommend THE UNION SIGNAL to all of our workers.

Resolved, That believing that the offering of prizes to the schools of our county would be an effective method of furthering the temperance cause we do hereby appropriate such a sum as the executive committee see fit to be offered to the pupils in our public schools and academies for the best essay upon the two evils, alcohol and tobacco; the essays to be written under the supervision of their teachers, the same to be examined by a committee appointed by the county W. C. T. U., and the successful essays to be read at the next annual meeting of Caledonia county W. C. T. U. when premiums will be awarded.

The next and last resolution contained the customary vote of thanks to all who had rendered assistance.

With such a person as Miss Laura Moore for president we look for grand results in Caledonia county.

CLARA EASTMAN, Sec.

OREGON.

There was a complaint in our convention, held at Albany June 4 and 5, from the representative of headquarters, Mrs. Mary Leavitt, that we scarcely ever represented ourselves on your pages. Oregon has been rather considered out of the world heretofore, but her W. C. T. U. means to be one of the methods of bringing her into it. This is only a two year old convention, but the infant is I assure you well on its feet—past the tottering stage—and has gained a free use of "mother tongue!"

Mrs. Leavitt, whom we have already learned to love, praised us for promptitude in despatch of business at convention, and for the great numerical growth of unions during the year. We number thirty-three today, and if all our six district organizers work as heartily as Mrs. Mary Edwards in her No. 3, notwithstanding her feeble health, we shall double that number by next year. A minister among "Friends" on the Sabbath, she has ministered well on week days for the Oregon W. C. T. U. Our state officers do double work, for beside their state duties they are the life and soul of their local union in our one big city, Portland.

So our superintendent of evangelistic department, Mrs. Stubbs, does the work of an evangelist as well at the Seaman's chapel and Portland Home. At her gospel meetings several wandering sheep have been brought in to the fold of Christ.

Our beloved president, Mrs. H. K. Hines, was re-elected unanimously, which shows in what estimation we hold her.

Mrs. Leavitt's charge to us was to work hard between this and the time our legislature meets for public school scientific instruction. In this we are headed by our indefatigable superintendent, Mrs. M. E. Hoxter, of Forest Grove.

L. A. NASH, Press Supt.

A FEW WORDS FROM ASTORIA.

The W. C. T. U. laborers seem to be nearly ubiquitous. The mantle of the traditional itinerant seems to have fallen on the shoulders of the devoted women of the land, banded together in gospel temperance work to help save our tempted, imperilled and fallen ones.

An earnest company of ladies constitute the Portland

W. C. T. U., and throughout Oregon the unions are steadily increasing and promoting a most healthy and practical temperance sentiment by the varied methods and appliances belonging to, and operated by, their growing membership.

Mrs. A. R. Riggs, the president of the Portland W. C. T. U. and Mrs. Chaplain Stubbs, the state superintendent of the evangelistic department, took a trip to Astoria, at the mouth of the Columbia river, about one hundred miles from here and spent the Sabbath, June 15, in that city, the Venice of the northwest coast.

By invitation of the Y. M. C. A. of Astoria, Mr. E. S. Holden, president, these two ladies held a very interesting service at three p. m., presided over by Mrs. W. W. Parker, the president of the Astoria W. C. T. U. Mrs. Riggs set forth the purposes and methods of the W. C. T. Unions of the United States. She was listened to with marked attention. Mrs. Stubbs then read scripture selections, and in a crisp and felicitous address of about twenty minutes vividly portrayed the possibilities and opportunities of loving service and sacrifice for the salvation of the fallen, and the enlistment of the unfallen.

By invitation Chaplain Stubbs spoke for about five minutes on the power and fellowship of the Christian temperance workers and the compatibility of the distinctive elements of the W. C. T. Unions.

Afterwards Mrs. Chaplain Stubbs conducted a Bethel service on board the Jessie Jamieson, of Liverpool, then lying at Kinney's wharf where she is taking in canned Columbia salmon for Europe.

Rev. J. McCormac, the chaplain of the American Seamen's Friend Society, had made arrangements for this service. As the day was rainy the services were held in the cabin, which was filled by sympathizing ladies and seafaring men. In the midst of Mr. Stubbs' discourse, a seamen, somewhat under the influence of liquor, pressed his way into the cabin, holding a pledge in his hand, and in loud tones said "Let me in, I want to sign this pledge before God and in the presence of that good lady," pointing to Mrs. Stubbs.

The first officer of the vessel, fearing that the man's boisterous manner and loud words would disconcert or annoy the leader of the meeting, endeavored to hold the man back. But he cried out the more lustily "You let me alone. I want to sign this pledge before God and that good lady."

He was accordingly admitted and after the reading of the pledge and a season of prayer by Rev. J. McCormac, the man signed the pledge. He then insisted that "Bill," his shipmate, should be informed of what he had done. "Bill" was called for, and entered the cabin greatly overjoyed that Captain L. Maier had taken the pledge, and immediately took the pledge also, and was joined by four others.

That meeting will never be forgotten. It was an occasion that indelibly engraved itself upon the hearts of those present. It was found at the close of the meeting that Captain Maier was the son of a distinguished clergyman in Europe, where he himself had received an academic and theological training for the ministry of his father's church. Our entire Pacific sea-board is strewn with the wrecks of just such persons, who have been pushed out to this northwest coast by the spirit of adventure, and have been overcome by the demon of intemperance.

In the evening these same ladies held a union service in the Congregational church, Rev. Mr. Wood, pastor, which was also presided over by Mrs. W. W. Parker. This meeting was in the especial interest of the Bands of Hope, and for the particular benefit of the young. Mrs. Stubbs and Mrs. Riggs addressed the meeting, and nearly thirty persons signed the pledge, and thus prepared the way for the organization of a Band of Hope at Astoria.

Altogether this was a red letter day and illustrates the wide range of woman's helpfulness and usefulness. Let all our sisters go and do likewise. PORTLANDER.

PORTLAND.—For a few days past there have been whisperings of a good time coming, among the ladies of the W. C. T. U. of this city, the substance of which was publicly expressed in the hall occupied by this useful temperance organization last evening. At the hour appointed by the knowing ones, quite a large gathering of the friends of Mrs. A. R. Riggs assembled at 8 p. m., bearing with them their gifts for the occasion. The tables were bountifully furnished and decorated with flowers. The object of the gathering was to give formal expression of the high esteem in which Mrs. A. R. Riggs, the laborious president of the Portland W. C. T. U., is held by its membership. Mrs. Riggs was, by guile, brought into the hall and introduced to its happy occupants. An introductory song, "Together let us sweetly live," was sung. In a neat little congratulatory speech, Mrs. Chaplain Stubbs, on behalf of the ladies present, referred to the work of Mrs. Riggs in the cause of temperance, and expressed for the union their thorough appreciation of the work. Mrs. Riggs, with considerable emotion, responded to the address. It was manifestly a genuine surprise, and the lady was greatly affected by by this unlooked-for and cordial expression of confidence and good will. Following a season of pleasant social intercourse and hand shaking, interspersed with music, the company sat down to refreshments.

Mrs. Riggs sustains an enviable position among her fellow laborers in the temperance field, and will no doubt work with augmented zeal because of this public recognition.

MICHIGAN.

GREENVILLE. — I have had such a rich treat in accompanying our dear Lucia E. F. Kimball, of Chicago, for a few days past, that I must tell you about it. In Ionia, at the Michigan State Sunday School Convention I heard her speak in the afternoon before the children, and then again in the evening, to a large audience. The next evening, and also on Friday afternoon and evening, she addressed the people of Greenville, giving in three days, five lectures, or addresses.

Her manner and language is faultless, and very inspiring. She was well liked, and will be met with large audiences if she ever comes to Greenville again. Her heart and soul are in the good work, and I hope a long and useful life is before her.

MRS. JAS. W. BELKNAP.

VIRGINIA.

RICHMOND.—The ladies of the W. C. T. U. of Richmond for the first time observed flower mission day, and we feel encouraged by the results of our efforts, to continue its observance. Some little incidents occurred which were very touching.

In some remarks made by our president, Mrs. W. H. Pleansants, she spoke of how the sight of so many prisoners affected her and very earnestly expressed the hope that the little messages from God's word might be the means of leading many precious souls to the Savior. We had our hymns selected to sing, but when she had finished speaking they had one of their own selection ready which was "I hear Thy welcome voice, that calls me Lord to Thee." It seemed an answer to her words.

Another: at the alms house one woman called the ladies back to tell them the passage on her card was the same one that fifteen years ago was the means of convincing her of sin, and leading her to Christ. So we feel very thankful for the privilege of going to these places with these precious words of comfort, and trust the Lord will bless His word in leading many into the light.

We were unable to secure flowers enough for all, but our ladies will visit the jail with scripture text cards and papers this week. Some of our ladies are much interested, and are doing all they possibly can to interest others in this grand work.

WISCONSIN.

WAUPUN.—You will want to know of the success of our Prison Flower Mission. We depended entirely upon home workers, and as the warden and chaplain were both willing to assist, and clergymen and ladies entered into the same with readiness, we did not lack for interesting material for our mission service.

That the prisoners were, at least at the close of the exercises, eager for the flowers, all could see. The chaplain, who is obliged to examine the letters of the convicts, says no one could fail to see that the work had been well received and had done good. One boy writes to his mother very thankfully of this remembrance by the W. C. T. U., and says liquor has been the cause of most of his trouble.

A number of personal friends doubted the wisdom of having a flower mission for such a low and vicious class, and we came near giving it up, but are now very glad we did not. Tears were a tribute from many, and one whom nothing has moved since her incarceration, and who is in "for life," broke down completely with the flowers in her hand.

Blessed mission! We had many good wishes, and we hope they were realized in giving new hopes and better resolves to at least some.

The following paper was written by a prisoner and published in our local paper:

Last Sunday was indeed a pleasant day for the four hundred and odd prisoners at the prison, and one which will probably serve as a day to reckon from in future. The ladies of the W. C. T. U., through their representative, Mrs. E. Hillyer, held what they term a flower service. The exercises consisted of a brief address by Warden Carter; singing by Mrs. D. P. Doty and the prison choir and a choir of little maidens; an address by Mrs. Hillyer, setting forth the object of the service in a manner that enlisted the most earnest attention from her audience, and a comparison of prison worship now and a century ago by Chaplain Kutchin. The singing by Mrs. Doty of "Rock of Ages" as a solo, was rendered in her well known and exceedingly pleasant manner, the rich, me low tones of her beautiful voice seeming to carry the "boys" as in a trance; and when she sang "Scatter Seeds of Kindness" every convict was willing and anxious to pronounce her the loveliest little lady in the land. Then the singing of the children, conducted and arranged by Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Kutchin, met the most hearty approval, as was attested by the generous applause.

At the close of the service each prisoner was presented with a bouquet of pretty flowers, attached to which was a card bearing a scriptural motto, and altogether it was a flowery day at the prison.

Chaplain Kutchin's happy manner in comparing the first prison religious service—when the prisoners were drawn up facing a cannon—and the present, when the cannon had been banished for flowers, met the loudest approval of any feature of the entertainment.

The writer heard many remarks among the "boys" upon the entertainment, and one and all were thankful to the ladies for their trouble, and expressed themselves as very grateful to the ladies of the W. C. T. U., and particularly to Mrs. Hillyer.

Col. Carter's evident desire to give his gray-suited boys a chance to reap all the benefits of good advice and generous example is much to his credit, and must necessarily lead to the best of feeling and a correct understanding between him and the large number of persons whose welfare he evidently recognizes as a duty.

JANESVILLE.—We had a most interesting gospel temperance meeting Sunday afternoon June 22 in place of the usual meeting of the Y. M. C. A. The room was full. Young men stood in the hall all through the meeting, looking in at the door and listening, so we think the exercises must have been thought pretty good. Our first speech, by Rev. C. M. Pullen, of Christ (Episcopal) church, was good, a real gospel talk. Dr. Hodge pleased, as he always does. His illustration of snow flake by snow flake checking a mighty engine was refreshing, to say the least, on such a day. He of course likened our little scraps of work in all directions, and from all directions, to the flake by flake. Hon. James Sutherland spoke favoring prohibition. Speaking of saving the Republic he accidentally said Republicans. He corrected himself at once, but I thought he need not have minded, as I don't know of any class who need more saving.

Our "Father Cheney," and his dear, good wife rode eight miles in the broiling sun to help us. He is seventy-three years old. They sang "Where is my boy tonight?" for us. They always please.

The Y. M. C. A. have invited us to hold these meetings every month, and we shall endeavor to do so. Their president is always ready to help us in any way he can.

We had a Fourth of July celebration under contemplation, but the business men—and business men in this case means saloon men, or those affiliating with them, chiefly—were ahead of us. We think we may have cold water to treat the thirsty with along the route of procession, and through the day. Our celebration we shall have later in the season.

Our temperance school is prospering finely. It was so very hot that there was a falling off in number at our last meeting, but about seventy-five were present, all told. We always have some young men to assist us in teaching. We are to observe June 29 as a temperance day in all our Sabbath schools, the Congregational and Baptist schools uniting. E. P. L.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

CHENEY.—The town dates from latter part of August, 1880, the Band of Hope from March 5, 1881, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Nov. 30, 1881. Both were organized by Mrs. Lucy A. Switzer. Regular meetings are held weekly by each. Papers are furnished the territorial penitentiary and the county jail. Tracts and leaflets are distributed at public meetings, on the cars, at the Emigrant House (and papers) etc.

From last August till November, union temperance prayer meetings were held on Sunday afternoons at 4 o'clock. They were attended by both sexes and were profitable. These were changed to evening in the fall and after the anniversary meeting, December 23, a program was arranged for each meeting. Interesting and profitable meetings were thus held all winter, every Friday evening, from church to church, closing May 23. Seventeen public meetings have been held since organization; seventeen lectures given on temperance under auspices of union. Band of Hope has held four public meetings and had four lectures or addresses besides having much part in many of the other meetings.

Miss Willard and Miss Gordon visited this place last summer, and later Dr. J. W. Watts, of Oregon. We are now expecting Mrs. M. G. C. Leavitt in a few days, and Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, July 6.

Shortly before our city election, June 2, a nominating convention was arranged by the executive committees of the Voter's Temperance League and the W. C. T. U. This convention included all temperance people, and nominated a temperance ticket. All the Protestant churches were united in this movement.

The people's ticket was headed by the mayor, who had been appointed when the city was incorporated, and who stated in his first address to the council that "Cheney was not incorporated for the purpose of suppressing drunkenness, but for improving the place etc."

The place was canvassed by two of the officers of the union calling on the ladies with reference to voting. Many of those not in sympathy with the temperance work expressed great repugnance to voting. Many said "They would not vote."

A carriage was hired from each of the two livery stables, by the W. C. T. U. and V. T. L. Then the president of the League was told at one stable almost immediately, the "other side wish that rig" and the next best was taken; pretty soon he was told "they wish that also." So one of the express men was hired for election day. The express wagon and horses were trimmed with flags. The two officers who canvassed, the president, and one of the vice presidents, Miss Mary R. Bybie, rode in these carriages that brought the temperance women to the polls. Miss Bybie carried our white satin banner, "For God and home and native land." Two carriages ran all day carrying women to the polls to vote the people's ticket. On each of these inside the wheels were mottoes "Vote the people's ticket." And many women did—helped to weld the chains tighter upon husbands, brothers and sons.

An amusing incident happened when a carriage representing temperance and one representing the saloons, drove up to a lady's house. The driver of the people's ticket went to one door and Miss Bybie to another, and the lady said, "She would go, but could not then, but intended to vote our ticket." The president of the union was the first woman who voted.

The amusing part comes in where the women bitterly opposed to voting all voted, and most of these have husbands who oppose it. This disappointed us, so many women voted on the side of whisky, probably nearly as many as for temperance. But in the fall elections this will not be so; the farmers' wives will help us. We were beaten—only elected one councilman—but not discouraged. Much good has been done. The lines are now more closely drawn than ever before. The editor, a new comer, who printed our tickets, lost four subscribers, all saloon keepers, and the express man lost some customers next day, but he told them, "All the best people would think more of him." The editor referred to told me this week that the union should prepare to take charge of the column that we filled formerly in the Northwest Tribune. So they did not scare out our new editor, for he is willing to stand for principle. The editor of the Sentinel worked all day for the whisky ticket and yet some professing Christians will subscribe for his paper.

We are opening a reading room. Shall soon have the column again, institute the Sunday prayer meetings again, etc. The Lord is with us in our work for it is His cause. L. A. S.

ILLINOIS.

APPLE RIVER.—A rousing mass convention of JoDaviess county prohibitionists was held at this place on the 14th inst. Had any other day than Saturday been chosen more would have been present. Two delegates were chosen to the state convention. Dr. Beebe, of Elizabeth, presided. Prof. Boss, of the Galena Normal, and several of his able assistants, were present. Resolutions were passed declaring the Hon. Jno. P. St. John, of Kansas, as the choice of this convention for the national standard bearer, and Gen. Clinton B. Fiske, of N. Y., for the second place on the national ticket. It was agreed to hold a mass meeting after harvest, and to secure some prominent representative of the prohibitory movement to address the meeting. R. C. LINDSEY, Sec.

OAK PARK.—I am sure it will be a pleasure to readers of THE UNION SIGNAL to know of, as it would have been a delight to them to have witnessed, the enthusiasm of both old and young at the temperance exercises held in our public school June 20. This is the second afternoon within the week when the public have been invited to attend these exercises, and the crowded rooms, earnest faces and hearty words of commendation afterwards, betoken the deep interest and approbation which they elicit. Too much praise cannot be awarded to the teachers who devoted so much care and labor to these entertainments. The rooms were beautifully decorated with ferns, flowers, and appropriate mottoes, to say nothing of the beaming faces of the children. The programs presented a delightful variety of songs, recitations and sentiments, and the zeal and earnestness with which they were rendered, inspire the confidence and belief that the priceless seed here sown shall find its home in ready, fruitful soil, and bring an abundant harvest in time to come.

The exercises closed with a few words from Rev. Mr. Eaton, who has the pleasant faculty of instilling earnest, valuable lessons in a way to make the deepest impressions upon the little ones before him.

Surely this is a step in the right direction, and may the time speedily come when this subject shall receive the daily attention in our schools which its importance demands. P. M. B.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—Unions have been organized at Dutch Hill by Mrs. Morrison, and at Gilead by Mrs. C. H. Flagg.

— Owing to the recent change in postal rates our leaflets will be sent to Illinois unions for 10 cents per hundred leaflets. A full supply of Nos. 10 and 11 are now on hand—let the orders come in rapidly. The four page leaflet on Temperance in Public Schools is just the thing for public distribution.

—The recently organized Y. W. C. T. U. of Belvidere gave a reception at the formal opening of their "Rooms," which was largely attended. Mrs. S. M. I. Henry was present with several young people from Rockford. This new society begins life with thirty-eight members, eight of them honorary, and the hearty sympathy of the citizens of Belvidere.

—The W. C. T. U. ladies of Evanston are making arrangements to celebrate the Fourth of July in a practical manner by providing refreshments on the college campus for friends of the temperance cause. They will furnish cake, ice cream, lemonade, and also substantials, like baked beans, brown bread, sandwiches, coffee, etc. They hope to secure the services of Edward Murphy the week following and desire to provide means to that end in the above manner.

MINNESOTA.

ANOKA.—The W. C. T. U. of this city has reached the third year of its organization. In looking back over the two years of labor, we find many things to encourage and cheer us to constant and persevering temperance work.

Our first efforts were directed to the introduction of temperance instruction in our public schools. We presented the subject to the school board, and after some delay and hesitation, they decided that a regular course of temperance lessons should be given in each department. We have opened and maintained a free reading room, endeavoring to make it a resort more alluring and attractive than the dark and hidden places where liquor is sold, in defiance of law, or the secret club and gambling rooms. We have a Band of Hope numbering one hundred and fifty members, under the care of an enthusiastic and able young lady. To this Band we look for much good work in the future.

We have special reason for joy and thankfulness, that at our spring election no-licence was carried by a fair majority. A staunch temperance mayor was elected, and a full corps of city officials, who are determined that the laws shall be enforced. A MEMBER.

MISSOURI.

STATE W. C. T. U. CONVENTION AT SEDALIA.

The second annual convention of the Missouri W. C. T. U., held in Sedalia June 18–21, was a pronounced success.

Tuesday nearly one hundred delegates had arrived, after which time the number was largely increased. Besides the delegates, a large number of persons interested in the union came from various parts of the country, and to one and all, delegates and their friends, the citizens of Sedalia threw open their doors.

The Ohio street M. E. church, kindly placed at the disposal of the union for all the meetings of the convention, was tastefully dressed with flowers, flags and various ornamental emblems.

Tuesday evening when the opening meeting of the convention took place, Mrs. A. H. Stephens, of the Sedalia local union, first delivered an address of welcome to the delegates. Mr. F. A. Sampson, a well known lawyer of Sedalia, welcomed the convention in the name of the citizens. Mr. Sampson's words were listened to with much interest, and at their conclusion Rev. Dr. G. A. Beattie, chancellor of the Sedalia university, made a very pleasing address of welcome in behalf of the churches and ministers of his city. The doctor spoke for a very short time, but what he said was remarkably eloquent. Mrs. Sophie F. Grubb, of Kirkwood, made a touching response.

Mrs. M. C. Ainsworth, of Leavenworth, read a message of greeting from Mrs. Laura B. Field, president of Kansas state W. C. T. U.

Wednesday morning opened propitiously for the convention, the day being bright and not uncomfortably warm. The report on prison work was given by Mrs. F. F. Holden, of St. Louis, and the report of foreign work by Mrs. S. F. Grubb, of Kirkwood. Dr. Brooks, of Warrensburg, president of the Prohibition Alliance, Dr. J. G. Holland, editor of the Marshall Irrepressible Conflict, and Mrs. A. R. Roller, of St. Joseph, briefly addressed the convention.

The report of Mrs. Holden showed that much good was being done in towns throughout the state, but that there was scope for further work. At Moberly there were now but seven saloons, where there had been twenty-four last fall, which decrease was a great thing for the town. One visible outgrowth of the W. C. T. U. was the newsbdys' home in St. Louis, and much good had been done in that city by prison work and the distributing of reading matter.

Mrs. Grubb urged the publication of a German paper under the jurisdiction of the N. W. C. T. U. In response to her request that Missouri should be one of ten states to pledge $175 for this purpose, various members pledged themselves for different amounts, aggregating over $200, which was more than the desired sum.

The report of Kiss Kate Shaw, of Cameron, on "The Relation of Intemperance to Labor and Capital," was full of plain, forcible facts. Among them were the following:

Missouri has a population of 2,286,381. Schools of all grades 7,480; annual total expense of them $6,104,805. Number of saloons 6,484; annual income from them for state, county, cities and towns $699,395, the annual total cost to Missouri for strong drinks $20,000,000. The "bonded indebtedness" of all the cities, towns and the state, sum total $39,739,384. Sale of furniture in the state for one year $6,000,000; sale of leather $1,000,000; lumber $8,000,000; cost of printing $5,000,000. The cost of the liquor traffic of the state for one year would run its schools of all grades for nearly six years, supply the furniture needed six years, all the lumber over three years, supply all the leather used thirty years, pay expense of printing six years, and cancel the bonded railroad indebtedness for the whole state, that has for years hung over it like a great vulture, in sixteen months. Now what is gained by this immense cost of the liquor traffic to the state yearly? A thousand voices answer, "The revenue," $669,395. Substract this revenue from the total cost to the state, the $30,000,000, and we find to our sorrow that the state is $29,300,605 out of pocket, to say nothing of the ruined homes, broken hearts, the thousands that go down to a drunkard's grave, and the fearful temptations that beset our young men and boys on nearly every street corner in the cities and towns throughout the state.

In Jefferson City penitentiary last February there were 1,374 convicts. Drunkards 91; steady drinkers 397; occasional drinkers 666; total abstainers 240; attributed crime to drink 560; drunk when crime was committed 519. Out of the 1,154 who drank 1,079 went to the penitentiary through its influence. Mr. Cobb, the chaplain, says: "I have preached to them for eight months, and mixed freely with them in their cells and shop, and am satisfied that three-fourths of them were made criminals through the influence of strong drink." We have it from reliable authority that in 1880 the cost of crime to the city of St. Louis, due to the liquor traffic, counting the percentage of paupers and insane, made such by strong drink, was $96,464. The total cost to the city of St. Louis that year chargeable to the liquor traffic was $597,659.02. The revenue received from the dram shop licenses was $193,657.77. Subtract this revenue from the gross cost of the liquor traffic to the city and it leaves to the 53,000 registered voters of the city $7.79½, which they have paid out to support the liquor traffic.

The report of Mrs. Swan, the state superintendent of temperance literature showed that much was being done in her department. Mrs. Nellie Bayley, the famous "chalk talker," of Chicago, followed and gave one of her unique talks, and though especially directed to the little ones who were present, a large number of "big children," listened with much interest.

On Wednesday evening a most brilliant session was held, its great feature being the reading of the annual address by the state president, Mrs. Clara Hoffman. The church was full to overflowing, a circumstance well attesting the interest manifested in the union.

Thursday's sessions were most interesting. The report of Mrs. J. H. Williams, of Kansas City, state superintendent of Sunday school work, laid great stress on the importance of organizing Bands of Hope for children, who would thus form a powerful cold water army. At the conclusion of the report the president introduced to the convention Miss Mary Allen West, the well known president of the Illinois state W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Hattie Worthington, of Kirkwood, state superintendent of scientific instruction, reported that she had sent out during the past year 253 postals and 335 letters, not to speak of other communications and printed matter mailed. One great aim was to introduce text books and leaflets on hygienic temperance in the schools throughout the state, and a number of schools had added temperance education to their curriculum.

The afternoon session was opened by some interesting remarks from Miss West, who delicately referred to giving for holy purposes. Scriptural passages were read showing how blessed was the giver. In quoting from Malachi a passage which spoke of the rebuking of the destroyer, Miss West made a graphic allusion to the great amount of corn destroyed by the distilleries, and said that those who caused such destruction would be rebuked by God. Miss West said it was a privilege for people to be allowed to give, and that those who went to them to collect should not go with long faces and apologies, but rather go cheerfully and consider that they were bestowing a benefit upon the givers by asking them for aid.

Mrs. Waggner, state treasurer of the union, read a synopsis of her report, which showed that there were plenty of cheerful givers in the W. C. T. U. The balance remaining in the treasury after payment of expenses was $358.81. The treasurer said she wanted to scold for the manner in which contributors sometimes sent money, without signature, date, etc., and her scolding only made her report the better received.

Mrs. Anna Sneed Cairns, of Kirkwood, state superintendent of legislative work, takes a practical view of the matter and is especially anxious that the ladies of the union shall see that the temperance laws existing in the state are thoroughly and honestly enforced. She does not approve of the Downing liquor law and in this opinion she is coincided with by Mrs. Hoffman and all of the union. As saloon keepers throughout the state are obliged to hand in a petition to the courts on July 4, to be signed by a majority of the property holders in their neighborhood, in order that they may continue their business, Mrs. Cairns desires that all who can do so will go to the courts and demand to see these petitions. She says that much fraud is perpetuated in connection with the signing of these petitions, in one case a dead man, probably brought to life for the occasion, having affixed his signature to one of them. One other law, which she says should be enforced, is that which provides that if a woman having a son or husband who frequents a saloon, and if she serves a written notice on the saloon keeper, he is compelled to refuse them intoxicants or else pay a fine, which goes to the wife or mother aforesaid.

The election of officers for the coming year resulted in the re-election of Mrs. Hoffman, as president; Mrs. H. H. Wagner, of St. Louis, treasurer; Mrs. L. M. Trumbull, of Sedalia, recording secretary; and Miss Rose Phillips, of Kansas City, recording secretary.

Pledges were given for the president's salary, amounting to $1,315.

Thursday evening saw a large crowd in the Ohio street church to attend the evening session, so great a crowd in fact that Mrs. Hoffman requested the audience to make themselves as small as possible. After the opening devotional exercises, songs and anthems, Miss Mary Allen West, state president of the W. C. T. U., of Illinois, entertained the large audience with a sound, practical, common sense address, which was enlivened by many passages of original humor, and which was attentively listened to by her auditors. At the conclusion of Miss West's remarks, which were greatly enjoyed, Mrs. Bayley delivered one of her inimitable chalk talks.

The morning sessions of the third day's session of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was taken up in routine work and short addresses. Miss Frances E. Willard, who had arrived, was introduced, and delivered a short address. Mrs. Hoffman also presented Miss Anna Gordon, who referred in loving terms to Miss Willard, whom she called her "precious charge," and told the audience that there was nothing more for her to say but a "Methodistical amen."

Miss Gordon was almost as enthusiastically received as the national president. At the afternoon session after devotional exercises and reading of the minutes, Mrs. R. Hazzard, of Kirkwood, read a very complete and excellent paper on "Franchises."

Dr. B. V. Cushman, of Hannibal, then read her report on "Hygiene and Heredity," and it was decided by the convention pending the reading that the name of the department of "Hygiene and Heredity" be changed to that of "Health and Heredity." Dr. Cushman urged the necessity of establishing boards of health in towns which had none, and gave a valuable hint to housekeepers that they burn up rubbish instead of throwing it away near the house. Her practical, common sense suggestions won the hearty applause of the convention.

Mrs. R. T. Miller, of Sedalia, was called upon for her report on young woman's work, but said she would yield her time to Miss Gordon to make some remarks. Miss Gordon, however, desired to have a little talk with the young ladies and consequently Miss Phillips said a word or two about THE UNION SIGNAL, which, she said, was a signal success. She then gave way to Miss Willard who gave some information regarding the paper, which she called the "Religious child of the crusade," and strongly advised all the members of the W. C. T. U's. who could to subscribe for it. Mrs. Hoffman urged the members to take an interest in this representative paper, and solicited subscription for shares of the stock of THE UNION SIGNAL company, of which Miss Willard had spoken. Two shares of the stock at $25 was subscribed for by the Kansas City union. Mrs. Millar offered a resolution, which was carried, that all the local unions throughout the state endeavor to subscribe for one share of the stock. Five shares in all were subscribed for.

The committee on plan of work reported that they would adhere to the national plan of work adopted last year by the state union. The committee also advised the expediency of engaging the entire services of Miss Rose Phillips as corresponding secretary, making proper recompense for such services. The report was approved. Mrs. Grubb read the report of the committee on resolutions which was adopted among the resolutions are the following:

Resolved, That we endorse the recommendation of Gov St. John as a candidate for the presidency.

Resolved, That we heartily endorse the declaration of principles of the Illinois prohibitionists now in session at Bloomington, Ill.

Resolved, Whereas, the Republican party, which has always claimed to be the party of progress and of great moral ideas, has, in its platform adopted at Chicago, entirely ignored the great temperance issue of the day, and also that of woman suffrage, an omission which, in our government, impairs its strength, depriving it of the element of justice; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, as earnest workers, protest against this so-called party of progress, and feel that we must endorse that part that shall better represent the advanced sentiment of the nation in moral questions.

Resolved, That we deplore the fatal results of the Downing high license law, increasing the number of saloons in our beloved state, in compelling judges to grant licenses and open saloons in many towns and counties where they had been prohibited by a former law for years; and also be it

Resolved, That as prohibition is the great object of our organization, we will circulate either the "pledge" or the "declaration of intention" to voters, present the letter to candidates, work for the election of prohibition and submission candidates before and on election day and present petitions to our legislature.

Resolved, Believing that perfection of government in the home, uniting as it does the masculine and feminine element, should be the model of government in the state, and that the ends of justice will never be attained while woman is ranked before the law with criminals, idiots and children, and believing that the ballot will give us a power over intemperance and kindred evils which nothing else can, therefore be it

Resolved, That as Christian women we believe the ballot should be worked for and welcomed by our white ribboned host.

The closing session Friday evening was held in the opera house. The speaker of the evening, Miss Frances E. Willard, was very gracefully introduced by Mrs. Cairns and delivered one of her most eloquent addresses. The conclusion of Miss Willard's earnest words were greeted with prelonged applause. The choir then sang a selection from "Esther," followed by a few farewell words from Mrs. Cairns, who announced the close of the convention, after which the benediction was pronounced and the meeting was adjourned.

CONVENTION NOTES.

—The Kansas City Journal says: "The convention of the state W. C. T. U., now in session at Sedalia, is largely attended by the earnest and brainy women of the state."

—Col. George Woodford, the well known temperance advocate of Ottawa, Ill., was in attendance upon the conventien.

—A vote of thanks was tendered Col. George Woodford and Mr. C. J. Holt for their faithful services in Missouri. St. Joseph was fixed upon as the place of next annual meeting of the state W. C. T. U. which will take place next June, the day of the month to be decided later.

—It is worthy of mention that the general stampede or "bolt" that takes place after the adjournment of other conventions, religious and otherwise, is not the case with the W. C. T. U., the ladies remaining after the various meetings to talk over important matters and arrange plans of work, etc. The activity and energy of the ladies is not a hopeful omen for the Missouri saloon keepers.

—The men who believe that women know nothing about business matters would have had their faith shaken if they had witnessed the expeditious manner in which the convention was managed by its officers.

—A prize was offered for the best original temperance song, the competitors to be residents of Missouri and their compositions, comprising both words and music, to be ready by October 1.

—The convention received telegrams from the Pennsylvania Constitutional Temperance Amendment Association in session at Altoona, sending its salutations and bidding them "God speed," and from the Ohio W. C. T. U.

—A prominent physician of Sedalia said on hearing Mrs. Hoffman's address that he never felt so small in all his life, and he is a heavy weight who usually has a most exalted opinion of himself.

—Mrs. Waggoner presented Mrs. Hoffman with a beautiful Bible in behalf of the Young Ladies' Temperance Union, of Nevada. Mrs. Hoffman was deeply touched, and said a few tender words of thanks.

—The devotional services which occupied the closing hour of each morning session and the opening of each session were of special interest and power.

THE factories (barbed-wire fence) o DeKalb, Ill., employ a force of five or six hundred men, just the ones who need to be reached. On the two largest run evenings, it was impossible for them to hear Mrs. Rounds unless she spoke after 9 o'clock. In accordance with a request from the men, an open air meeting was appointed at 9:15 and a crowd of two or three hundred men, in their working clothes, stood on the sidewalk and out into the streets, while Mrs. Rounds addressed them from the church steps. At the close, a large number filed into the basement of the church, and signed the pledge. Mrs. Rounds writes, "It seemed like the early crusade times to see the street last night blocked with people all about the church, and hear the songs float out on the night air. I enjoyed it, and felt a wonderful freedom of speech."

An Efficient Remedy.

In all cases of Bronchial and Pulmonary Affections is AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. As such it is recognized and prescribed by the medical profession, and in many thousands of families, for the past forty years, it has been regarded as an invaluable household remedy. It is a preparation that only requires to be taken in very small quantities, and a few doses of it administered in the early stages of a cold or cough will effect a speedy cure, and may, very possibly, save life. There is no doubt whatever that

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

Has preserved the lives of great numbers of persons, by arresting the development of Laryngitis, Bronchitis, Pneumonia, and Pulmonary Consumption, and by the cure of those dangerous maladies. It should be kept ready for use in every family where there are children, as it is a medicine far superior to all others in the treatment of Croup, the alleviation of Whooping Cough, and the cure of Colds and Influenza, ailments peculiarly incidental to childhood and youth. Promptitude in dealing with all diseases of this class is of the utmost importance. The loss of a single day may, in many cases, entail fatal consequences. Do not waste precious time in experimenting with medicines of doubtful efficacy, while the malady is constantly gaining a deeper hold, but take at once the speediest and most certain to cure,

Our Enemies Being Judges.

The following communication over the signature of Frank Giehl was published in the German Democrat of Peoria, May 15, and for the accommodation of those who cannot read it in the original, we give as literal a translation as the dissimilarity of the two languages will permit.

METAMORA, May 10.

Since much has been lately written in various papers concerning our pleasant village and the temperance power I will endeavor in these few lines to explain more closely the matters to your worthy readers. Such a state as we now have in Metamora one can hardly believe. A few weeks before election was held a temperance convention under the leadership of a preacher of this place who dispenses religion for five different sects and owing to his fanatical instigations a conflict broke upon our free-thinking citizens such as we never before experienced. It may here be noticed that the fanatical minds of our temperance hypocrites easily fell into fermentation during the burning speeches of "crank" White and the revivalist Simpson Ely a few years back. The conflict now rages here in the families and in every neighborhood and everywhere appear spies for the hypocritical temperance cause. Most of the inhabitants who a few weeks ago appeared as friends in the contest for the county-seat with strong will and determination now stand against each other as enemies. The circuit judge himself, McCulloch of Peoria, during his presence here the week before election helped unfold at a temperance meeting of these hypocrites a plan of war for election day. As this same judge on account of his defeat for judge of the supreme court is not wholly friendly to the Germans so appeared he to suit these water-saints at their temperance meeting by reason of his experience and counsel We have noted all this for the future and will in time show ourselves thankful to the surprised judge.

On election day the women in close file came from the nearest church and stationed themselves at the voting place. Near by on the side walk was opened a coffee and tea stand that was free. Here were the voters "bulldosed" by these excellent women and scenes were enacted which brought the blush of shame to the countenances of the free citizens of a republic. The climax was reached in the afternoon when at the close of school the children under the leadership of their teacher and a few other fanatical women marched down the public street with singing of temperance songs to the polls. In the evening after the polls were closed, in the pouring rain was sung the so-called temperance death-song by the women and their helpers. Unfortunately through the treason of some of the German voters and the aforesaid "bulldoseresses" must the good cause of freedom succomb. After the votes were counted and the temperance ticket elected by a majority of 7 to 12 these hypocrites knew no farther bounds. In the midst of storm and rain the bells were rung, the band played on the sidewalk and so amid song, music and ringing of bells the personal liberty of Metamora was buried. For the tax paying citizens of Metamora there are now grievous days of punishment coming and it is only to be regretted that under this hypocritical temperance rule the innocent with the guilty will suffer. Now business men stand before the door and in groups on the sidewalk and regret the sad consequences of their act. The farmers carry their products to other markets and in our town it is especially desolate and empty. I would have sent all this to you before but wished to wait until the regular meeting of the town board as we all cherished the hope that in consideration of the approaching county seat election, at the last hour license would be granted. The lot is now cast and we stand now for the next two years under temperance rule, for the three last members of the town board are elected for two years. Mr. George Noirot was the only one of the six town fathers who had the courage to vote for license. Mr. Peter Schertz and Dr. A. H. Kinnear who last year in a hard contest were elected by the license party had not the courage to appeer as men for the good cause and voted for the temperance cause both on election day and at the town board.

THE OLDEST MEDICINE in the WORLD
Is probably DR. ISAAC THOMPSON'S CELEBRATED EYE WATER. This article is a carefully prepared physician's prescription and has been in constant use for nearly a century, and notwithstanding the many other preparations that have been introduced into the market, the sale of this article is constantly increasing. If the directions are followed it will never fail. We particularly invite the attention of physicians to its merits.
JOHN L. THOMPSON, SONS & CO., Troy, N. Y.

Platform of the Prohibition Home Protection Party of Illinois.

1. We believe that the traffic in intoxicating liquors, whether distilled or fermented, is the great crime of the world, and should be immediately suppressed by constitutional prohibition or legislative enactment.

We believe that the police power of the state, (the inherent power of the people,) is sufficient for its overthrow, whether a vice or crime, and should be immediately exercised.

2. Seeing only the terrible results, and caring nothing for the name given to this evil, we totally ignore its sophistry that the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage is a vice and not a crime, and declare that the manufacture and sale should be prohibited.

3. We unhesitatingly declare that the government of the state (which is the people) has the inherent right and power to suppress by constitutional and legislative enactment, everything that is destructive of lives, health or morals of the people; and that it is the imperative duty to exercise that power at once and effectually, whenever the hostile evil shows itself; that a government that has not such power or does not exercise it promptly is a failure; the people have a right to amend or reconstruct it at their pleasure, and thereby secure the safety which protective governments are established to furnish.

4. We declare the actions of the legislature of the state of Illinois at each of its last three sessions, in refusing to submit the subject of the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for a beverage to a vote of the people, to be in direct violation of the fundamental principles of our state and national polity and at war with the genius of our institutions. That the same is an act of tyranny and usurpation which should not be submitted to by a free people, and should be emphatically rebuked at the polls by the voters of the commonwealth of Illinois.

We reject with disdain the proposition to educate our children with money derived from the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, and demand that such revenue derived by the government and proposed to be so used be at once and forever cut off by the prohibition of such.

5. We declare that no government has the moral right or power to protect or license evil (or things evil in their nature) or harmful to the morals, health or life of the citizens, and that therefore all laws made to license the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage should be swept at once and forever from the statutes of the State.

High license, no matter how great, cannot mitigate the evil results of the traffic. The price paid for this power to do wrong never made the wrong right. That the sale of saloon license indulgences is a moral stench in the nostrils of all good people.

6. We believe that there should be no taxation without representation — that every adult, intelligent, law-abiding citizen should have a voice and a vote in making and establishing laws by which they are governed; that, therefore, we believe in the civil and political equality of women, and believe in the enfranchisement of women.

7. We are in favor of radical reform in the civil service of the state and national government.

8. No more money should be taken from the pockets of the people by the municipal authorities of the state, than is absolutely necessary to carry on the functions of the government and to perform the respective duties devolving upon them.

9. Every child in the state should be thoroughly educated in the schools to be established and supported by the state and such education should extend to and include thorough instruction upon the subject of the effect of alcohol upon the human organization.

10. We are opposed to all forms of competition between convict and honest labor.

Previous to the reading of the platform a lengthy article, declaiming the foundation principles of the party was read. It overhauled the Republican and Democratic parties for their repeated failures to recognize the wishes of the temperance element in them and closed by stating that as a punishment they had as a Prohibition party cut themselves off completely from all allegiance with either of the old parties and proposed to fight this and all future campaigns upon new and third party lines.

ALCOHOLIC DRINKS AND NARCOTICS.

The only Temperance Physiology that Answers fully the Requirements of the new Law in the Several States.

—BY—

J DORMAN STEELE, PH. D.

EDITED AND ENDORSED by the W. C. T. U. under direction of Mrs. MARY H. HUNT.

This work contains all the excellent and popular features that have given D. Steele's Fourteen Weeks in Physiology so wide a circulation; with carefully-prepared sections upon the Physiological Action of Alcohol, Tobacco, Opium, etc. These are scattered through the book as each organ is treated. This subject is examined from a purely scientific standpoint, and represents the latest teachings at home and abroad. While there is no attempt to incorporate a temperance lecture in a school book, yet the terrible effects of these "Stimulants and Narcotics," especially upon the young, are set forth all the more impressively, since the lesson is taught merely by the presentation of facts that lean toward no one's prejudices, and admit of no answer or escape. In this edition unusual space is given to the subject of Ventilation, which is now attracting so much attention throughout the country. 300 pages, 12mo., half bound, illustrated. Specimen Copy, postage prepaid, $1.00.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 28. CHICAGO, JULY 10, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

ACCORDING to our usual custom in July, we shall issue no paper for the next two weeks, printers, clerks, publisher and editor taking their annual vacation meanwhile. Subscribers will please take notice. Our next number will bear date of July 31.

MESSRS. G. and C. MERRIAM of Springfield, Mass., have made THE UNION SIGNAL happy by a gift of Webster's Unabridged. If anybody catches us now in literary defection, it will not be the fault of that great and good man, Noah Webster.

As we go to press, the National Democratic convention is in progress. The memorial of the W. C. T. U. will be presented to the assembly, with what result none can tell. We are so used to denial of our petitions, however, that it will be a singular disappointment if its prayer is granted. We shall see what we shall see.

BEFORE our next issue the nominating convention of the National Prohibition Home Protection party will be held in Pittsburgh at Lafayette Hall. Something like a thousand delegates are expected. The Pittsburgh & Ft. Wayne railway has given excellent reduction as will appear on reading the business notices on our thirteenth page.

THE Normal Institute of Heredity and Hygiene which is to be held in August at Lake Bluff deserves well of all who claim to be students of fundamental reform. The heredity studies will be in charge of Dr. Mary Weeks Burnett, National superintendent of the department, and those of hygiene under the superintendence of Dr. L. H. Corr, assisted by Mrs. Dr. Kellogg, National superintendent of the department of hygiene.

THE Republican papers are loudly chuckling over Neal Dow's alleged proclamation of his adhesion to the Blaine and Logan ticket, but have nothing but sneers for ex-Gov. St. John. Strange how slow they are to see that the right accorded the one to be led by personal attachment and state pride does not also belong to the other to lay aside personal and state considerations in order to help forward a mightier issue which covers all the states and is of the greatest moment to all mankind.

THE facts are, however, that Neal Dow is just as much a third party man today as when, four years ago, he was the presidential candidate of that party. At least he says so over his own signature and under date of June 27, when he writes Mr. R. J. Hazlett of Freeport, saying: "You ask me if it is really true that I look on the third party action with disfavor. So far from that, I am sure we can never win in any other way. The sooner we come to that the sooner we shall accomplish our purpose."

DR. R. H. MCDONALD is no sectionalist in his work for prohibition. He is a Kentuckian in ancestry and birth, but a Californian in generosity and large ideas, as well as by long residence in the metropolis of California. He has accepted Neal Dow's suggestion and sowed the Golden State almost "knee deep with temperance literature," and in return now sends the Maine W. C. T. U., through our National president, his check for $500, to be used in the constitutional amendment work in Maine. Such liberality on the part of other temperance millionaires would enable us to set all our best workers to humming in that busy hive where prohibition honey is making at such rapid rate that no one doubts that the "Maine law" will become a part of the Maine constitution in September next.

THERE is an old couple in the jail of Greeley, Colorado, who cannot be made to believe that prohibition does not prohibit. In that jail there are only two besides themselves and these are horsethieves. The old man and his wife are there for an attempt to violate the prohibitory law of the town. They fled the coming storm in Iowa and bought a little home in Greeley, laying in store a small stock of liquors. The effort was speedily crushed by the vigilant authorities and the husband was sentenced to eight days' imprisonment while the wife received sixteen, owing to the fact that she it was who did the selling. Besides the imprisonment a fine of three hundred dollars hangs over their heads, "and all," moans the old lady through her tears, "because I sold two half pints of whisky." Let her ponder in her seclusion the amount of groans and tears those two half pints cost the mothers, wives and daughters of the buyers.

THE Chicago Inter Ocean surprises us with its crudities and half truths, especially when dealing with biblical history and applying it to modern politics. For instance on Tuesday morning it followed up a series of editorial articles condemnatory of prohibition party policy with a paragraph stating that the greatest of reformers, Paul, when dealing with the prime principles of godly living "reasoned of temperance, instead of crowding into politics." Well, so he did, and of a judgment to come also. And so have the third party reformers reasoned till throats were hoarse and voices mute. Witness Miss Willard's "reasoning" with the committee on resolutions; witness the reasoning of Neal Dow's knee deep sowing of temperance literature; witness fifty years of reasoning by platform speakers, and the "sweet reasonableness" of hundreds of thousands of W. C. T. U. petitions to legislatures, national, state and municipal; witness all this and then tell us, O goodly, and often godly Inter Ocean, why we should not like Paul, your reformer-pattern and ours, "APPEAL TO CÆSAR"?

PAUL before Felix and the action or non-action of the latter is a good antetype of the position of temperance reformers before the great political parties of the land.

"I thank thee, Jew, for giving me that word."

Poor Felix, like Agrippa, "almost persuaded," nevertheless could do nothing but tremble, and disregarding all the "reasoning" which appealed so strongly to his noble nature, remembered his wife Drusilla "which was a Jewess," and "willing to show the Jews a pleasure left Paul bound." When political rulers do nothing but tremble, owing to their affiliations and their fears, then indeed do the advocates of righteousness and temperance "stand at Cæsar's judgment seat," THE BALLOT BOX OF FREEMEN.

"Do you believe in an omen?" was once asked of a certain public man. The prompt reply was, "Only when it has a 'w' before it." Some, however, do believe in an omen without the 'w', the omen of powerful associations. The associations connected with a place made famous by something that has transpired in it in the past. This ominous feature, ominous of some inspiring influence to be derived from it, will, it seems, be one feature of the Prohibition convention to be held at Pittsburgh this month. It is to convene at Lafayette Hall, a place, we are told, which is associated with advanced political reforms, and was the birthplace of the Republican party. That was a great event which resulted in the making of a glorious record, a record which contrasts sadly with the late degeneracy of that party from the high moral vantage ground of its earlier history. That another party based on a mighty moral issue is to see the light of day in that same hall, a party that will unfurl the banner of reform still higher to the breeze, is of itself a significant omen, and also an omen with a 'w' attached to it as never political omen has been before.

ONLY DANDELIONS.

META E. B. THORNE.

O, Dandelions golden,
That dot the swelling plain,
Ye 'mind of pleasures olden
That ne'er may come again.
When tripping through the wildwood
I gathered from the lea
Your blooms to deck my childhood,—
True riches* then to me.
E'en now your glowing faces,
So bonnie and so bright,
Along the wayside places,
Bring thrills of sweet delight.

Then, when your day was ended,
Shorn of your proud array
And bravery so splendid,
Ghostlike, and wan, and grey,
Methought each seedling airy,
A-poise on gauzy wing
Some dainty sprite or fairy,
Or some angelic thing.
And when, from frail stem lowly
By sudden breezes riven,
I watched to see them slowly
Ascend and enter heaven.

A POOR ECONOMY.

ANNA E. DICKINSON.

It costs more to neglect our duties than it does to accomplish them.

It costs more to take care of the idle poor, the able paupers, than to see that they are trained in some wise, to work, and the means of self-support put before them.

It costs more to cure than to prevent, ten times over; and cure is rarely brought to perfection even then.

Crime and its results, the original injury it works, its police, its magistrates, its commitments, its trials, its courts, its sheriffs, its clerks, its judges, its juries, its prisons, its penitentiaries, its gallows,—cost more than all the other expenses of government combined. And what does it cost besides money?

Does the state—having provided schools for these little venders of papers, of matches, these hangers-on about wharves, and buildings in construction, these small thieves and vagrants, these street Arabs—take them in hand, and save them for its own sake, as well as theirs? Why, then, are they where and what they are?

The expenditure for maintaining a pauper child—and there are tens of thousands in the different state and county houses—till he can be of some service is not less than five hundred dollars; of which not one cent is now spent in making him a self-supporting and self-respecting citizen. The school and the industrial information he ought to have bestowed upon him left unbestowed, he remains a pauper,—or becomes worse,—for the sixty or seventy years through which he may curse the world with his presence.

Of 11,510 convicted criminals in New York, 7,232—that is to say 62 per cent—were orphans or half orphans. What a parent has the state been to these!

The ratio of well educated in the prisons is about one in seventy-five. The prison tables that give a respectable percentage are fallacious. Every man, not put to the test, will overstate the amount of his education. He "can read and write"—reading and writing that require ingenuity to comprehend and to deciper!

The night-schools whereby myriads of boys and girls have been saved to an honorable, self-supporting, and helpful manhood and womanhood, consume on an average two dollars a year for each scholar. The average expenditure for every state prison convict, aside from any previous burthen to society, is two hundred dollars a year. It takes two dollars a year, and a little attention, to save a waif to manhood. It takes two hundred dollars a year to support this waif when he has run the streets in ignorance till he graduates in crime, has lost manhood and identity together, and has become a thing behind a cell-door, and a number on the outside of it.

If the evil effects of the neglect of a life ended with that life, they would be sore and heavy weights for society to entail upon itself; but they spread in ever-widening circles as the generations move on and down.

It is a difficult matter to trace the record of a criminal and pauper descent; since, like all dark things, it burrows in the dark, where investigation follows with uncertain feet.

Here and there, however, by unusual prominence of vigor and crime, by unusual persistence of interest and study, the dismal road can be traced—not to its end, but from a dreary past to a hideous present.

At a recent meeting of the State Charities Aid Association of New York, Dr. Harris presented some verified statistics of the outgrowth of a single life of neglect and misery.

Two hundred years ago, in a small village on the Upper Hudson, "Margaret" was left adrift; a solitary child, without family, or friends, or home. Ah! if there had been a school for her, a shelter for her, a law that had been, in sort at least, a foster father and mother to her; and some one to see that she received all that the law allowed, perhaps going a step out of the way to make sure that this life had its feet planted on the right road!

But, no; neither the law, nor any man nor woman within or without the law, cared for her body or her soul.

The little unregarded animal lived its animal life; grew, found others of its kind, perpetuated its animal life; died; and, dying, left a long line of criminals and paupers to curse those who had made no effort to turn the curse of its life into a blessing.

Shooting down through six generations, the county records show nine hundred descendants of this one abandoned life to have been and to be drunkards, lunatics, imbeciles, idiots, paupers, and prostitutes; two hundred of these convicted of and punished for crime.

In one generation alone, there were twenty children, of whom seventeen grew, like poisonous weeds, to maturity. Of these seventeen, nine served in state prisons, for high crimes, an aggregate term of fifty years; while the remaining eight divided their existence among jails, penitentiaries, and alms houses.

"Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth!"

This one spark of life, that, watched and tended, might have made a cheerful blaze on a domestic hearth, warming and vivifying a home,—an excellent thing in itself, a comfort and help to others,—left to run wild, has grown and grown till it sweeps a tempest of flame, consuming property, persons, morals, and that thing for which we care so much, money, by hundreds of thousands.

"Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

A NEW WAY FOR OLD WORK.

MRS. LAURA J. RITTENHOUSE.

Not long ago, I received some pretty fringed temperance cards from Mr. Date, of Chicago, with a request to return if I did not wish to keep them. As they were the first really artistic temperance cards I had ever seen, I concluded to forward the price to Mr. Date, and see how much temperance interest I could get out of the investment. So I set about cudgeling my brain as to the best way to invest my capital, and "patted myself on the back" for the following inspiration:

I went to one of our public school teachers, who has a primary room, and asked her permission to offer these cards to the three little ones writing the best compositions on temperance. She very gladly complied with my request, and showing them the lovely little cards, had them immediately, without leaving their seats, write the compositions, giving permission however, to those who did not wish to compete for the prizes to select some other subject.

The result was that thirty-five of those little chicks, ranging in age from seven to ten years, competed for the cards, saloon keepers' and bar tenders' children among the others. I just wish you could read their compositions, they are so cunning and withal so sensible, and show so conclusively that although the temperance movement here seems dead, the sentiment is still growing.

It pleased me to see how naturally a majority of them connected tobacco and profanity with intemperance. The children go to the foundation intuitively. May I give you some extracts—tell you what the little ones have to say on the temperance question?

One little German girl, not a Republican, I presume, says:

"I do not like to see peoples drink, for it looks so bad to see them. I like people that are temperance people. Temperance people are so nice to live with. Because they do not drink, like other people, though some temperance peoples are not good like others.

"Good peoples are temperance mostly always, and temperance peoples do not loafer on the streets like others. I would like to be a temperance would you if you are not one?"

You see she has a high opinion of temperance folks, though her family do not fraternize with us. She goes on so innocently to state a trouble that many older people have had to contend with.

"I feel so sorry that I cannot think of much to write now. When I want to write something, I can not think of much. I am trying so much to write as much as I can. But I feel sorry that I can not think of more.

"I cannot think of no more."

She was evidently conscientious about the matter, and wanted to write the full value of the card.

A saloon keeper's little girl wrote:

"Temperance people do not drink. I do not like people that drinks, it looks so bad to see them. I think temperance people are so nice they don't get drunk like the other people do."

A little boy—wise beyond his years in grading society, wrote:

"Temperance is a nice thing to belong to, for if a man belongs to the temperance he cannot drink nor swear, he is a gentleman if he believes in temperance. If he believes in temperance, he is a truthful and honest man.

"There is a great many men that call there self a temperance that are not, they tell people they are, but they are not, they are drinkers. I think every man and woman and child ought to belong to temperance, I would not let a saloon be in the town."

That is the voice of a future voter.

A little girl expresses her views thus:

"I think whisky is a bad thing and I do not think it should be aloud to be sold.

"I think they ought to go to church and be a temperance and go to Sunday school and be a teacher to learn the smaller ones the same. If you take one drink you will be shure to take another and another untill you become a drunkard, and it will at first catch you on the head and then the body, and then the feet, and at last you will be tangled in it like the flie was in the webb, the flie couldn't get out and that is the way you will be."

Of course she must have attended Mrs. Bayley's "Chalk talk."

Another girl wrote:

"I think if all men and boys would join the temperance I don't think there would be half so much cutting with knives and swearing. My brother joined it and he never thinks of smoking or drinking. And there are some women that drink and carry on as bad as the men do sometimes. I should think they would like to join the temperance. I think liquor is the worst thing that could ever come in Cairo. And there are so many saloons I try to keep away from them as much as I can. Those little temperance pledges are very nice to keep you from drinking for when you go to drink you can look at them and say I must not drink. I often wish I lived in a town where there were no saloons. Minnie Williams."

An embryo voter gives his views as follows:

"Temperance men ought not to drink whisky or smoke but I don't think any of them do. I think every one ought to sign the pledge, men that sware will not go to heaven. I do not swere nor say naughty words I do not like to see boys or men curse. I like for them not to drink. I have seen poor men work hard and get some money and spend it all for whisky. When they once start to drink they can't quit it but if they would quit it right off they could quit.

JOSIE SMITH."

But this one is the best I think:

"If all the people in the world were temperance there would not be so much wickedness in the world. If the saloons were closed, it would be better for the men.

"If a man will once take liquor he will take it again for the appetite comes back as the appetite for candy comes back to children. The best thing for men to do is never to touch it.

"Whisky kills a man it is the worst thing in the world a man can do is to take whisky. there ought to be something done to close the saloons.

HEBER DIETRICH."

Of course I have given spelling and punctuation just as the little ones wrote it.

I also offered three more cards in another primary room, the lowest one, and had eleven cute little compositions written, three of them very good indeed, but have not space for them now.

Thus by the expenditure of sixty cents and a fragment of time, I got forty-six little children to thinking and writing of temperance.

Last year I gave six dollars in three prizes in our high school for the best essays on the evils of intemperance, and was much gratified with the result. As often as opportunities offer and I have money to spare, I shall do temperance work in this line.

AGNES WESTON'S WORK.

SARAH K. BOLTON.

I know of no more successful work abroad than that of Miss Weston among English sailors. The daughter of a barrister, well known for his astronomical and other scientific pursuits, she was trained as a scholar, and became especially skilled in music. A girl of strong character, she did everything she touched with energy and ability. Early in life she became skeptical, and, though obliged to go to church, would stop her ears and shut her eyes. Ten years after this, the self-willed girl had come into a new life. She visited hospitals, carrying books and flowers to the sick, and holding meetings in the wards. One day a poor fellow crushed in the stone quarries was brought in. She begged to speak with him, and was permitted, because, as "he would never be conscious again in this world, it mattered little what she said." She repeated tenderly, laying her hand upon his shoulder, "God so loved the world." He never spoke, but the big tears rolled down his rough cheeks as he went into eternity.

She became earnest in Sunday school work, and held meetings for working men on Sabbath afternoons. She soon learned, what all Christian workers learn, that intemperance is the greatest obstacle to the gospel, and she besought the people to sign the pledge. A chimney sweep, well known for his bad life, was much moved at her appeal, and came forward to sign. As he took the pledge, he said, "If you please, Miss Weston, be you a teetotaler?" She replied, somewhat disconcerted, "I only take a glass of wine occasionally, in strict moderation." He laid down the pen, saying, "Well, I think I will do just as you say, take a glass sometimes in moderation." No amount of entreaty availed; he went on from bad to worse, saying "he would do as the lady did." From that day Miss Weston became a total abstainer, and says she was never in better health than since she ceased to use stimulants.

In 1868 she wrote a letter to a Christian soldier on his way to India with his regiment. He showed it to a seaman. The eyes of the latter glistened, as he said, "We poor fellows have no friends; do you think that lady would write to me? I would give anything to receive a letter like this." She wrote to the seaman, and in reply, he inclosed the names of several sailors who wished letters.

Sometime after, one young man wrote, "What should I do without your letters! They drive away my trouble, and make Jesus seem so near to me." Soon a pencil note came in a trembling hand: "I am very ill with fever, but Jesus is near me. I send you a dollar in stamps to help carry on God's work among my brother sailors." He said to his mates in the hospital, "I'm going home by a shorter cut than by old England." Miss Weston's last letter to him came back with one word across it, in red ink—"Dead." One sailor wrote, "We never light our pipes with your letters, because you thinks about us and cares for us."

The demand for letters became so great that Miss Weston was obliged to supplement her work by a monthly printed letter. Over 5,000 are now sent out each month, called "Blue Backs," because of the blue cover in which they are sent. The letters are bright, cheerful, earnest and Christian. Each letter has a Bible text, and a well known hymn, which the men love to sing. The person must indeed be exceptional who can make a printed Christian letter eagerly watched for by every vessel in the navy. I have seen some, and they are most interesting. Letters are also sent to the Royal Naval Hospital, the coast guard stations, and to the training ships. Some boys came one day from the latter and said, "Please ma'am, do you think you can write us a letter, all to ourselves? We don't understand the men's." Over 2,000 are sent to these monthly, and the names of others who desire them are constantly sent in. Before the last Arctic expedition left Portsmouth, the men came to Miss Weston and begged that letters be prepared for two years in advance, that each month they might be comforted by them. It necessitated much work, but the Albert and the Discovery each took a small chest of "Blue Backs," that, in the darkness of the Arctic night, they might read of the Light of the World.

Miss Weston holds large meetings on the ships when they are in port, and the men are thankful for her coming. At one of those, a man held up a "Blue Back," two years old, as he said, "I got that out in China, aboard the Rinaldo, and I thank God that you ever sent it to me. I was one of the wildest fellows in the service, but that letter showed me just what I was. I went to Jesus for pardon, and now I'm a happy man. I wouldn't part with that letter for five pounds. When I die I should like it to be buried with me."

Miss Weston has established a "Floating Branch" of the National Temperance League on nearly every ship in the English navy. Some man who is an abstainer is appointed registrar. He takes a pledge book and cards, and makes a quarterly report to Miss Weston. Many officers act as honorary superintendents. The pledged men are many thousands, and the number increases daily. Everywhere in England her work is spoken of with praise.

She determined to do something to help the many sailors at Devonport, where is found the largest naval arsenal in Great Britain. The national works cover not less than three hundred and fifty-eight acres, comprising one of the finest dockyards in the world. She invited the men to a public room for singing and reading on a Sabbath afternoon. Of the thousands stationed there only one came, after she had waited two hours, and he soon ran away, frightened! The next Sunday not a person appeared, and the next and the next it was the same. Then she had tea and cake provided at a friend's house where she was stopping, and soon more came than the house could hold. This was the beginning of the Sailors' Rest and Institute, for which she soon raised $30,000. Money came from Switzerland, Italy, America, India and New Zealand. Sometimes a sailor's mother sent twenty-five cents; sometimes an anonymous friend sent $1,000. The buildings contain a restaurant, reading room, bath room, dining, sitting and sleeping rooms. The first year 127,000 visits were made to the refreshment bar alone, where lemonade, coffee and the like are sold. In the adjacent hall a daily prayer meeting is held, and meetings on every night in the week. A seaman's clothing depot is being arranged, so that Jack can buy his clothes where he gets his food and his gospel guidance. The men call the home the "Three C's," meaning coffee, comfort and company. Miss Weston is the manager of a Seaman's Bank where $25,000 are put in yearly, and she does not speculate with the money!

Is not a life like that of Agnes Weston worth living? There is no room to tell of Mrs. Pennefather's wonderful work at Mildmay, with deaconess houses, nursing home, cottage hospital, invalids' home, orphanage, men's night schools, flower mission, medical mission and the like; of Florence Nightingale's work at St. Thomas's Hospital; of Octavia Hill's in tenement houses; of Mrs. Meredith's touching labors among prison women; of Annie McPherson's work in the worst parts of London, her homes and the 5,000 children she has brought to Canada; of the temperance work of Mrs. Lucas, John Bright's sister, and that of Mrs. William Hind Smith; of Miss Hedenstrom's success among 14,000 Scandinavian sailors; of Miss De Broen's work at Belleville, Paris; of Miss Rye's emigration work, Marie Hilton's Creche on Stepney Causeway, and of Mrs. Daniell's remarkable work among the soldiers, concerning which a book has been published.—Congregationalist.

WORK ON.

MARCIA HUMPHREY.

Wendell Phillips once said, "I love inexpressibly these streets of Boston over which my mother led my baby feet, and if God grants me time enough I will make them too pure for the footsteps of a slave." Let our W. C. T. U. say also, with that mighty humane spirit hovering over us, God permitting, and granting us time enough, we too will make every street in this land too pure for the footsteps of a rum-drinker, a saloon-keeper or rum-dealer! We will make them free from licentious drinking, pauperism and sorrowful crime. We will turn every saloon into a place of sobriety, rectitude and holiness; every abode into a home untainted by stimulants of any description, made pure and spotless too by a Christ principle leading and guiding every act of life.

When each member of our unions sacrifices half as much for humanity as did this noble man—when we use that untiring energy and complete surrender to our Master's will requisite to accomplish any great object—when we too "fight the good fight of faith" manfully, counting all things subordinate to winning men from this terrible curse—then shall we hear in the soft air of our spiritual life, rising above all the sin and debauchery of vile drink and rum-selling, the divine utterance, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren ye have done it unto me," and we shall see too that the wicked no longer "spread themselves like a green bay tree," but that at last the noxious, vile atmosphere now floating about us at every step in our streets will be superceded by the soft, invigorating atmosphere of heaven.

Again this good man once said in Faneuil Hall, when the mob would drown his voice, turning to the reporters, "Howl on! I speak to thirty millions here!" So say we in our work: "Howl on, ye saloon-keepers, brewers, rum-drinkers! our women, 125,000 strong, over 5,000 organizations of women, working for a common purpose, our literature of one hundred and fifty-three newspapers and periodicals, besides many other avenues for giving prosperity to this cause, speak to the millions of people in this country, and over the world, in spite of scorn and denunciation from our enemies.

THE SEED SOWING.

MRS. P. M. MARSTON.

"For as the earth bringeth forth her bud, and as the garden causeth the things that are sown in it to spring forth, so the Lord God will cause righteousness and praise to spring forth before all nations." "Only believe and thou shalt see the glory of the Lord." Among the precious things of our W. C. T. U. garden I hail with joy the springing up of girls' heredity institutes as seen in Miss Mary Whitall Smith's published announcement. Truly if the seed be sown it will spring up in good ground. God bless the girls—they are the hope of the nation equally with the boys. I thank God for our dear Mrs. Dr. Burnett's young lady assistant. Nothing for a long time has bloomed in our scientific department so hopeful as heredity institutes and hygienic Normals. How befitting that the daughter of Hannah Whitall Smith should lead the advance among the girls of America to the open mirror of knowledge, for the lack of which the people perish, not having learned the practical science of teaching how to "glorify God in these bodies and spirits which are His." God bless you, dear Mary, and may the Evangel of every vital truth — moral, spiritual, physical — be yours to give to the thousands, the tens of thousands of coming women, that through them all nations and peoples may be blessed. Let us rejoice and be glad, my sisters. Like the roots of Mt. Lebanon, so reach the roots of heredity out into the depths of the sea of time.

From my standpoint of thought and vision, the evangelical, heredity and hygienic departments are the wells, the reservoirs in the W. C. T. U. of all our other departments. From thence our Rebeccas and our Rachels will bear the living waters of truth to the nations, whose number is as the sand by the seashore, for whom Isaac, Jacob, Moses, and their sons, will battle the way until the hosts of the beasts of sensuality, the dragon of commercial avarice, and the false prophet of all errors, will be taken away. "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee" saith the Prince of the House of David—Immanuel, God with us—"for I have redeemed thee." "Fear not for I am with thee."

In my town, the question is raised, What are the causes of the depopulation in the rural school districts? Heredity and hygiene can answer much. Only sin and transgression hide the face of our God from us. Let us study one and all to search out these destroyers of life, both physical and spiritual. "Come ye to the waters." To day we may work.

NOTES FROM VERMONT INSTITUTES.

Dear Union Signal:—I had sheathed my pen to wait until the institutes were over that I might come to you with a retrospect of all. But those which have passed give me a sure promise of the same success in the others which are to follow, and as our workers are anxiously waiting to hear one from the other through your columns I send you my notes. The institutes clearly set forth this thought: The times demand of us skilled workmanship, the best gifts which we are told to covet earnestly, the "knowledge which is power." Our departments are like mines of gold, if they yield they must be worked, and the beauty of each is that the foundation stone is the word of God — the lens of the Holy Spirit magnifies, purifies and illumines; and further the work of the institute discovers for us such scores of workers, our programs are crowded, our time more than full of real work.

As I stepped from the cars at Underhill, at our first meeting, behind twenty ladies, it seemed to me like the crusade days. I did not wonder at the remark of a passenger to his friend, "I guess there is going to be a change in the weather." I concluded before the two days' meeting was over that there was going to be a change in the moral, physical and political atmosphere. The cloud not bigger than a man's hand begins to look portentous.

Chittenden county has the largest membership. Twenty ladies took part in program, showing excellent skill in setting forth the work before the institute. The sixteen state departments were all profitably considered. The vice president, Mrs. E. B. Lund, had planned wisely and well as she is wont to do, and every union went home cheered and practically helped.

Underhill is the home of our efficient state superintendent on relation of intemperance to labor and capital. She brought the fervor and zeal for her department which characterizes her work. Her card for employers hangs in most of the business places in the state we hope.

Mrs. Chamberlain brought to our notice the number of school children in the county, and to the representatives gathered there she gave a charming lesson.

From this institute I went to Addison county. Not reaching there for the morning exercises I lost what I learned was a very interesting part of the meeting. The state superintendents, Mrs. Smith, of literature, Mrs. Monroe, of the press, presented their departments to the instruction of all.

My name was on the program to lead devotional exercises. It seemed particularly fitting that we read Romans xvi, as that chapter brought to our minds the greetings of workers in the early Christian church, and we could feel the inspiration of their work. The promise made to them was full of meaning to us. "The God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly."

An excellent paper on evangelistic work was given by Mrs. M. L. Haughton. It was prepared for class work and was admirably adapted to the purpose.

Our corresponding secretary, Mrs. W. H. Button, developed the resources of the question box on labor and capital, and a profitable discussion followed.

The children were instructed by Mrs. L. C. Barrows much to their pleasure. The vice president of the county, Mrs. J. L. Childs, presented a very interesting paper on legislative work.

Franklin and Grand Isle county delegates were enthusiastically entertained. At Enosburgh Falls a delightful reception was tendered them by Mr. and Mrs. Carmi Marsh. The Swanton Y. W. C. T. U. sent ten young ladies. Each carried a temperance fan and could you have seen the young ladies on the cars en route home after the institute, with their note books, asking questions on hygiene and heredity, you would have been amply rewarded had you taught the class. Only eight ladies had ever been to a county meeting before, and yet so apt and helpful were they all that the resident pastor said he came to learn and had been taught. He was impressed with the power of the Holy Spirit in the meeting through every exercise. In the service of song he called for the hymn, "What means this eager, anxious throng?"

Our loved vice president, Mrs. C. Tabor, was congratulated on the marked success of her first meeting.

The next in order was the Windham county institute. The experience of the others helped us in bringing to this one something more of our idea of class work. The Sunday school work, literature, and press were brought out by the use of the blackboard. Excellent papers were read, notes taken by members. We were also favored at this time by the presence of two of our national superintendents, Mrs. J. K. Barney, who is at work in the state, and our own beloved Mrs. Housh. Windham county claims her, but Vermont claims the county. Of course we had the very best in these two departments. Also our state superintendent of hygiene whose plates, copied by herself, and the setting forth of the same in a lesson to the class, would have become a professor's chair. A practical paper on household hygiene was read by Mrs. K. M. Burchard of Brattleboro.

I commenced by thinking it invidious to make mention of any names when all did so well, but how can I help telling our ladies of Miss Newton's excellent setting forth of fair work. Why! she made it look like the fairest work by fairy fingers wrought, especially when the bill of fare could be so magically changed into the fare of workers for this work. With one accord all said, "Our fair shall be the affair of the season."

And so the plans are being made and strange to say the burden of this song is sung as a chorus in every county. And then the Wilmington delegates, so wide awake and helpful, and with interested look. How much that means to a speaker! After having occupied the floor very often at one institute I felt it my duty to thank one lady that she had never looked bored; always as complacent and attentive as if she never grew weary.

At this Institute there were a large number of delegates and visitors, among whom were seven clergymen of the county. One said, "I was sent to learn and I have. I shall take home the Christian part." Another one said to me, "Any time you desire to come to our town and hold a similar meeting you will be welcomed; and we must have a union;" invited me to come and organize, but Mrs. Barney being employed for the purpose of organizing she has since organized a Y. W. C. T. U. in the town in a young ladies' school. The vice president of the county, Mrs. H. Tucker, has worked up her county well, several new unions joining our ranks through her efficient arranging of plans. This is only the second county meeting yet no county is better organized or has more of the missionary spirit in our work. In Orange county our vice president is a young lady, Miss Ada Hall, who has only been in our work a short time, but the gallant (just the word although it does seem as if that word was made for gentlemen, but Webster says it means brave, therefore I may use it) ladies of the county came forward in this first county meeting and did grandly. The class in literature was very meritorious and well developed. It was after this plan: The teacher prepared her paper, dividing it into topics. She gave the first section, and then asked a lady (previously invited to prepare) to give her paper on some point, then proceeded to the next and called upon another. Verbal questions were asked, and in this way three or four short pithy papers were given on specific points. A list of books was read and placed on the blackboard. This method of deducing the best points from papers and discussions was followed in the several institutes.

The first evening was given to the class in heredity and hygiene. A paper was also read from a physician. The children were examined in their Band of Hope Lesson Quarterly, and showed excellent training. It was a day and evening well filled with institute work. The last evening Mrs. J. K. Barney added to the inspiration of the meeting by her address, and the reading of the hymns by the county president before singing impressed me as a part of the devotional exercises, and it came to me, Why do we so often lose this?

I meant to have told you, Mrs. Editor, that I wished to charter a whole page. I would like the whole paper. I cannot do the work justice with less, for I should like to tell you of the more than one hundred women who have taken part in the exercises, how helpful they have been, how willing to do what they could, and how they surprised themselves. I was not in the least surprised, for I have tasks waiting their doing which they have not yet heard mention of. There are evangelists, speakers, writers, teachers among us who have not yet heard the call, but I can see the preparation of heart which goeth before the voice of the Lord calls us out in His service. The question, "Lord what wilt Thou have me do? is thrilling the souls of our women as never before, and I have a little prophecy in which I indulge my own heart, but have not yet spoken of it. We will only at this time tell you of the last meeting of Caledonia county. We were saddened at this meeting to miss from our number our much loved secretary, Mrs. J. L. Perkins, who was detained by the death of her father, (as from the other meetings) who was to have borne a helpful part on this program. But the time was well filled. The young ladies presented excellent papers showing their interest in the work and their success. The children were nicely trained in singing. Miss Clara Eastman, state superintendent of Flower Mission, gave them an excellent and practical talk. Also Mrs. M. L. T Hidden, superintendent of Sunday school work, gave an address on her department. Reports of unions were encouraging; the pastors were cordial and helpful; the county president, Miss Daette Powers, showed us what could be done in county fair work. I have endeavored to bring out some points in each meeting. There was a similarity in each and yet a difference.

The difference between class work and the question box was not clearly understood. It should be thus: Some of our departments can best be considered by discussion, by questions and answers. These we grouped into the question box. Papers and essays are not desired. The person presiding may prepare a list of questions and answers which she may ask and answer, as our corresponding secretary, Mrs. Button, did in the department of Relation of Intemperance to Labor and Capital, which was well brought out, to the instruction and edification of all. Stopping at each question and calling upon individuals for remarks also gives liberty for verbal questions. Each delegation should come with a list of questions prepared on each topic to be considered. This gives variety.

A class consists in the preparation of teacher and class. A plan of study on the subject should be sent out by the teacher. Avoid long papers; insist upon short, practical ones, viz., suppose the teacher asks one pupil to come prepared to recommend ways of distributing temperance literature she begins:

1. Superintendents should have specimen copies, and study the literature.

2. Obtain a fund and place in hands of superintendent.
3. Books and papers in home.
4. Distribute at tea parties.
5. Public meetings.
6. Post office.
7. When traveling.
8. Loan library.
9. To physicians.
10. Elections.
11. School teachers.
12. Chromo cards.
13. Cards and tracts in correspondence.
14. Mottoes for Sunday school and school rooms, etc.

Have some one place this on board (a lady who can write a plain legible hand, and who understands the modern way of grouping subjects is a great help. We were much helped by the lady school superintendents present who were accustomed to the class black board work of today) and get further suggestions from the class. So of other points—or, read a paper and class take notes. Thus giving them, from year to year, broader, lengthier scope of class work, as your workers advance, as they grasp it and will study it. The future temperance work must have a deal of careful building and of thought, a deal of soul culture.

My note books are full of skeleton lessons from this class work. When pastors take notes from our work, and those before uninterested in it desire to know more of it, we may feel that we are on the right road, therefore we treasured up the various lessons developed by the workers.

The vice presidents are enabled to take from these meetings parts to towns having no unions. She says now we must go up to Jamaica. Mrs. A. can take her department, Mrs. B. hers, and we have our institute notes and can be helpful to those ladies who have just organized. And to our home unions we say, as our ladies write, "Tell us what to do; we are willing to work, but do not know how,"—why not take the department work? There is Mrs. A's literature paper from your own union, and Mrs. B's on county fair work.

"Yes," says Mrs. S., hearing us talking this over, "There is that department of heredity, we can make any number of meetings of that out from your plan presented at institute. We can ask our physicians to help," and then, Mrs. H. adds, "We ought to have a fee."

There is work enough to do. How it towers and keeps ahead of us. I find that the busiest women, those whose hearts and hands are full, find the most time to do. One beauty in this work is that it is not stereotyped, no set formula binds our efforts; it is expansive as the soul which wills it. It may be done at odd minutes, the hour of devotions counts as its largest factor. There and there alone, is human power linked to the Divine will and efforts are multiplied which in their simplicity would seem worthless.

We leave on the 7 a. m. train tomorrow for Bennington county institute, to be held in Bennington, and for Rutland county, to be held in Fairhaven. Return, en route home speak at Shoreham, Hinesburgh, Manchester, Highgate, and Sheldon.

At the various institutes my part has been to present scientific temperance instruction, heredity and hygiene, and to stand in the gap when others failed, consequently I found myself at one institute and another saying of each department, "This is the most important."

Legislative work often fell to me, and was considered at every institute. We are working up to constitutional prohibition in 1890, are studying the method of amending constitution, etc. We desire to so instruct our boys and girls and to so learn ourselves that we may be able to help to secure this. To this end Mrs. Foster's amendment catechism will be studied.

Mrs. E. G. Greene.

A HAPPY COMPARISON.

Dear Union Signal:—After nearly eight months of almost continuous revival work I have come to my little cottage at Lake Bluff, for a few weeks of rest and recreation in order to be the better fitted for renewing the battle in the near future.

The "season" here has not opened formally yet although a number of families are here and getting settled, and it is quiet and restful, and tonight with the evening shadows gathering around and the song of the whippoor-will floating in from the trees, I feel like saying a few words about our work.

The work presses too closely to allow of much time for retrospecting, but if any discouraged or despondent one thinks we haven't grown in this grand temperance movement, then let her look back at our beginning ten years ago and mark the change. Or if ten years is too far, then say five years, and compare, no, contrast then and now.

True the Republican national convention (if you make it *no*tional instead of *na*tional I shall not complain), ignored the live issue and bid for the votes of the liquor league, but that was only a party convention and does not quite own our native land.

Take Illinois in her Sunday school work at last convention recommending the quarterly temperance lesson and then the national Sunday school convention at Louisville recommending that a temperance lesson be provided quarterly and it was not by a small majority but by a grand majority that made it almost a "boom." I have been trying to fancy those two national conventions drawn up for inspection and arrayed on opposite sides of the street, and a chance given for the people whom these conventions represent to compare the two bodies.

A good, old-fashioned, thoroughly orthodox Methodist from a town in central Illinois was in Chicago at the time of the convention, and looked in upon the headquarters of some of the delegates. His testimony was, "Tobacco and liquor everywhere until you could scarcely breathe." Which company better represents the homes of our nation? The one that gathers around the wine table and with the room so beclouded with tobacco smoke that the delegate can hardly distinguish his neighbor and thus discuss the country's needs, or the company who from their closets and from communion with God meet with Bible in hand, and what is better still the Word abiding in their hearts, discuss and plan as for eternity?

The army of Sunday school workers outnumber the politicians and while they cannot all vote they have a power that will finally prevail, the power of deep settled conviction of duty and the courage to work for the best interest of the individual and that means the greatest good to the greatest number.

Now that the Louisville convention has done, so nobly I suggest to the workers who pressed the matter upon the convention that they ascertain the place of meeting of the evangelical alliance, and headed by our earnest, plucky, persevering Mrs. Ellen M. Watson, they march in on them and ask for a temperance day in the week of prayer.

But I have given too much space and my letter has already grown too long. I have not been able to do as much active temperance work during the past year as I expected. My way has been in the line of evangelistic work almost altogether, and while it is not distinctively temperance work it is a temperance work that goes down to the very foundation. A soul converted to God is not simply reformed but is a new creature, and while my Heavenly Father has led me in this especial line of work I have rejoiced to hear of the glorious work done in the various departments of our work in state and national unions.

I am weary bodily but my heart is full of earnest desire to see the work go on and my prayer is that every worker may be given not only all sufficient grace but physical strength for the great work. Mary H. Villars.

TRANS-CONTINENTAL LETTER.—NO. III.

Dear Union Signal:—Allow me for the present to pass over in silence ten beautiful weeks spent in the work in California, and to tell you at once of one day here in Oregon, just passed. Its scenes to me were strangely tender, its impressions very blessed, and I hasten to give them to you, before the soft dew of present association shall have been dried up by the strong wind of passing events.

Last Tuesday morning found us in the little town of Forest Grove, where I had spoken the night before. Early we went our way to the government Indian school located at this place. The pleasant buildings are just at the edge of the village, and indeed there is no settlement west of the town; occasional farms in the valleys only being between it and the great Pacific. The clouds hung low over the mountains, and the veiled sky softened the singing of the birds, and harmonized with our subdued feelings. A little Indian girl of the tribe of the Spokane's had died at the school, had fallen asleep in Jesus, and after morning prayers in the chapel we were to attend the funeral services.

About seventy-five boys in army blue, some almost men, were drawn up in line and marched into the chapel, the girls, forty or fifty, following to the music of the organ, played by one of the older girls. The room was furnished with benches and desks made by the boys; the girls do the sewing and general house work.

Dr. and Mrs. Minthorne in charge of the school, are members of the society of Friends, they were formerly in Iowa and Mrs. M. was in our W. C. T. U. work; now as loyal descendants of William Penn, they serve the governments in its attempt to deal justly, to love mercy and act honestly with these former owners of the soil. It would have saved many lives and much treasure if political economy could have learned of Christian philanthrophy, that it is cheaper and better in every sense to educate an Indian child than to kill an Indian brave. The government appropriates one hundred and seventy-five dollars per year for each scholar in the school, this must cover all expenses for board tuition and clothing. Until lately no appropriation had been made for buildings.

In some of our wars with the Indians, the cost, according to official returns, has been one million dollars for every Indian killed. Are not Christian philanthropy and true political economy always at one?

The teacher in charge for the day was Mrs. Mills, wife of Rev. Mr. Mills, Congregational pastor, formerly of Iowa, and a staunch friend of temperance everywhere. The reading of scripture, alternate verses by the teacher and the scholars, the recitation of scripture, the singing, the prayer, were doubly tender and solemn because of the death in the midst. And when all gazed on the face in the coffin where loving tribute had been paid in white pansies and lilies, there too was Christian education in the simple ceremony. The whole school followed the procession by a footpath through the fern carpeted groves of great trees, to the little cemetery where two of the oldest boys had prepared the grave. The school formed in hollow square while the last words were said. I shall never forget that sacred hour!

Mountains all about, not snow capped, but densely wooded with deep green firs, and tall sentinel pines; vistas shut in by walls of trees, or opening out in long dim sweep of curve and swell; bits of color set in floating frames of mist; sometimes the sky all clear, and soon again a gentle wave of denser ether sprinkling rain scarce heavier than dew; ferns and wild flowers at our feet, with now and then a wee ripe strawberry; a single chirp from one lonely bird who seemed not to know the sorrow that had hushed the other songsters of the wood; the open grave, the coffin above; the two Indian youths in work clothes leaning on their spades; four other dark skins standing, as if to guard the still form till Mother Earth should take it to her bosom; the singing, sweet and full, tenor, soprano, alto, with deep strong bass; "It is well, it is well, it is well;"—the prayer by the man of God, the words of Jesus, "Let not your hearts be troubled," with the beautiful lesson taught; the faces of the children, the uncovered heads of the boys, the bowed heads of the girls; the careful letting down of the coffin, the filling of the grave, all, all—nature's glories, human loves, human sorrows, Christian faith,—these have built a city in my thought that shall remain till I see the city which lieth four square, of which God Himself, is the light. Judith Ellen Foster.

THE SALOON SPIDER.

A spider sat in his basement den
Weaving his snares for the souls of men.
"I will not work with my hands," quoth he,
"An easier pathway must open for me."
He spreads his tables of greenest baize,
And many a cunning trap he lays.
The marble halls are smooth and white,
The den is blazing with floods of light.
Behind the bar the spider stands;
There is not a wise man in the land
But will not lose his wit and become a fool
If he yield's himself to the spider's rule.
There's not a man so strong and brave
But the spider will dig him a shameful grave;
There's not a youth so noble and fair
But will learn to drink and gamble and swear
In the spider's den. But do not, pray,
Dare to dispute the spider's sway.
If you sweep the den with the law's strong broom
Perhaps you might make a cleaner room.
But then men are fearful—a little afraid
In fact, on spiders to make a raid;
'Twould stir up excitement, and spiders must live,
So our dear household treasures we patiently give.
The spider still sits in his basement den
Lying in wait for the souls of men.

TALKS WITH YOUNG FOLKS.

AUNT LIZZIE.

When the dictation lesson was over and the lists of "Wearing Apparel" corrected, it was found that nineteen per cent. of the pupils had misspelled the common word, alpaca, in every case inserting a syllable a between al and pac.

The nineteen per cent. were astonished, in the first place, to have it proved that they could misspell a word with which they were so familiar, and in the second place that the word was not al*a*paca.

"I always called it 'alapaca,' Miss May," remonstrated Lottie Fairbanks.

"So I have noticed," replied Miss May drily. "I have been amazed all my teacher-life at the slip of so many tongues and pencils over that word. It really is surprising that as a rule we commit so many errors, and know so little concerning the common things around us. Instead of the usual Thursday afternoon lecture from me, this class may occupy the half-hour, taking this list for the subject of previous study. I have give twenty words: Annie may consider alpaca as hers, Belle may take bandana, Burt may have buckram, Callie calico; and so on alphabetically. The class may have one minute to select."

Each pupil proceeded with much animation to match his or her name with an article of wearing apparel. When "time" was called, all the hands were raised excepting Sarah Kline's and Sarah De Mott's. As their first names were identical, they could not determine which should appropriate "serge," and which "shawl." Miss May speedily decided the point, and three o'clock on Thursday afternoon brought together a class bright with the enthusiasm of a new exercise and thorough preparation. We will report a portion of the lesson:

"Alpaca," said Annie Seymour, "is a kind of cloth made of the wool of the alpaca, mixed with silk or with cotton. It is a Spanish word, and is the name of a Peruvian animal of the llama species, having long, woolly hair which exceeds in length that of the Cashmere goat, and is fully as fine."

Burt was ready to describe buckram as a coarse linen stiffened with glue. "It takes its name from Bochara, and is used in garments to keep them in some desired form."

Belle said: "The distinguishing marks of a bandana handkerchief are its solid red or blue ground, and its large white spots, round, or lozenge-shaped. Some authorities state that it is a Spanish word, signifying a handkerchief made of the inner bark of the lime tree; others that it is derived from an Indian word, meaning to bind or tie."

Callie said, "'Calico,' is synonymous with 'print' in the United States, but in England plain white shirtings and sheetings are called calicoes. The name is derived from Calicut, a town in India noted for its 'calicoes' and 'prints.'"

"I believe the first cambric," said Catharine Mounce, "was made in Cambray, Flanders, and it comes in two varieties, one a fine sheer white linen, and the other in various colors, and of fine hard-spun cotton."

"Chintz," said Charlotte Vaughn, "derives its name from the Hindu, chhint or chett. It is cotton cloth gaily printed. My grandmother told me that her authority was good for the statement that 'chintz' was not true chintz unless the seven colors could be pointed out in the design."

Daniel Laing came next: "Damask is named from the city of Damascus. We usually connect the word with table-linen of the best quality, but damask was formerly made only of the richest silk. In these days it is often composed of silk mixed with flax, or wool, or even cotton, but the figures are still raised while being woven in the loom."

Frank Fowler's article was fustian, which he said was named in honor of Fostal, a city which was the ancestor of modern Cairo; and he described it as "coarse, twilled cotton stuff which included in its varieties velveteen and corduroy."

Gertrude said that gauze derived its name from Gaza, in Palestine; Mary that muslin was named from Mosul, in Asia. Each of these were duly described. One of the Sarahs claimed that serge was from Xerga, a Spanish word used to denote a blanket of peculiar manufacture. As an article of wear it is a material composed of a worsted warp and a woolen weft. The other Sarah informed the class that "shawl" is a word "derived from the Sanskrit, and signifies floor, because shawls were originally designed for rugs and for tapestries."—Examiner and Chronicle.

CAPTAIN DEBORAH'S TALK.

Dear Children of the Prevention Army:—When the prairie fires were raging in Dakota last fall—but I must stop and ask, "Did you ever see a prairie fire?" It goes like a snake under the grass with just a little line of smoke first, and then all at once its fiery track is seen in the quick blaze which sends out another reconnoitering spark, with its smoke and flame following till the whole prairie is threaded with the network of fire—and it is almost impossible to stop it until a considerable space is plowed up and all its dry grass covered with the soil which has nothing in it that will burn. Well, last spring just such a fire as this started on a certain great prairie in Dakota. The poor settlers had very little plowed ground, and their houses were set right down on the grass, and the grass was burning for miles around. There was a little creek however that it was hoped the fire might not cross, and as most of the people were on the safe side of the creek, they made that the battle ground against the flames. Now and then however a spark would blow over the creek and set the stubble at once to burning. The people worked very hard, but the fire gained upon them steadily and their fears were in their faces.

Presently a band of children came marching over the little bluff, armed with mops, that were dripping with water. They used them like little soldiers and soon the wet mops did what all the people had failed to do up to that time. The fire was out and the children had their share of the glory and the rejoicing, you may be sure.

Now those same children have been formed into a division of our Prevention Army, and because of their valiant fire-fight they are called The Temperance Fire Brigade. I have no doubt they will try their wet mops on the fiery liquor traffic, and with as good success as they extinguished the prairie fire. I am sure it will encourage you all to know of this new accession to our ranks—and I hope you will send them some word of greeting by way of the "Camp fire."

Captain Deborah.

THE STUBBS LETTERS.—NO. III.

Thornbush, Ill.

My Dear Peter:—I was more pleased than I can tell you, to read in your last letter that you'd been to a temperance meetin' and heard a lady lecture. My advice is go every time you have a chance. Sich a talk as you wrote about is somethin' to hear. That same lady will lecture for us next week. Thornbush is sich a little bit of an out-of-the-way place we hadn't any of us hardly thought of about one of them grand kind of women stoppin' to talk to us. The meetin' will be in our church and your father and mother expects to drive in before supper and stay till next mornin' so as to attend. We're all full of it.

But oh Peter I heard a temperance talk last night I shall never forget as long as I live.

'Twas told me in the evenin' late that old Mrs. Thompson's son had dropped dead at the supper table. I left my tea things in the dish pan and hurried over. And sure enough, there was the poor fellow a layin' on the lounge, dead. And his tall old white-faced mother, that always looks like she might be one of the saints come down from heaven, with the holy light a shinin' in her face—well there she was, dear old woman, a wringin her hands and walkin' the floor, and talkin'—yes, talkin'—sayin' sich words as went to my very soul. She'd pause a moment and look at her boy; him, she said as used to be the hope of her heart, her comfort, and her joy—him as was the best and likeliest young lad in all the country round—her boy— "O" says she "Can this be my William? is this poor wreck my boy? this man that's jest dropped dead at his mother's feet—jest died a drunkard's death? for it was drink that killed him—can this be my darlin' boy? and where is he now? And then she screamed out, "O where is his unforgiven soul? Must I never see him any more—my fair, bright, curly-headed Willie—my boy, my boy, my boy!" And then she dropped on her knees and kissed him, and kissed him; and the big tears fairly rained upon his cold purple face. Then she raised her streamin' eyes to the ceilin' and claspin' her thin hands together, still kneelin' by the lounge, she prayed sich curses of God on the liquor traffic and on all them that's engaged in it, and on all them as tempted her boy—sich curses as amost curdled the blood in my veins. I jest stood in the door-way alookin' at the scene. I couldn't speak nor move, except to shake and tremble. Yes tremble; I trembled for them who was the subjects of them bitter curses. And the dear old woman looked saintlier than ever; tho' I must say she was the very last person I should have guessed knew how, or felt inclined, to pray sich awful words. When her prayer was ended she turned and threw her arms about her dead son and sent up sich a cry to Heaven, as rings in my ears even yet. She kissed the bloated swelled face, and called her boy's name, and laid her cheek by his, and then sprung to her feet, and walked, and talked, and went over it all again. At last the minister come; he walked right in, and seein' how things was, he jest held her hand in his, and said in a choked sort of whisper, 'Let us pray.' Sich a prayer for help I never heard till then.

But this letter is too long already: I'll tell you all about it when I see you.

Write soon to your loving Aunt Jane.

GARFIELD'S LAST DREAM.

MRS. MARTHA WINTERMUTE.

It was said of old, whom the gods would bless,
And lure to shores of elysian rest,
They would waft a vision lovely and clear
Of what in life was cherished most dear;
Our hero's last dream was of Mentor.

Statesman and warrior true and grand,
With a love aglow for his "Native Land,"
With his soul of strength and his honored name,
And his life gone up to the topmost fame,
Strange he should dream of Mentor.

Of a quiet home and a mother's form;
A sacred hearthstone bright and warm;
Beloved wife and children dear,
That was the vision strong and clear,
Living and true of Mentor.

Firmer than all the warrior's might,
Clearer than all the statesman's light,
Deeper in life and nearer to heaven
Was that last sweet dream by the angels given,
O sanctified home at Mentor!

Waves of Elberon, sky and sea,
Pause! as the wand of eternity
The gate of his beautiful dream unbars
Unto the home beyond the stars,
True and glorified Mentor.

MAY NORTON'S MEDITATION.

MARY E. C. WYETH.

"I don't see how it is, mamma, that some folks never do blunder with their tongues, while I am constantly saying something that I would give a deal not to have said. I declare I wish I had been born without a tongue, or with none to speak of," laughed May Norton, as she returned to her mother's room, after escorting a caller to the door. "What do you think I was stupid enough to say to Mrs. Jenner just now? I know she'll hold a grudge against me for it to her dying day. I wish I had been in Jericho before she came in."

Mrs. Norton looked up at her impulsive daughter. May understood the look, and blushed.

"There it is again," she said. "A smile on your lip, but a tear in your eye." What have I said now, pray?"

"Recall your own words, my child," said her mother, and then judge for yourself. "By thy words shalt thou be justified?"

"But what did I say, mamma? I protest——"

"There, stop in time, my dear," answered her mamma. "Did you not assert that some folks never blunder with their tongues, whereas the apostle says that in many things we all offend? And was not your declaration that you had wished you had been born tongueless, an idle word, to say the least? Then how can you know that Mrs. Jenner will cherish a life long grudge? And do you truly wish you had been in Jericho, an hour ago?"

"O, mamma" cried May, "Four untruths, almost in a breath. The tongue is an unruly member. By my words I am condemned." But indeed——

"Indeed, my dear, I am thankful that you can see your danger. Your thoughtless impulsive habit of speech has given me much concern. So much evil is wrought for want of thought. And so often, impulsive people speak words that are worse than those we term idle words, even rude, caustic, barbed, and not infrequently, venomous.

"Oh please, mamma," pleaded May, "I am guilty of every one. 'Let the dead past bury its dead.' But how am I to get the mastery of my unruly member? The apostle says—oh, all sorts of things about the tongue, you know."

"Among other things," said Mrs. Norton, "he says, that one endued with knowledge will show out of a good conversation, his works with meekness of wisdom. I understand this saying to mean that although the tongue, unbridled, is an unruly evil, and one that no man can tame, yet that heavenly wisdom sufficient to control and keep in subjection this little member, may be had for the asking. We need meekness and a good understanding of the scriptures to aid us in the development of a heavenly spirit, and if we have a heavenly spirit, we shall have also that discretion, that will lead us to consider our words before using them, and that purity of motive and kindness of intention that will savor all our words with that sincerity and good will that is the very essence of righteousness. The mouth, my child, is but the door of the heart. If the lips utter lies, it is because the heart that prompts them is false. If they speak burning, rankling words of envy, uncharitableness, or anger, it is because they come from a heart full of such uncleanness. Everlasting consequences depend on the use of the tongue."

Mrs. Norton did not preach lengthy sermons to her children. Her habit was to let fall a seed thought, and leave to time and reflection, and the fertilizing and fructifying influence of God's grace, the development of it. So, as she passed out of the room, with the echo of her last words vibrating in her daughter's hearing, it was not strange that the weighty words repeated themselves to the earnestly attentive ear of the young girl. "Everlasting consequences depend on the use of the tongue."

May Norton believed herself to be a disciple of Christ, and one sincerely desirous of leading a life conformed to the likeness of her Master in temper and conduct. It was in no careless mood that she had brought herself to consider her great weakness, that of hasty, and unguarded speech. So now it was in no careless mood that she thought over her mother's wise and gentle teachings. "'The mouth, my child, is but the door of the heart.' If that is true, and certainly it is true," reflected May, "how basely selfish is this heart of mine. Oh, why did I not think to show out of a good conversation, some meekness of wisdom, the other day when I chatted so carelessly with Frank Waring about those Sunday excursions of his? Or when I criticised so unmercifully Ada Gill's taste in dress, and described poor Mrs. Ash and her family in such ridiculous terms? Ah, me! And those words can never be recalled. And now, I take for the first time, the full force of Cousin Bert's goodnatured rebuke yesterday, when I was telling in my most reckless, extravagant style, of our adventures in Oakland, 'I won't say that you lie, little May, for that would be impolite, but you talk just as I do when I lie.' Ah, I have need enough of meekness of wisdom."

Meditation is not always delightful. Yet it is often wholesome and beneficial. Mrs. Norton was glad to believe that May's reflections had not been profitless, when, a few hours later, she observed her, in a merry group of young friends, with a dainty precision of speech, carefully avoiding alike all excess of words, and every tendency to undue license of that unruly member, whose powers she had so lately come seriously to consider.

"Mamma" said May, that night, "I have asked for the meekness of wisdom and I do believe I have received a portion, for I did think this afternoon, when all the girls were here, to give no offense with my tongue. I kept saying in my heart that warning of the Lord Jesus 'By thy words shalt thou be justified—and by thy words shalt thou be condemned.'"

"And the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace, of them that make peace," said her mother, as she pressed a good night kiss upon the mouth that she prayed might be the door of a heart ever endued with the meekness of wisdom.

A MOTHER'S EXPERIENCE WITH A NERVOUS CHILD.

Realizing the importance for several years before I married of a careful study of child-life and hereditary influences, I began to study the little ones and the effects of the different treatment and education of children which I saw going on around me.

My conclusions arrived at during that time were, that children brought up by Christian parents, could be controlled through love with some trifling form of punishment to exact obedience. But when I came to have a child of my own I was surprised to find how difficult it was to impress upon the childish mind the necessity of obedience. My little one would submit and obey, but twenty minutes after would be repeating the same act. Of course such actions required the utmost vigilance upon my part, as well as wisdom. I must govern with love as well as firmness to teach him that obedience is the first law of God. I thankfully can record that he was the sweetest child to punish, despite the most persistent will I ever saw in a child, and would always kiss us afterward and say, "I will be a good boy."

This same condition existed for several months until the summer time, when he was prostrated by the heat, from which he did not recover until winter. During that time he would act strangely, and any one not familiar with the sickness would have called him "a spoiled child" when in one of his spells. He would scream at the top of his voice for half an hour at a time, and we were obliged to suffer it for nothing would pacify him, and afterward he would be almost supernaturally lovely.

The physician diagnosed his case as follows: "Too great activity of brain for the body." One said that he was too spiritual, not enough of the earth, earthy; that he was all nerve and brain, but would be different when he was older and able to play out doors. Of course the parents were judged harshly again and again from the actions of such a child and some would say, "It is only because of the way he is trained;" which was of course very irritating.

My husband and I made this child an especial subject of prayer, and rested upon the promises given to us in the Word, knowing "that all things work together for good to them that love God."

At one time he was so ill that we could only think of death, or lunacy as an alternative. He would in some of these spells cry out, "Make prayer, make prayer!" as if he realized the keeping power of Jesus to make him better, and we would kneel down and pray that this sickness might be removed. Often this would terminate the outcries, but again we would have to repeat it before he would be quiet.

One morning after screaming more violently than usual he fell asleep, and during that time I especially prayed that the will of the Lord should be done in and upon him. He awakened very sweet and lovely and better in every respect.

He never was so sick again, although a great deal of this nervousness still remained.

To avoid contests and to make him happy I would take the horse and carriage and drive out in the country twice a day. The fresh air seemed indispensable to him and he needed to be out as much as possible; so I hunted out all the cool shady nooks to keep him from the heat of the warm sultry days of summer and how I sympathized with the mothers of little ones, who suffer similarly and yet are obliged to be stifled in the small enclosures of city houses.

After hearing a gentleman describe the tortures of remorse and how he would be almost insane many times in such sufferings, I began to look through his eyes and knowledge at my child. I saw the secret of this gentleman's recovery was rest and diversion, and applied the same test to my child. At the same time I was told by his grandfather not to whip, but to divert. After a trial of two months this plan has worked charmingly.

I also noted a decided change for the better after a contest I had with him for an hour to make him repeat after me, "Mamma, I will obey you." My mode of discipline in that case was for him to sit down in a room until he was willing to obey, but before he did so, I knelt down with him and asked the Lord to give him a willing mind.

Usually, when all means of diversion fail I resort to the punishment of the chair to quiet his nerves, but mainly endeavor to control through his reason by stories and rhymes having a moral in them. The teachings of "Susie's Six Teachers," by Mrs. Prentiss, I find helpful, and more easily understood by children, than the prosaic form of right and wrong, without appeal to the imagination.

As a child I was trained to blind obedience, and I endeavored to train my child in the same way. I obeyed because I was commanded, not because I was coaxed. I was taught to believe that children should not be coaxed, but now I know that some dispositions can only be trained successfully by that method. MOTHER.

The Sunday School Lesson.

July 20.] Third Quarter, No. 3. [1884.

TOPIC: GOD'S COVENANT WITH DAVID.

LESSON TEXT.—II. Samuel 7:1–16.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Thy throne shall be established forever. II. Samuel 7:16.

TIME.—A few months later than the last lesson.

PLACE.—Jerusalem.

1. When the soul has rest from its enemies, and God gives such seasons of rest to us as well as to David, it is sometimes the case that we forget Him to whom we have gone desperately and agonizingly when our enemies were besetting us on every side. It is a good lesson to draw from the very first of the text that David thought upon God and His glory when he was at ease and in peace, when he might have thought, as so many of us do in such conditions, that he could get along without Him.

2. There is something about our God when once we love Him, and love to serve Him, that makes us desire to keep Him with us. Peter on beholding His glory desired to build a tabernacle in which to enshrine Him. David longed for a beautiful house to dedicate to Him and to be His abiding place on earth. The human heart is His dearest throne—His tabernacle is with men. "I will come in unto him and sup with him," is the sweet familiar word of God to us in answer to this longing of the loving heart.

3. God does not suffer an honest desire to honor Him, even though it be a mistaken one, to waste itself or be perverted through the mistake. He hastens to enlighten us, as He did that very night show to Nathan the "more excellent way" which Himself had planned. He honors even our mistakes if they be on the side of loyalty, but will not have us disquiet or even inconvenience ourselves by them. He even said to David comfortingly, as Solomon reports in I. Kings 8:18, "Thou didst well that it was in thine heart."

4. Note the fact that even God's devoted servants and ordained teachers may be mistaken, unless they have the "word of the Lord. Nathan without this, advised David to do all that was in his heart, but the Divine decision was not long delayed.

5. God sets the seal of his displeasure on war and bloodshed when He tells David directly and not by the mouth of any prophet, as David relates in I. Chronicles 22:8, that he had shed too much blood upon the earth to build a house unto the Lord, and that only "a man of rest" should be so honored. He is the God of peace.

WHAT IS A PARTY?

A well-defined answer to this query seems to be specially called for just at present in the face of the displays of party arrogance and party tyranny we are called upon to witness. Webster defines the term as "a number of persons united in opinion or design in opposition to others in the community. It differs from faction in implying a less dishonorable association or more justifiable designs." The greatest authorities in political science unite in regarding the right of independent judgment expressed in a public and fearless opposition as a special privilege of a free country, a privilege accorded its citizens without incurring in its use any opprobrium that should becloud the exercise of private rights or reflect upon personal character. Referring to the growing prosperity of an early era of the Republic one writer remarks, in noticing one of the concomitants of that increasing strength: "Where there is political power there is opposition in a free land, and the great leaders of that day neither forfeited their reputations as patriots or their character as statesmen by the assertion of honest differences of opinion." Says Francis Lieber, one of the weightiest statesmen of modern times: "The protection of the minority leads to that great institution, as it has been boldly but not inappropriately called, The Opposition. A well organized and fully protected opposition in and out of the legislature—a loyal opposition, by which is meant a party which opposes, on principle, the administration or the set of men who have, for the time being, the government in their hands, but does so under and within the common fundamental law," this he considers as one of the most "important elements of civil liberty, whether considered as a protecting fence or as a creative power." Prof. Woolsey, the sage of Yale, echoing the same thought says: "The restraint of public opinion on the measures of public men is of no value if that public opinion does not express itself in some way that can be felt."

But what about the loud denunciations for deserting a "glorious old party," and bolting its nominations? Let Prof. Woolsey answer:

"This principle which puts partisanship in the room of patriotism, and fear in that of conviction, only retards the death of a party that is mortally wounded already.... If a man as a representative owes it to his party to vote with it through thick and thin, and is bound, if only a private citizen, to support the regular candidate, there is a turning of moral rules upside down which may corrupt the character of a whole country."

In order to secure loyal allegiance, and to prevent the disruption of their forces by new organizations, parties must have "some sort of moral element to bind them together." One party professes to be the party of reform, and the party lash is vigorously snapped over the heads of those who are disposed to look about them for new affiliations; but what moral cement have parties in this year of our Lord 1884 to bind their organization together? What high moral principles do they uphold so as to claim the continued fealty of men with deep moral convictions? Look through one of the platforms recently adopted and you cannot discover any such thing as an honest and quick political conscience; there throbs not through it any pulses of healthy moral conviction It starts out with "the glittering generality" that "it is the first duty of a good government to protect the rights and promote the interests of its own people." To prove their faith in this they assert their claim to "the largest diversity of industry," they "recognize the importance of sheep husbandry," and many kindred subjects, all on a dead level of mediocrity and policy. But we desire to be just in our animadversions; they did screw up their moral courage into inserting an anti-polygamy resolution! How heroic that was! It was like the Irish soldier cutting off the legs of an enemy, and when asked in reply to his boast of the act why he had not cut off his head instead, had to confess that that "was cut off already." The outraged moral sense of a whole people, regardless of party affiliations, would not allow them to ignore entirely that gigantic abomination. A general feeling of revolt at its outrage upon decency had long condemned it. Hence it did not cost anything to be brave on this subject. It was not policy to be otherwise. But which of its pledges in regard to it has the Republican party ever redeemed? James Buchanan did send an army to Utah, and attempted to suppress polygamy. Since his day, through the whole history of the dominant party, it has been allowed to grow and flourish like a green bay tree. And the end is not yet.

What interferes the most with the rights and interests of the people, of all classes and conditions, is the accursed monopoly of the liquor traffic. Its relentless tyranny is grinding down their rights and crippling their interests more and more. This great party of reform, the jealous protector of the rights of the people, and the guardian angel of their interests, has been reasoned with and appealed to again and again to give them the "good government" that will "protect" them against the ravages of this great and terrible wrong; and how have they responded? Hugging closer and closer to their bosom their own self-interest, and with the fear of the great liquor corporations before their eyes, they treated the appeals of the people, dearly as they pretend to love them, with cool and cruel indifference by entirely ignoring the whole subject, and met the supplications of the women of the land, with hearts quivering with agony for their homes, with derision and scorn.

This is the party which cracks the whip over our heads, and demands of us the belief that the life or death of the country depends upon its victory or defeat next November!

We are not oblivious of the good one party has done. But that is past. Its mission is fulfilled; for by refusing to take up the great moral issue which lies directly in its path it proves itself unworthy of a continued life. Its present status reminds us of the story of the Crooked Traveller, the deformed man who, on his arrival at a provincial town was asked what place he had come from. "Straight from London," was the reply. "Then," said the inquirer, "you must have got terribly twisted on the road."

A new party—a party of conscience and reform, a party of prohibition and other kindred great issues—is the imperative demand of the hour. With this fairly launched, a new era is going to dawn. Listen! "Dinna ye hear the slogan? The Campbells are coming!" Men of principle, of quiet thought and of deep-rooted convictions that have long been sick at heart where they are, are going to leave the old political parties by the hundreds of thousands, and cause such an overthrow and a clearing away of obstacles as will prepare the way for better days, men who will press the battle to the gates and hold open the gates until He shall come whose right it is.

The following letter from Hon. H. R. Goss, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Lansing, Mich., to Mrs. Mary H. Hnnt, shows the working of their compulsory temperance education law:

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION,
LANSING, May 29, 1884.

DEAR MADAM:—Yours of yesterday is before me. You ask, "Are teachers endeavoring to fit themselves to teach on this subject? meaning physiology and hygiene with particular reference to the effects of alcoholic drinks, stimulants and narcotics upon the human system, as required after Sept. 1, the present year?"

I can answer without doubt, that I think they are.

The law requiring teachers to give instruction in this particular study took effect Sept. 7, 1883, but it gave them time to prepare for examination in the same until Sept. 1, 1884, after which time "No certificate shall be granted to any person who shall not pass a satisfactory examination in said study."

As the good results of the law I notice that publishers in several states have been and are hard at work getting out books to meet the demands of the law, the teachers, students, and the people.

The books that have appeared within the last six months are far in advance of any former published works, and some of them are really meritorious.

As the results of the law people in all parts of the country are waking up to the importance of the subject upon which the teachers of Michigan must soon be qualified to stand an examination and give accurate and thorough instruction in all our schools.

The interest is rapidly increasing. Not only teachers, but school officers as well as temperance associations in this and many other states are writing to this department to find out what is being done, and what books are adopted, or what the department considers the best for schools and teachers. Leading educators as well as common district school teachers are intensely interested. They have not waited for a book to be recommended but have purchased books on their own judgment and are studying and teaching the principles of physiology and hygiene and the effects of alcoholic drinks etc., as contemplated by the law.

In my opinion there is nothing that could have been done more successfully and with less prejudice to advance the cause of temperance in this state, and to produce beyond our state boundaries so great a wave of public sentiment in favor of total abstinence, than what has been done in the passage of the law referred to.

The next will no doubt be a temperance generation, and the children of the present age, by their knowledge they get at school, and with their temperance text books at home, will do untold work in reforming such members of their firesides as may not be free from intemperate habits. Yours very truly,

H. R. Goss, Supt. Public Instruction, D. P.

THE Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway line has become tee-teetotal, if that is possible. An employe found drunk or known to have been drunk, either on or off duty will be discharged; so says its most recent order. Also persons who are known to even visit drinking places shall not be employed and no man once discharged for this cause will be employed again. This is stringent, but necessary. Science demonstrates that alcohol is a foe to that certainty and security which the railways promise their passengers, and the officials are only applying the conclusions of science to the benefit of travelers.

WE received cards of invitation from Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, to a reception in honor of Mrs. Pearson, of England, on June 30, which we doubt not was a most delightful affair. Mrs. Pearson will lecture and labor among us for some months, and a wide welcome awaits her.

Mountain Lake Park, Md., the home of Jennie Smith, the W. C. T. U. Railway Evangelist, and the summer resort of our good friends, the Summerfield Baldwins, is "out" in an artistic pamphlet (cover of the latest craze, in woolly paper) setting forth its beauties in type and engravings worthy of the new masters. It makes summer on the heated pavements all the more hot and dusty to look into these cool retreats and be able to look only.

The W. C. T. U. of Walla Walla made a noble effort in behalf of the rescue and reformation of fallen women a short time since, under the leadership of Mrs. Col. Tannatt.

* * *

I learn that a good Baptist pastor in this city is much exercised because, as he says, "a professedly Christian temperance organization (W. C. T. U.) allowed a parody on the United States constitution to be read at its Fourth of July celebration." The facts are quite otherwise. The W. C. T. U. of Evanston being public spirited enough to work up an old fashioned celebration of the national holiday, secured a temperance oration of very high order from Rev. Dr. Fawcett, of Chicago, and the reading of the new Declaration of Independence by that prince of elocutionists, Prof. Robert L. Cumnoch. Now the new Declaration is simply a "bill of resistance" to King Alcohol instead of King George, and if the complaining clergyman had been on the grounds, I feel sure that he would have applauded as lustily as the rest, as the sonorous sentences piled up the indictments against this foe of today, rather than against a poor old skeleton whose body has been dust for more than one hundred years.

* * *

Besides, England is as loyal to America today as ever a mother was to her married daughter, and for one I don't believe in firing the hearts of the little folks every year over the wrongs that have long ago been righted, and against the dear old home that now stands wide open to every returning child.

* * *

And here right at our thresholds is the real king of terrors. Let us declare against him year by year, and fight too for an independence of the paralyzed brain, the enslaved heart and the manacled hand.

* * *

Speaking of Evanston, Illinois, reminds me that Evanston, Wyoming, has just organized a W. C. T. U. A plan for the elder Evanston to lend a hand to this new society might be worth considering.

* * *

That tireless woman, the superintendent of scientific temperance instruction in the N. W. C. T. U., who sleeps not in summer, and stays not in winter, has made an arrangement with the Martha's Vineyard Summer Institute for Teachers, to add a department of hygienic physiology, "with special reference to the effects of alcoholics and narcotics, under the direction of A. B. Palmer, M. D., L. L. D., professor of pathology and practice of medicine, and dean of the department of medicine and surgery in the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, and author of a treatise on the science and practice of medicine." This instruction will begin July 14, and continue through the sessions of the institute. Mrs. Hunt is as indefatigable as she is clever.

Mrs. P. D. Brown, the efficient president of northern California sends this little communication to my outlook:

I wish the Watch Tower were high enough for the observer to look over the mountain tops intervening and see the California workers endeavoring and already finding themselves successful in introducing physiology and hygiene into the public schools. Two county boards have already consented to adopt Steele's work. One of these counties contains the second largest city of our state.

Mrs. Foster's visit was a marked success. Her clear, logical way of putting things convinced the doubting. The plan marked out by her for legislative work was most helpful and will be carried out. The receptions tendered her were as gratifying to us as to her. The Oakland reception was held in the most beautiful of Oakland's elegant homes, which was a bower of roses. The conservatory hardly rivalled the drawing room. In San Francisco fifteen hundred, it was estimated, came to greet her at the reception there. The San Francisco secretary, Mrs. L. P. Williams, would make a success of anything. We are to hold two sessions of the W. C. T. U. during the Chautauqua circle, beginning next Monday.

The Western Sunday School Assembly at Lisbon, Iowa, celebrated the Fourth of July with a temperance jubilee whereat Miss Willard officiated as chief speaker to an immense audience. The New Declaration was read there also.

* * *

And at Independence, Iowa, Francis Murphy celebrated Iowa's independence in company with 5,000 Iowa prohibitionists.

* * *

While at Portland, Oregon, Iowa's peerless orator, Judith Ellen Foster, gave the waiting concourse the true story of "Iowa Redempta."

* * *

New Westminster, B. C., has had a new sensation. The first woman ever heard to speak in public in that frontier city was Mrs. Foster on June 28.

* * *

De Pauw University (Ind.) has a prize of $30 given by the state W. C. T. U. for the best essay on temperance. Mr. A. J. Beveridge secured it this year.

* * *

Two days of the temperance jubilee at Clear Lake, Iowa, will be given to the W. C. T. U., probably July 26 and 27.

* * *

Miss Henrietta Moore summers in Minnesota, working for the W. C. T. U. Her flights are as wide and strong as her spirit.

* * *

In St. Paul, where she is "at this writing," the Y. W. C. T. U. gave on July 1, an entertainment for the newsboys and bootblacks. Miss Moore did the talking and boys were all pleased.

* * *

I sometimes think of the W. C. T. U. gatherings in the better country, made possible by the frequent removals thither by some of our "brightest and best". Among the recent travelers to that "bourne" are Mrs. Nellie McElwin, of Elyria, O., who died June 4, and who is fondly mourned by the bereft sisterhood of the union. Then there is the W. C. T. U. of Cheney, W. T., in whose memory will ever live the dear vice president just gone over the river—Mrs. Mary Eastman, true wife, happy mother, and noble Christian worker. A little union in northern Wisconsin is bereaved of its "eldest sister", Mrs. Mildred Butcher, of Maiden Rock, whose service "for God and home and native land," lives on after her. All these and many more from the swelling chorus of national song, have joined "the choir invisible" and still we who are left sing on.

I think these are pretty strong words, but they ought to be if they are true:

Resolved, That any man who votes to put any political party into power that will sanction the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage votes for the making of drunkards and shutting men out of the kingdom of God.

They were spoken at the yearly meeting of the Ohio and Pennsylvania Freewill Baptists.

Mr. John B. Finch was recently made the recipient of a handsome tribute from the W. C. T. U. of Lincoln, Neb., in recognition of his valued service. The gift is a crescent and star on a standard of large size and worked in flowers. An eloquent presentation speech was made by Mrs. J. D. Newman, to which Mr. Finch made brief and touching response.

* * *

Maine workers are practical. This comes no doubt of long experience. Says a new union just formed at Old Orchard, "Mrs. Prescott of North Berwick came here the other day and organized a Y. W. C. T. U." How many "summer resorters" will go and do likewise?

* * *

Mt. Union, Pa., is more of a union than ever now that Narcissa White has been there and organized a W. C. T. U. Mrs. Dr. Borst, the corresponding secretary, speaks excellent things of her and her work.

* * *

"Miss Blanche Heazlitt," says Our Work, of New York, "is the youngest organizer of the state W. C. T. U. and also the most efficient." Since December Miss Heazlitt has been instrumental in forming six unions in St. Lawrence county, membership 96; five in Delaware county, membership 129; besides effecting a county union June 14, with seven auxiliaries; one new union has been formed in Otsego county with 72 members; one in Chenango with 40; one in Cattauraugus with 23; one in Steuben 27; and two in Cortland with 77 members; Steuben county was organized May 21, with eight auxiliaries. She can do much who can do this.

* * *

Mrs. Addie Chisholm, president of the Province of Ontario W. C. T. U., has ninety local auxiliaries under her presidential wing. A great growth in the last year.

During her months of service in North Carolina, Jennie Newby has delivered nearly one hundred temperance lectures, besides quite a number not directly upon that subject. She assisted in organizing four new unions and several Bands of Hope. There are now nine or ten unions in the state, and the outlook for temperance is brightening. Although at present behind in temperance reform, North Carolina has as earnest, determined workers, both men and women, as are to be found any where. The opposition to woman's public work has been a great barrier, but it is fast giving way.

* * *

"Oft the means to do ill deeds makes ill deeds done," was the case in Ft. Worth, Texas, the other day, when a drunken man shot down a good citizen and physician of the place. Texas must have prohibition of the "spirit" that makes pistol shooters as well as of the pistols.

ON DUTY.

News From the Field.

MISSOURI.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL ADDRESS — BY MRS. CLARA HOFFMAN.

When after years of patient endeavor, the electric current, then as now, subtle and mysterious, was made subservient to man's will, the first message flashed along the responsive wire was a pean of victory. Doubt, derision, toils, mistakes, defeats and losses were forgotten. In that supreme moment the creature stretched out loving hands to the Creator; the full heart voiced its utterance of praise and adoration in the historic words, "Behold, what God hath wrought!"

Gathered in this hushed audience tonight, looking back over the past two years, along the way we have come, we too, mothers and daughters of Missouri, lift devout eyes to the "hills from whence cometh our help" while from heart to heart echoes the glad refrain, "Behold, what God hath wrought!"

Two years ago our state union was organized at Hannibal. Prior to that time our efficient superintendent of evangelistic work, Mrs. Mary Clardy, then president of the state by national appointment, had done faithful work. She was the pioneer of the W. C. T. U. in Missouri. All honor to the pioneers in a good cause! The woodsman who blazes the trail for others to follow; the steadfast soul that turns from ease and honors and kindred in the pursuit of an aim pure, high and heroic. A handful of women, all unused to public work or speech, but with hearts hot and indignant over the wrongs of Missouri's children met to organize the Women's Christian Temperance Union. They know not much of plans or paths, but their earnest attitude said, "What wilt Thou have me to do?"

The old knights took an oath that they would deliver from Paynim hands the sepulcher of our Lord. These women took an oath that they would deliver from sacrilegious hands, not the empty tomb of the risen and ascended Lord, but the temple of the living God, outraged, defiled, destroyed.

Jean Paul says, "We touch heaven when we lay our hands upon humanity." Never did the high priest enter the holy of holies with a truer devotion than incited these earnest souls to enlist in this redemptive work. They looked out over this great rich state and saw its sons and daughters, for whom they had gone down into the "valley of the shadow of death" cursed with a heritage of ruin; saw their tender, childish feet, allured by ubiquitous temptations which the state approved and protected; nay, became partners in this price of blood.

The heathen emperor of China refuses to let the state derive a revenue from that which degrades its subjects. Let Christendom learn a lesson from the nation she seeks to teach. From that convention on the western shore of the Mississippi, a convention unheralded and unnoted, these women returned to their homes to begin the work, with a faith so sublime, an earnestness so heroic that they challenge respect and admiration. They had not like the knights of old pledged themselves to wrest victory at the point of the sword, from their opponents, and then return invested with all the "pomp and circumstance" of conquest, but they had pledged themselves to the performance of that which as much exceeded in difficulty the crusade of the Christian knights as it towered above it in nobility of purpose. They were pledged to confront a vice coeval with the race, the outcome of a brutal appetite on the one side and a more brutal greed of gain on the other. Behind this vice they found a traffic with an organized capital of millions, all protected by law, and devoted to the demoralization and destruction of our race. Without many resources they were to confront a foe whose hand grasps an overflowing treasury. Without political influence, they sought to outlaw a traffic that controls legislatures—that has only to demand and legislative bodies heed and obey. They saw the criminal indifference of church and state officials to this most prolific cause of poverty, woe and crime. They recognized that their field of labor lay in a state intensely conservative, far more so than states farther south. That they must run the gauntlet of adverse criticism concerning "woman unsexed and out of her sphere;" that they must stem the current of public opinion and ancient custom that have made women either the domestic drudge or the pretty butterfly of fashion, but have ever denied to her any part or interest in public affairs, though said affairs shall most vitally affect the sons and daughters in whom she is allowed to have an interest. All this, and more, they knew. They knew that every inch of ground must be stubbornly fought; must be wrested from the opposing force whether in open field, or skirmishes along the line. They knew they must defend the ground gained, from their friends —too often, alas! their own sex.

With such mountains of difficulty looming before them, why were they undaunted? What nerved the heart and strengthened the arm? Passionate love for home, husband and children was the motive power. Heroic faith in the God of battles, whose habitation is truth and righteousness, who will establish equity and judgment upon the earth; this was their armor of defense. Self-forgetful in the cause of humanity, they went forth even as David to confront the Goliath of this age. Like David they said, "We come unto thee in the name of the Lord of Hosts, the God of the armies of Israel, whom thou hast defied. That all the earth may know that the Lord saveth not with sword and spear; for the battle is the Lord's and He will give you into our hands."

This was their confidence; this their sublime trust. During the first year, the work seemed slow, O, so slow! There was no money in the treasury; there seemed no way to put money there. The work was all new and untried. Their friends were doubtful if in Missouri anything could be done. The people were not ready for this movement; "they must first be educated."

The old and favorite objection opposed to every reform. They forgot that agitation of a subject, and law growing out of that agitation, are the most potent and effectual of all educators. Reformers have never waited for public sentiment. The Master we follow did not wait for public opinion, neither did Paul and Luther, Cobden, Gambetta, Garibaldi, nor Neal Dow, our own venerable apostle of prohibition.

Many churches, the spiritual homes of this little band of women, felt no warm sympathy among its members for this movement. They were all virtuous, temperate and happy. They could see no necessity for organized work outside their own walls. They were disgusted with this fanatical agitation, this attempted establishment of a new order of things. Especially did many fear to bring the labored subject of temperance into the building consecrated to the worship of God. It may be questioned if any service be more acceptable to God than the teaching of His law written in the body which is His holy temple.

This withholding of support and recognition on the part of the household of faith gave us bitter heartache, for our women are loving and loyal to the church of Christ; but it led us to God, our refuge and ever present help. Some progress, however was made. Here and there were unions which showed their faith by work. Here and there unions became centers of prayer—strong, persistent; refusing to be denied. Sphinx-like lips were unsealed, and the talent long wrapped in a napkin was put out to usury against the Lord's coming. Here and there went forth laborers, upon whose heads no hands of ordination had been laid, but their vows were as sacred, their inspiration as sincere as though sanctioned by man. Not alone were hearts and lips consecrated to God, but pens as well. Through the faithful efforts of our press superintendent, and the almost unvarying kindness of our editors, an entrance to the columns of many papers, was obtained. Slowly were all learning the alphabet of our work.

At our first annual meeting in Kansas City thirty-four unions were represented by forty-nine delegates. Some unions had run well for a season; but ignorant of the methods of work, and discouraged by the obstacles that met them, with no one to instruct and encourage, they had ceased to meet or put forth effort; and while having a name to live, were, in fact, dead or dying. We had no headquarters in the state. Some little literature had been distributed, of which no account had been kept; 182 copies of our national organ, THE UNION SIGNAL, were taken in the state. We found it impossible to obtain superintendents for the lines of work already taken up. In some cases, ladies not present at the meeting were appointed to fill these places, and afterwards declined to serve.

The executive committee looked over the state and discussed the needs and possibilities of the work. After most prayerful consideration the committee decided to establish state headquarters at Kansas City; to send their president into the field, giving her entire time to the work; and in simple justice to pay for the future their efficient secretary for services, which up to that time, had received no compensation from the state. All this was an experiment, but they believed in God, and literally accepted the promise, "That all things are possible to them that believe."

During the year now closing, the advance along all lines of work in the state, has far exceeded our expectation. The number of unions auxiliary to the state, has increased three fold, while many others have been organized, but are not yet auxiliary. The money sent to headquarters for temperance literature, has often exceeded in one month the entire amount expended for that purpose during the previous year. Not less than 1,000,000 pages of temperance literature have been distributed by our society this year.

Full 700 UNION SIGNALS are taken, and the list increasing. Only two states exceed our subscription, Illinois by many hundreds and New York by less than a dozen.

The memorial donation of our state to the National union was $154, only exceeded by four states, although Missouri is one of the younger members of the W. C. T. U. sisterhood.

In spite of the intense prejudice against woman's public work, churches have opened their doors, and found us a harmless, peaceful folk. Finding we continued to be faithful wives, mothers and home keepers, ministers have given us the cordial hand grasp and earnest "God speed."

More and more has the press, that index of civilization, opened its columns to the subject of temperance and the multiplied phases of our work. New doors of opportunity have been opened to us whereby we have been able to present our cause before great and influential bodies—ecclesiastical and medical, of the school and the press. Once these doors were closed to us; now we are invited to enter, and receive unvarying courtesy. Two years ago, at the State Medical association in Hannibal a memorial was presented by our society. It met strong opposition and created a tempest in a teapot. Last year the association met at Jefferson City, and we were informed by a member of it that the investigation aroused by that memorial had made twenty-five converts to total abstinence. A committee of three physicians was there appointed to investigate the relation of alcohol to crime, disease and insanity. The committee did its duty faithfully, and a report was presented at the annual meeting of that association, held in Sedalia quite recently, by Dr. Potter, the temperance mayor of Cameron. He has consented to give the tabulated report to the W. C. T. U. for publication and free distribution in the state. It is worthy the consideration of every voter and every advocate of the Downing license law. Many of our unions have carefully studied, and faithfully done the work marked out by the national and state unions. Those that have been careless and unsystematic in these respects have not become strong and aggressive elements in their communities. Unions that neglect or delay to become auxiliary to the state have at best, but a weak and fitful existence. "In union there is strength," is demonstrated here. Many unions have given systematic study to God's word and grown strong thereby. Increasing interest is also shown in the studies of hygiene and heredity.

Shall we not be cheered with the fruition of earnest effort in the year just closing, and be inspired to hope and plan for a more abundant harvest in the year opening before us. Looking over the year past we find boundless cause for gratitude to God. He has brought us out into a larger place; and if the rough places have not all been made smooth, yet His hand has guided us and His right hand has upheld us. He has taught us wondrous things from His law, written not only in the revealed Word and Nature's fair face, but marvelously traced in His temple, the human body. Dear sisters, I cannot pass here without noticing my gratitude for your love and sympathy during the past year. Amid all the care and weariness of my work I have felt your love. It has lightened my burdens and soothed my distractions. When your president and faithful secretary walked through the valley of shadows, when they believed they were approaching the river over whose waters none return, your loving words, your earnest prayers prevailed, and the shadow was turned back upon the dial.

God bless our sisters—our dear Missouri women. With full hearts we set up our altar and inscribe thereon, "Hitherto the Lord has helped us."

I do not wish to anticipate the reports and recommendations of superintendents which will be given in the later sessions of this meeting, but there are a few points to which I would call especial attention.

Regular and systematic Bible study, in all our unions, and the use of leaflets issued each month by our National superintendent of evangelistic work.

Artesian wells do not go dry. When torrid heat has parched the upper surface into drifts of dust, there is an unexhausted vein below which gushes up through its narrow tube, defying the sun to quench its perennial flow. So must Christ within us gush up through our selfish humanity, overflowing our being with the benign influence of that love that passeth understanding. Then shall our weapons be drawn from God's spiritual armory, "mighty to the pulling down of the strongholds of Satan." Then shall our sisterhood become a force "fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners."

Far more attention should be given to juvenile work. Temperance Sunday schools for young and old with Bands of Hope for the little ones as a feature; industrial schools in larger towns, and night schools for street waifs. Through all there should be the most careful instruction, not only concerning alcohols but narcotics as well. Most thoroughly should the fearful effects of tobacco upon the heart and the nervous system be taught to the youth of our land. By every fair and open means we should seek to pledge all children against this most insidious poison. We are advised to let the matter of tobacco rest until we are rid of the greater evil of alcohol. Well meant but mistaken counsel. It is a danger of grave importance that impairs vision, affects the hearing, occasions loss of memory, disturbs all the nerve centers and creates a craving thirst. We rejoice in the prohibition of its sale to minors in Germany. France declares its use is affecting the stature and longevity of its people. Our own government has interdicted its use in the naval and military schools of the nation.

The fond hope of my heart is that through our legislature we may obtain scientific temperance instruction in the schools of our state. This will depend upon the W. C. T. U. and I recommend this campaign to begin at once. If we do not succeed in carrying the measure through our legislature we shall have gained the discussion and agitation of this question in every school district. If we succeed, which is more probable, the wily and unprincipled legislator will doubtless try to dodge it, or kill it by delays, the past fate of submission in Missouri; but few will readily put themselves on record against it. It means the regular systematic instruction of all our children. For when our common, high and normal schools, our state university, and the institutions for the unfortunate have all ingrafted this instruction into their curriculum, colleges and private schools must perforce follow suit. The object of taxation for public education is to make good citizens. Herein is our argument for this measure. When this subject is taught in every school room of our land it will not fail to reach every home, and to cause the arrest of thought therein. Five states of our Union, through the efforts of our society, have carried this measure through their general assemblies. Our women should attend school meetings and become members of all school boards. I trust this convention will decide to make organized effort on this most important question. Our faithful superintendent of this department will have plans and suggestions to submit. Our state secretary informs me that we have distributed ten times as much literature as last year; yet the quantity is all too small. The character of our temperance literature is most excellent. Never before were such minds, male and female turned to the contemplation of this subject. The highest medical authority of the world has rendered its verdict on alcohol; its food value (or valulessness); its relation to crime, pauperism, idiocy, insanity and heredity. Does Dr. Crosby present his "Calm View," and defense of moderate drinking? A dozen men every way his peer spring to the rescue, and not a shred of his argument remains. Is high license the craze that whirls even good men off their feet? (would they were more level headed), sharp and ringing denunciation, most complete refutation of falsehoods and fallacies, is hurled back by a Foster or Johnson. Let us use the printed page—let us scatter it over the length and breadth of the state.

It is of vital importance to our unions that the circulation of THE UNION SIGNAL be increased. Unions that do not take it are short lived, and weak while living.

The number of public meetings for the dissemination of gospel temperance should be greatly multiplied. The quiet union meetings held in the corner of the church or some lady's parlor may benefit the participants, but do not reach the people. I know timidity is the barrier, but there are always pastors and people who will help forward this work, and no union has the right to hide its light under a bushel. We are pledged to forget ourselves and remember only the cause.

We hope our wide awake and ingenious superintendent of hygiene and heredity will devise some plan to establish an institute or training school for our women on these gravely important subjects. She has awakened much interest. Mothers are reading, thinking, studying and praying as never before about the bodies of their children.

Finance: While our outlay of money this year has exceeded many times that expended last year, we all see how much more might have been done with an abundance of means. This difficult question will, I trust, receive attention in our meeting. I would recommend the very careful consideration of the finance system adopted by the Illinois state W. C. T. U. It is the best I know.

Organization: Every union should be a missionary society; its field the adjoining school districts, where effort should be made to establish unions and instruct them in lines of work. Our cities give but a forlorn hope for the consummation we so devoutly desire; but the rural districts promise a rich harvest, if only the seed is sown.

Dearly beloved, an open door is set before us; God grant us grace to enter; clearness of vision to see the opportunities presented, the resources at command, the needs of the work, the splendid possibilities of the present and the future. If our eyes are opened, we shall see the mountain filled with chariots and horses of the Lord. He who is for us is more than all who are against us, (notwithstanding our appeals oft seem unheard). Notwithstanding the criminal apathy and indifference of those who should be on the alert concerning the licensed crime of the 19th century, the liquor traffic; with its natural and inevitable outcome of drunkenness, municipal corruption, crime, poverty, immorality, ignorance, political abuses, marketed franchise, plundered treasuries, official chicanery and theft, assault and murder, divorce and desertion, profligacy, destitution, suffering and shame.

A leading journal, the New York Tribune, says: "There is today no such tremendous, far reaching, vital question as that of intemperance. In its effects and complications it overshadows all else. It is impossible to examine anything connected with the progress of civilization, the physical well being or religious condition of the world, without encountering this monstrous evil. Yet politicians whose name should be the synonym of all that cares for humanity's welfare, employ all their dexterity to avoid all mention of, or action upon the great problem which most deeply involves the destiny of the masses."

The great dominant party of our nation assembled in convention at Chicago, thrusts aside the heart cry that comes up from 100,000 homes of thirty-eight states and territories—the cry of American motherhood—thrusts it aside without mention or recognition. Yet the constitution of the government under which she lives declares that "governments derive their powers from the governed." She is governed! "Political power inheres in the people." Is she people? or what? "Taxation without representation is tyranny." Ah, yes, she may be taxed! But for help or redress she must look to God, not to parties—nor yet to government.

When patriotism stirs her soul, she may indeed offer her best beloved upon the altar of country as in the past; but when her heart cry goes out in agonized protest because of the slain in her household, who fell not by shot nor sword, then legislatures will be too busy with mouth and foot disease of cattle to listen. Then parties will answer her with resolutions on the sheep growing interests, Chinese cheap labor, tariff, Mormonism, etc. Not a word will they vouchsafe on the burning question which lies at the center of all social and political mischief. The editor of THE UNION SIGNAL says:

> Not a single intimation is given in this unanimous expression of the party that seeks to rule our land of the presence in that land of an agency that works more destruction and ruin than "the combined evils of war, pestilence and famine." Not a hint of better days that shall comfort the thousands who sit in the shadow of darkened homes—women who have given their best beloved to their country in their time of need, and now look for their country's help in their hour of legalized distress.
> It is hard to believe that parties are soulless, heartless; hard to believe that of all others, the party which wreaked itself on heart-expression in its infancy, has grown so cold to human suffering as this platform of its maturity would seem to evidence. If policy now rules where principle first inspired, then it only remains for the people actuated by principle, to indicate the particular policy which shall rule.

History ever repeats itself. That power which seeks its own ends, unmindful of the highest good of humanity, all too late will discover the handwriting on the wall, "Thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting." The New York Tribune says: "No government can set aside this subject. Despotic Russia and republican America must both meet it. For the evil is too enormous and atrocious to be hid, too destructive and cyclonic to be regulated, too insolent to be endured, too cruel not to excite indignation. It is true the capital and influence invested in its defense are enormous and potent; but God and humanity are invested against it; childhood and womanhood out of the depths lift up holy hands against it, and the 'irrepressible conflict' must go on until our statesmen shall dare to assail, in our halls at Washington, any evil or monstrous wrong that is destructive to national welfare."

Despite all, the signs of the times are full of hopeful meaning to us of the W. C. T. U. Ten years ago the liquor traffic, like Goliath of old, disdained its youthful foe, the W. C. T. U. It no longer disdains. It organizes everywhere. It pours out its ill-gotten gold like water; lays its plans with crafty intrigue; meets in convention and wails about the restrictions of "personal liberty" and the decrease of a "useful industry" moans through the Chicago Champion (a whisky organ) "that sooner or later, unless immediate steps are taken to prevent, the free, proud states of Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky and Missouri will prohibit the manufacture and sale of malt, vinous and distilled liquors;" points to "poor Iowa" and asks, "What is the lesson learned there?" "Closed distilleries and breweries; removing at great loss saloons and wholesale houses;" makes frantic appeals to its constituency to be "up and doing," to see that "none but right men—honest, liberal-minded, far-seeing business men, inaccessible to bribery, prejudice or fanaticism, be sent to the legislature." Oh, Brutus! thou wert the noblest Roman of them all. Yet prohibition does not prohibit.

The first martyr to the cause at Omaha, the stubborn, but lost battle for bonded whisky, the burned churches of Kansas and dwellings elsewhere, all are signs that great fear has driven to desperation, are but the beginning of the end.

In Russia and Poland many distilleries are closed and license laws enforced. In Germany there is great advance in temperance sentiment. Sweden, Denmark and Switzerland are agitated with this question. The solid, permanent temperance reforms of Great Britain challenge the admiration of the world. The ground swell of this wonderful movement is felt by sea and by land. The sound of "a going" is heard not only in the tops of the mulberry trees, but in the pines of the north and the palmettoes of the south. It sweeps with ever increasing force from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Looking over the field calmly and dispassionately, must we not believe that "signal fires have been lighted which flashing from peak to peak shall kindle all the land into flame with their heat."

Dearly beloved, "seeing we are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses," what manner of persons should we be?

To us are committed responsibilities solemn as life, sacred and enduring as eternity. Shall not emulation and self-seeking be strangers to our breasts? Shall we not cultivate that gentle charity that suffereth long and is kind to those that see not as we see? Our sympathies have become enlarged—shall they not spring forth to the help of every sin crushed and sorrow laden soul? Shall we not have that fixedness of purpose that is born of faith and prayer?

By pillar and by cloud, God is leading us through the wilderness of our anguish. Though our feet cross not the Jordan of our hope, nor enter the Canaan of our desire, from the mount of vision we behold the heritage of our children fair and beautiful.

Even now, from starry Gerizim or Ebal's starry crown,
We call the dews of blessing, or the bolts of cursing down;
By all for which the martyrs bore their agony of shame,
By all the warning words of truth, with which the prophets came,
By the future that's before us, by all the hopes that cast
Their faint and trembling beams across the darkness of the past,
And in the sacred name of Him who for earth's freedom died.
O ye people, O my brothers, let us choose the righteous side.

MT. VERNON.—Our union, though few in number still "holds the fort." A petition for a saloon license has just been circulated, but without success. A gentleman from New York called at our reading room yesterday and left some cash, stating that he had heard in town that they "could have a saloon here if it were not for the —— women." No blessing received since our organization, six months ago, has been freighted with as much satisfaction to "the faithful" as this.

MATTIE ANGWIN, Secretary.

KNOB NOSTER.—Mr. C. J. Holt has been with us a week conducting a regular temperance revival. Our citizens were roused from apathy to activity, and a C. T. U. was formed with two hundred and sixty members, including the best citizens of the town. The first Y. W. C. T. U. is started with eighteen young ladies full of enthusiasm and interest. The W. C. T. U. has increased its membership, Cadets of Temperance were organized, and the Band of Hope has had many children added to it. Mr. Holt heartily recommended THE UNION SIGNAL to the community at large, and particularly to the W. C. T. U., and we feel proud that so many copies are taken by our small union.

IOWA.

FOURTH DISTRICT CONVENTION.

The second annual convention of the new fourth congressional district of Iowa, was held at West Union, June 20–22. Four of the state officers were present, viz: Mrs. Aldrich, Mrs. Palmer, Mrs. Benedict and Mrs. McKinney.

It was quite a step of faith to incur the expense of having so may state officers at a district convention, but it proved a wise one.

The excellent help rendered by these experienced workers cannot be over estimated. The collections and district dues were sufficient to meet all expenses leaving a small balance in the treasury.

On Sunday morning and evening union services were held in the Presbyterian church, which was packed, the vestibule was crowded and some had to go away for want of standing room. Mrs. Palmer, our beloved state evangelist, full of faith and the Holy Spirit, addressed the people both morning and evening. It was truly a season of refreshing.

Mrs. Aldrich went over to Fayette and spoke on Sunday evening. A union was organized at this beautiful seat of the Upper Iowa University, with Mrs. E. E. Woods, president, and Mrs. E. O. Dudley, corresponding secretary.

Mrs. Palmer's appointments were all arranged and had been published by pulpit and press, but such a strong Macedonian cry for help came from Waucoma, that she decided to take one day from Strawberry Point and go to Waucoma to speak and organize a union.

Mrs. H. H. Beach, a new comer to the state, who has been fitted for good work by long years of training and experience in New York city, accepted the office of district evangelist.

Blessed results will follow this gathering of our forces. The "new fourth" is coming gloriously up in the line of march with her sister districts.

CLARA P. WHITE, Dist. Pres.

IOWA NOTES.

—Mrs. A. M. Palmer returned to her home at Boone, May 7, and has already attended and spoken before the Marshall county convention, held at Le Grand, the Crawford county convention, at Denison, the first district convention at Fairfield, the seventh district convention at Stuart, the Mills county convention, and has held a three day's meeting at Casey, Guthrie county.

—Miss E. E. Frink. the wide awake president of the second district, holds her first convention at Maquoketa, July 1 and 2. A rich bill of fare has been provided. Mrs. Aldrich speaks on the first evening, Anna Gordon talks to the young people on the afternoon of the second day, and Frances Willard delivers an address the second evening. There seems to be a worthy spirit of emulation among the district presidents as to which will have the best convention this year.

—Mrs. C. S. Jackson, of Muscatine, (and none who attended the last annual meeting can forget her sweet face, in its appropriate setting of soft silver hair) has accepted the superintendency of the department of state and county fairs, tendered her by the president of the state W. C. T. U. She is negotiating for space at the state fair for a booth for the W. C. T. U., to be filled with articles contributed by the local unions, and also for the services of the national superintendent of this department, Mrs. Josephine R. Nichols, of Indiana, for an address on the fair grounds. Give heed to her circular when it reaches you.

—The "Woman's Friend" is again abroad in the land! Sickness and weariness could not hold her long while "the prodigal daughters of Iowa," were calling to her for help. So the "Quaker bonnet" and plain black dress of Mother Benedict again attracts attention on the cars and at meeting. She left her daughter's "bed and board" about the middle of May, and has labored with good results, financially and otherwise, at Denison, West Side, Dow City, Council Bluffs. God's blessings attend thee, Mother Benedict!

PENNSYLVANIA.

Col. Bain is in the state and has done wonders for us. Our Miss White reports one or two new unions every week, and was one of the speakers at our C. T. A. convention in Altoona on the 17th. Mrs. Reese, of Ohio, has been organizing and assisting us for months and has added a number of unions to our state list. We have also been blessed with a visit from Mrs. McLaughlin, of Boston.

A Y. W. C. T. U. of forty members has been organized at New Castle, with Mrs. Stevenson, president and Miss Nettie Barker, secretary.

We have another visitor, who is also a first class speaker, and that is our national superintendent of work at state and county fairs, Mrs. J. R. Nichols, of Indiana. She will be here for the national convention, and already has more invitations to speak for us than she can accept at this time.

One hundred and twenty-two unions have been organized in this state since October, just twice as many as last year, with July, August and September yet to hear from. ELLEN M. WATSON.

OIL CITY.—At our annual meeting the reports given show that the union has grown in strength and influence. Mrs. Ferry, our Bible woman, in her 992 visits among the poor and needy of the city, has not only given spiritual aid and comfort, but has given out clothing to the value of three hundred and seventy dollars and fifty cents, besides giving orders for provisions, coal, etc. There have been used in free distribution by Mrs. Ferry and committees on literature sixty-one thousand one hundred and ten tracts and leaflets.

In the past year an appropriation of thirty dollars has been made to the temperance work of the state among the Germans, twenty-five dollars to the state work among the sailors and soldiers, thirteen dollars to the county work and ten dollars toward schools throughout the county.

A boys' temperance school was maintained during the winter, a children's gospel temperance meeting has been held the first Sunday each month, and regular gospel meetings every Sunday afternoon.

Addresses have been given by Governor St. John, Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, Miss White, Mrs. Hunt and Mr. Will J. McConnell, who was with us three weeks, during which time more than 2,000 signed the pledge.

MRS. M. N. STONE, Rec. See.

C. T. A. AND W. C. T. U. CONVENTIONS.

The fourth annual convention of the Pennsylvania Constitutional Amendment Association, held in Altoona, the 17th and 18th ult., was the most interesting of any yet held. The 145 delegates present reported progress on the march for constitutional amendment all along the line.

The Pennsylvania Protective Liquor and Beer Association, with headquarters at Philadelphia, having pledged their honor to each other to lend their "aid, influence and votes" to defeat any and all candidates for offices of public trust, who will not give positive and public assurance of their willingness to urge and vote for such just and equitable laws, as they, as "good citizens" (?) "and honest merchants" (??) "are entitled to," we, as temperance workers, "are therefore compelled to follow on to this field, or else retire from the conflict."

The Somerset county annual W. C. T. U. convention, held at Meyersdale the 25th and 26th ult., was a triumph for temperance sentiment in this county. One year ago the county union was organized, with but five local organizations, now there are eleven, and four juvenile schools in the county, with more to follow.

The report of the president, Mrs. M. E. Hannum, was most gratifying and soul-stirring. Mrs. Josephine R. Nichols, of Indianapolis, Ind., national superintendent of state and county fair department, has recently given a weeks' work in Somerset county, organizing a local union at Freeders, New Centerville and Meyersdale, delivering two of her most excellent lectures in Somerset, the county seat, and one at the close of the convention in Meyersdale. She is an indefatigable worker, a cultured and refined speaker and is always master of the situation. A. S. B.

WISCONSIN.

DARTFORD.—Miss Anna M. Edwards was obliged to return to Ohio on account of illness, but Miss Amy C. Kellogg, of Fort Atkinson, is filling her appointments satisfactorily. Miss Kellogg will go to Pierce county in July to attend the county convention, and will spend several weeks at work in the eighth district.

The Dartford W. C. T. U. held a strawberry festival Tuesday evening, June 24. By the kindness of Sheriff Cooke the court house hall was placed at their disposal. Supper was served from five o'clock, and if any of the good people voluntarily stayed at home that night, we do not know who they were. Strawberries and ice cream were served during the evening. Though we have no Y. W. C. T. U. the young people came, ate, drank and were merry. Many of the members of the I. O. G. T. joined heartily, not only in the festivities, but in the work of the evening. The net proceeds were more than $20.

The Band of Hope, Mrs. E. N. Rudd, superintendent, is planning a temperance picnic for the 4th of July.

S. P. B.

VERMONT.

NORTHFIELD.—On Thursday, June 5, the vice president of Washington county W. C. T. U., Mrs. Elmer, met a few of the ladies of Northfield at the parlors of the Congregational ladies' society, for the purpose of organizing a local W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Elmer gave a short address, after which sixteen names were obtained for the union, and the following officers were elected: President, Miss Lizzie M. Knapp; corresponding secretary, Miss E. J. Sheldon; treasurer, Mrs. L. Bliss.

In March 1874 a temperance association was organized here by ladies of the different religious bodies, which did good work for several years, when its meetings were suspended, and some funds left in the treasury. At the organization of the W. C. T. U. the motion was made by members of the former association to revive the same and merge it into the union. The motion was carried.

Weekly meetings of the union are held, and additional names have been obtained to the number of twenty-three. We hope for an increase at each meeting.

M. P. MOORE, Supt. Press Work.

NEW YORK.

NIAGARA COUNTY CONVENTION.

The quarterly meeting of the Niagara county W. C. T. U. was held in the Universalist church at Olcott, on Friday, June 6, 1884. Seven local unions were represented by delegates and written reports were received from two unions. The reports show that there are many active workers in the temperance cause in Niagara county.

Temperance instruction was earnestly discussed and a proposition to organize a normal class in connection with the temperance camp meeting, for the instruction of school teachers and teachers of Bands of Hope.

A resolution in favor of the ballot for women, called forth a lengthy and interesting discussion which resulted in its unanimous adoption.

SOPHIA M. TOWNSEND, Rec. Sec. pro tem.

NEW JERSEY.

The New Jersey W. C. T. U. will hold two summer meetings, the first at Ocean Grove, July 9, 10, and the second at Atlantic Highlands, July 12, 13. Mrs. M. J. Pearson of England, will be at both meetings, and other distinguished workers from various localities will be present and assist the state officers. A children's service will be held on the afternoon of the 9th at Ocean Grove, also at Atlantic Highlands on Sunday afternoon the 13th inst., Mrs. Baldwin, state superintendent of juvenile work presiding. SARAH J. C. DOWNS, Pres.

ILLINOIS.

SPRINGFIELD.—Do not think we are dead to our duties because you do not often hear from us. We are still alive to our work of W. C. T. U. Our four unions are holding their regular meetings, adding a mite of reform work as opportunity will allow. Last week on Monday, our national flower day, each union had a committee in the field ready for the pleasant duty. Though clouds gathered and rain fell the deft fingers tarried not and bouquets were made by the hundreds.

The storm soon cleared away, and laden with their floral burdens and cards of texts and promises, the friends of the suffering wended their way to the different institutions of our city, and many private individuals. The criminals, the invalids, the unfortunate all seemed glad to be thus remembered; and though the flowers attracted the eye we were assured that the comforting words in the Bible texts were appreciated.

S. J. STRONG.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—Unions have been organized at Reutchlers by Mrs. Morrison, at Scott Land by Mrs. Jenkins.

—The Central Union of Chicago will conduct mass meetings at Lake Bluff Sunday, August 17.

—Miss West attended last week the three conventions of the 9th district, held at Paxton, Watseka and Kankakee.

—Don't forget the date of the state convention, 7th, 8th, 9th, and 10th of October, at Peoria. A grand rally is expected.

—Mrs. L. S. Rounds attends the county convention of the 18th district, held the 9th and 10th at Freeburg. Send to headquarters for dates and terms.

—An Institute for the study of heredity and hygiene will be held at Lake Bluff, August 15, 16, 18, and 19. Mrs. Kellogg, Dr. Mary Weeks Burnett, and L. H. Corr have charge of the meetings.

—Miss Hood at headquarters, 161 LaSalle street, will hereafter make engagements for Mr. Francis Murphy and his son, Mr. Thomas Edward Murphy. All applications for either speaker must be sent to Miss Hood.

—The W. C. T. U. will hold camp meetings at Oak Hill, Eureka, Watseka, New Lennox, Franklin Grove and Lena this summer. Arrangements are also being made to hold two in the southern part of the state.

APPOINTMENTS.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE ladies of Ouray, Cal., organized a county W. C. T. U. May 30.

THE beautiful "Bannerettes" used at the Michigan state convention were presented to the state W. C. T. U. by the First Ward union of Flint.

A BAND of Hope, with forty members, was organized at Paris, Texas, June 29. Songs, recitations and addresses made the occasion one of very great interest.

THE Nunda Advocate, Rev. G. H. Hoover, editor, the recently established organ of the Prohibitionists of McHenry Co., Ill., promises effective work during the coming months.

THE addresses of Mrs. E. L. Saxon in Carthage, Tenn., under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. and prohibition executive committee of the state received the highest commendation from the local press.

THE W. C. T. U. of Alleghany Co., N. Y., will hold its fifth annual session in Angelica, July 9 and 10. Mrs. M. H. Hunt will be in attendance, and the program throughout promises interesting and profitable sessions.

THE report of Michigan's superintendent of juvenile work, given at the state convention, showed 42 juvenile societies with an aggregate membership of 5,384. The Band at Howell has missed but one meeting in nine years.

A TEMPERANCE reunion was held in Barry, Ill., June 25. The exercises were held in the public park throughout the day, and at night in the Baptist church. This meeting was addressed by George Woodford and others, and passed off pleasantly and with happy results for the cause.

MRS. LULU NIELD has just organized a union at Lancaster, Ky., with fifty members, and Mrs. Anna M. Bain one at Elizabethtown, with seventeen members. Eight new unions have been organized since the last state convention. The next annual meeting will convene in Frankfort Sept. 4 and 5.

MISS JENNIE SMITH, National superintendent of railroad work, writes: "We have entered and held meetings on railroad grounds where, two years ago they told us such could never be. Wherever we go there are calls for temperance work. This is the leading question of the day everywhere."

TABLEAUX, depicting the downward steps of a drinking man, from his wedding day to the scaffold, were recently given under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. of Joplin, Mo., with great success. They have also been given in the neighboring towns, and the originator, Mr. W. L. Morgan, of Joplin, desires to give them throughout the state for half of the net proceeds of the entertainment.

MISS WILLARD had a union meeting of the churches in the Opera House at Chillicothe, Ohio, June 15, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. Miss Gordon organized a cold water army with Mrs. Estelle Purdum as superintendent and an efficient corps of helpers including several young ladies. Chillicothe is the birthplace of Mrs. Lucy Webb Hayes, whose mother's sister, Mrs. Phœbe Cook McKell, enter tainedour workers.

DETROIT and Minneapolis kitchen gardens have just closed their schools for the summer with wonderfully successful exhibitions. The former cleared between five and six hundred dollars, and the latter over two hundred, and both received the hearty approval and co-operation of the public. In Watertown they gave a free public lesson, the paid class following the charity, one washing dishes and setting tables, the other washing clothes. A member writes: "I am glad to say the poor girls did best, and I could scarcely keep the tears back when they marched in with their bright faces and neat attire, and I realized the wretched homes they came from." She adds: "It is the most interesting work I ever engaged in."

IT has been stated that the saloon keepers of Madison, Wis., arraigned for violating the Sunday law, were all released on some pretext or other. The facts are, that after prosecution by the Law and Order League of the city, the Personal Liberty Society passed a resolution making it compulsory upon the members to close their saloons on Sunday, and in case of violation the society will not only expel the violators but itself begin prosecution. The society also agreed to pay all costs of prosecutions, thus far amounting to $513. In consideration of these concessions the Law and Order League having gained all it desired since Sunday sales and sales to minors have been stopped, agreed to drop several cases then pending, and hold others, in which convicting testimony can be secured on very short notice, in abeyance.

Official Communications.

LETTER FROM MRS. GEO. W. BAIN,

Superintendent Union Signal Work.

About two months ago I mailed a circular to every union I could find any record of, asking the appointment of a committee of three in each union to act in conjunction with the local superintendent of UNION SIGNAL work, the purpose being a simultaneous and thorough canvassin its interest. This was done believing that four energetic ladies in any community, no matter how thoroughly it had been worked, could raise at least a club of ten, while a general response would double the present list of subscribers, double its field of usefulness, and prove a signal blessing.

While I do not see how such a purpose and plan can fail, yet I am anxious about the result, and ask this privilege of urging the committees to earnest efforts and early response.

My husband has informed me of several instances in his travels where the circulars had not been presented to the unions, as was specially requested. Knowing the fidelity of W. C. T. U. officers this could only occur where the circular failed to reach the secretary. Whether from this or other cause, I hope this communication will serve the desired purpose. To this end I ask any member of any union where the circular was not presented or committee appointed, please present the matter at your next meeting and move at once the appointment of the committee.

Dear sisters of the committees, may I ask a concerted canvass, and an exercise of that tireless resolution that will overcome any difficulty in the way of a good club. When you have mailed the list of names to Chicago please write me a postal to Louisville giving results, that I may be permitted to rejoice with you in your success, and be able as national superintendent of UNION SIGNAL work to make a good report in this very important department.

Sincerely yours, ANNA M. BAIN.

Louisville, Ky., June 26, 1884.

FLOWER MISSION.

MORE TESTIMONY.

I would like to pen a few lines about flower missions, etc., for THE UNION SIGNAL. To the oft repeated phrase that poetry and music has a tendency to refine the taste and soften the heart, flowers too, I have often thought should be added, to which I believe many will respond, for from the costly elaborate floral tributes for the great of earth, down to the veriest simple flower by the way side, sent or given by a loved one, no act, no offering, no tribute, can ever be more touching. I am glad indeed of the extension of flower missions, that it is obtaining in many states, and we will faithfully work for more of its success in connection with temperance unions, that everywhere will be added to it this touching and beautiful field of labor, "flower missions."

While away many months on a sad mission to a distant state, I learned with pleasure that Miss Jennie Casseday had been appointed national superintendent of flower missions. This gifted, saintly woman, though not yet in the noontide of her life, has been confined to her couch many years, and at times a great sufferer, a very prisoner of the Lord, patiently waiting, after the shadows of mortal life are over, to awake in that bright and glorious morn of eternal rest, but while thus patiently waiting, many philanthropic and noble schemes have been worked out by her, which become to those knowing her best visibly an inspiration.

I was among those who some years ago answered the call of this remarkable woman to organize a flower mission in our city, making her president and Mrs. Warner vice president. Mrs. Warner with many others from that hour to the present have been it is well known faithfully working, and carrying out the plans and suggestions of their invaled president. I have said that she was our inspiration, which indeed she was, and has been ever since, and will so remain, long after that little couch will be vacant.

PRISON DAY AT CHESTER.

I have just read with much pleasure the communication from Chester penitentiary in this week's UNION SIGNAL in regard to our "Prison Day." I want just enough space to add one more little item of interest. We have no organization there and the whole day's work was planned and carried out by one dear girl, Miss Mamie B. Swanwick of Chester. She is the only personal friend I have in all southern Illinois, and when my mind was so troubled in regard as to how those poor fellows were to be remembered, I thought of her and so wrote asking her to do the work in the name of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and now we all know the splendid results. What is there that "our girls" cannot do if they only will?

MATTIE F. YATES,
Supt. Ill. Flower Mission.

Griggsville, Ill., June 27, 1884.

IN KENTUCKY.

The 9th of June, "Prison Day," was duly observed in Kentucky. A committee of nine ladies from the Louisville unions, accompanied by the faithful friend of the W. C. T. U., Col. G. W. Bain, went to Frankfort where the state prison is located. Reaching there at 10:30 o'clock they were met by a committee from the local union, who accompanied them to the chapel of the Christian church where the ladies were arranging bouquets.

At the hour appointed for admission to the prison, Dr. Daniel Gober and Rev. H. H. Kavanaugh escorted the ladies, about thirty in number, to the chapel where the prisoners were congregated. Expressions of joy beamed from the faces of many of the prisoners, who remembered and recognized several of the ladies who had gone last "Prison day".

Mrs. Alice Orlison presided at the organ and sang, accompanied by the prisoners, "Beautiful Words of Life." After prayer by the chaplain Mrs. Orlison sang as a solo, "Jesus, Lover of my Soul." She possesses a fine voice of the rarest culture, and she had trained some of the prisoners who sang several exquisite quartettes for us. Mrs. Orlison is not a member of the W. C. T. U. but she is a lovely Christian, is deeply interested in, and teaches a Sunday school class in the prison. Many other prominent ladies of Frankfort are engaged in this good work and I think it quite probable that the penitentiary of Kentucky, except from being overcrowded, is one of the best cared for prisons of the land. The noble women who minister weekly to its inmates, teaching the sweet promises of Christ to the wretched and lowly, are encouraged in their work by the warden, the prison physician and chaplain, and many blessings have come to them through their work.

After the reading of the texts, so wisely chosen, Col. Bain gave a short talk. It is needless to say a deep impression was made by him, as a number of letters from the prisoners since, in which they refer to his earnest words of advice, attest the power of his words. The bouquets were then distributed and the eagerness with which they were accepted and the thanks often so earnestly expressed, proved to us that our labor was not in vain.

Many touching incidents occurred which our limited space prevents relating, but our hearts go out in gratitude to the Giver of all good for the blessed work of the flower mission, for through it we feel that we have reached a higher plane, and as we gave the little bouquets our hearts were consecrated anew to Him who through His handiwork reveals Himself to those who do His will. NANNIE A. MUNNELL,

IN DELAWARE.

DEAR MISS CASSEDAY,—The ladies of our W. C. T. Unions here, met at the parsonage, arranged the flowers, and headed by my good husband started for the jail. When we reached there the prisoners were all assembled waiting for us. We had indeed a delightful service. After we had sung, prayed and talked with them, and my husband made a most touching address, and we had distributed to them papers, they asked if they should sing for us. They did sing and we all wept together and were indeed all profited by the visit. I enclose you a letter from one of the prisoners which appeared in both our city papers after our visit.

We are all delighted with the work.

ANNA H. MARTINDALE.

Dover, Delaware.

VOICES FROM THE JAIL.

We were visited Monday by the ladies of the W. C. T. U. and Rev. T. E. Martindale of the M. E. church. The pastor prayed earnestly, then delivered a very touching and appropriate discourse upon the beautiful flowers (with verses of scripture attached) that were afterwards presented to each prisoner by the ladies. The singing of the ladies was of high order, and the solo by Mrs. Wolcott deserves special mention. Mr. Editor, upon the behalf of my unfortunate fellow prisoners, I desire to return our sincere and hearty thanks to Rev. T. E. Martindale and the ladies for their visit, their Christian sympathies, and their splendid gifts. And it is due to the earnest ladies to say that they are doing more to save the erring souls from the great sea of sin, than any Christian organization that we know of. Come again ladies, come again. Do not forget the poor prisoners at the jail, who are longing to hear of another visit, and whose souls are ripe for the blessed teachings of the scriptures. There is a grand work for you here. Oh! daughters of Christ, we want you; come and try, and may your visits be often. ONE OF THE PRISONERS.

Dover.

The National Prohibition convention will meet in Pittsburgh on the 23d inst. The gathering will be large with a representation from all parts of the United States It is very desirable to secure the attendance of a large number of friends to the cause in addition to the regularly appointed delegates. We therefore urgently request all our friends who can make it convenient to attend to do so.

The Pittsburgh, Ft. Wayne & Chicago R. R. Co. has with its usual liberality agreed to sell round trip tickets from Chicago to Pittsburgh for half fare, making the round trip ticket $14. This will be a pleasant trip for all. The road has four trains each day, all leaving from the UNION PASSENGER DEPOT, one of the finest railroad buildings in the west. All western trains connect in Chicago with the P., Ft. W. & C. for the east. Travelers who study comfort will find that the freedom from dust on this route renders travel a pleasure rather than a disagreeable necessity. On the entire main line of the road the ties and rails are laid on a solid foundation of rock ballast. All the improvements and appliances known to modern skill and invention which conduce to the comfort and security of travel have been adopted by this road. It is the shortest and best, in fact, only through road from Chicago to Pittsburgh. Palatial dining cars and sleepers will be placed at the disposal of those attending the convention. Friends of the cause do not fail to go and let us have an imposing gathering. Members of the W. C. T. U. and friends (not delegates) can secure the rebate by sending to A. R. MCDONALD,
6 Arcade Court, Chicago.

OUR SUMMER CAMPAIGN.

SPECIAL OFFER FOR SHORT SUBSCRIPTIONS!

We renew our offer of last year to send THE UNION SIGNAL TEN WEEKS on trial for TWENTY-FIVE CENTS, and will give an extra copy to any person sending us a club of four names with one dollar. Our friends can do us good service by sending us a large number of clubs under this offer. We need all the help we can get during the next sixty days. Subscriptions usually come in very slowly during the heated term, but expenses go on just the same. We ask for your kind efforts on our behalf to carry us over this dry period. Remember THE UNION SIGNAL, at camp meeting, and summer resorts where you may be present. We rely upon you.

AYER'S Hair Vigor cures baldness. Hair Vigor restores youthful freshness and color to faded and gray hair. It attains these results by the stimulation of the hair roots and color glands. It rejuvenates the HAIR and cleanses it. It restores to the HAIR that, either by reason of age or diseases of the scalp, has become dry, harsh and brittle, a pliancy and glossy silken softness of extreme beauty. There is no dye in Ayer's Hair VIGOR and the good it does is by the it imparts to the follicles, and the cleanliness and healthfulness of the condition in which it maintains the scalp.

AYER'S Hair Vigor renews the hair. Hair Vigor is the best cure known for Brasby Hair, Scald Head, Itching Humors, Tetter Sores, Torpid Follicles, and all other diseases of the scalp that cause the falling of the HAIR and its fading. Nothing cleanses of the nuisance of dandruff so perfectly, and so effectually prevents its return, as AYER'S HAIR VIGOR. In addition to the curative and restorative virtues peculiar to Ayer's Hair it is a toilet luxury. The Hair VIGOR is by far the cleanliest hair-dressing made. It causes the hair to grow thick and long, and keeps it always soft and glossy.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

Contains no deleterious ingredients. Its use prevents all scalp disease, secures against the hair growing thin or gray, and surely cures al baldness that is not organic.

Signal Notes.

THE prohibitory law was first adopted in Maine, when a majority of the legislature, in both houses, and the governor, belonged to the Democratic party.

FIFTEEN hundred women voted during the past year on school questions in Michigan, and only two met any opposition to the exercise of their rights and privileges. This fact was brought out at the State W. C. T. U. convention.

THERE is in Milwaukee one saloon for every twenty-six voters; and as half the people do not drink, every thirteen drunkards must support one saloon. How many women take in washing to support the thirteen drunkards who support each a saloon?

THE selling or exposing for sale of intoxicating liquors has been prohibited in Vermont for the last thirty years, and yet there are 426 places where intoxicating liquors are more or less openly sold. Is there as small a number of saloons in proportion to population in license states?

THE officers of all the railroads traversing the state of Iowa, have united in a circular, announcing that, in compliance with the new law, they will not receive any intoxicating liquors for transportation from any point either within or without the state to any point within its limits after that date.

THE wary traveler can no longer drink "the wine of the country" in Paris for fear of the evil effects of water. In the last report of the Paris Municipal Laboratory, under whose chemical scrutiny the wines of city trade must pass, the number of good wines found in the analysis of 3,361 samples was only 357, while 1,093 were passable, 1,709 were bad, and 202 positively dangerous.

IN Bishop Simpson, woman suffrage loses a firm and consistent friend. Only a few months before his death, he wrote: "I have for more than thirty years believed that the great interests of morality imperatively require that the ballot should be placed in the hands of woman. I have no doubt that the coming years will see the triumph of your cause, and that our higher civilization and morality will rejoice in the work which enlightened woman will accomplish."

THE Baptists of Dakota territory are thoroughly in earnest in the temperance work. At a meeting of the Baptist association recently held in Dell Rapids, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we, as an association, denounce the liquor traffic in all its departments, that we will be satisfied with nothing short of total prohibition, and we will endeavor to educate our children to abhor intemperance and to resist every temptation that leads to it.

PRESIDENT BASCOM, of the Wisconsin state university at Madison, having joined the respectable people of that city in an effort to enforce the liquor laws, E. W. Keyes, a professional politician, has brought charges against him before the regents, and wants him removed. Whisky will scarcely prove strong enough in the Wisconsin capital to accomplish its objects in this case, as against the better portion of the community.

THE "Dominion Brewers' Wine and Spirit Merchants' Protective Association," has issued a circular headed, "Strictly confidential, destroy when read," calling upon every man interested in the business to defend his trade against the fanatical onslaught of the Prohibitionists. The government of Canada has pledged, "that if the country pronounced in favor of the principle of prohibition it would be granted," and this "protective association" has made arrangement "to contest every inch of territory and educate the public minds to appreciate the great injury that will be done to the country by the passage of such unjust laws." It is claimed that every brewer in Toronto has subscribed $1,000, the distillers $10,000, and all other branches of trade have been equally liberal. That "this our craft is in danger" is evident and Canada has reason to thank God and take courage.

Miscellaneous Selections.

THE United States Brewers' association has issued a pamphlet of 167 pages entitled "Real and Imaginary effects of Intemperance." The author addressed letters of inquiry to all the insane asylums of this country, receiving replies from about eighty. If designed for a Prohibitionist's text-book, such as the following could not be more to the point. T. O. Powell, superintendent of the Georg'a asylum says:

I regard alcoholic stimulants as one of the most potent predisposing causes of mental maladies. The descendants of drunkards or drinking parents are much more liable or susceptible to insanity, whether they themselves are in the habit of drinking or not, than are the children of sober parentage. Imbecility, epilepsy, insanity, etc., may be traced to the intoxicated brain of a parent, or even more remotely, their grandparents. If I am correct in my views, it would be difficult to obtain only the direct or exciting cause, which is a small per cent. compared to the predisposing cause."

Geo. C. Palmer, medical superintendent of the Michigan asylum for the insane, bears similar testimony and adds:

In my opinion alcohol is the greatest enemy of mankind.

D. D. Richardson, physician in chief of the Philadelphia hospital, writes:

Aside from heredity, I believe there is no cause so frequently productive of insanity as the excessive use of alcoholic beverages.

The following is the testimonial from the Iowa hospital for the insane at Mt. Pleasant, H. A. Gilman, superintendent:

I will say that in the eighteen years that I have been connected with hospitals for the insane, by observing and preparing statistics, I am prepared to say that about twenty-five per cent. of the causes of insanity, in something more than seven thousand patients that I have been familiar with, has resulted from the use of alcoholic beverages. This refers only to those where that is the direct cause. From the history of other cases, I judge that indirectly twenty-five per cent. more may be traceable to the same cause, as a result of drunkenness in the parents, affecting the nervous organization of the children; and in the case of many females, the hardships and cruelties which they undergo is a result of this excess.

Very truly yours,
H. A. GILMAN, Supt.

VERMONT has been a prohibition state since 1852 Population, 332,300. Tax on spirits, $12,298; tax on fermented liquors, $1,603; total liquor tax per capita, four and two-tenths cents. New Hampshire, lying alongside of Vermont and settled by the same class of people, is still a license state. Population, 347,900. Tax on spirits, $65,682; on fermented liquors, $259,804. Total tax per capita paid by New Hampshire, ninety three cents. This shows that New Hampshire, under license, uses over twenty times as much liquors in proportion to population as Vermant does under prohibition. Maine lies joining New Hampshire on the east, and, under prohibition, her internal revenue tax is about the same per capita as Vermont. About one-twentieth that of New Hampshire. Then, on the south we find Massachusetts, under license since 1873, with a per capita tax of $1.18. These figures may be certified by any one, in a few moments, by inspection of the revenue tables.

THE New York Tribune, in speaking of insanity caused by drink, in connection with the proceedings and statements of the recent brewers' convention at Rochester, asks these pointed questions: "Surely this army of human beings whose humanity has been killed by drink offers a sufficiently sombre subject for thought. Surely those who think it a duty to agitate for whatever measures may prevent the increase of this army of lost souls deserve somewhat better treatment than to be called 'hypocrites,' 'selfish,' and 'fanatics.' Is it fanatical to desire to save the perishing? Is it selfish to wish that men should be prevented from drinking themselves into the asylum or the grave? Is it hypercritical to point to the facts of the situation, to show the enormous evils which drink produces in modern society, and to demand that the reform of this gigantic and strongly entrenched abuse shall be undertaken?"

No set of women would keep house in such a filthy way as men keep it in the streets of great cities.

THE OLDEST MEDICINE in the WORLD
Is probably DR. ISAAC THOMPSON'S CELEBRATED EYE WATER. This article is a carefully prepared physician's prescription and has been in constant use for nearly a century, and notwithstanding the many other preparations that have been introduced into the market, the sale of this article is constantly increasing. If the directions are followed it will never fail. We particularly invite the attention of physicians to its merits.

Facts and Reasons.

Effects Produced by AYER'S SARSAPARILLA and by Nothing Else so Perfectly.

It strengthens and invigorates sufferers from enervation, languor, weakness, and mental depression.

It has an almost magical effect in curing eruptive and cutaneous disorders.

It eradicates from the blood the taint of that terribly destructive disease, Hereditary Scrofula.

It expels from the system the baneful poison of Mercury, which is as serious as that of Scrofula.

It purifies and regenerates the life current polluted by the corruption of contagious disease.

It stimulates the secretory organs, effects the removal of all impurities from the blood and makes it new, rich, and pure.

It restores health to sufferers from thin blood and impaired vitality.

It saves, by its thorough purification of the blood, from Rheumatism, Rheumatic Gout, and Tubercular Consumption.

It cures Scrofulous affections of the Liver and Kidneys, and their symptoms, Jaundice and Dropsy.

It cures Scrofulous Catarrh, Itching Humors, and the purulent Sores caused by Scrofula.

It clears and improves the complexion.

It neutralizes the poisons left in the system by Diphtheria and Scarlet Fever, and restores the debilitated patient to perfect health and vigor.

It is, in short, an unfailing remedy for all disorders arising from impurity of the blood, where such disorders have not become so deeply seated as to be beyond all human aid.

Advantages that AYER'S SARSAPARILLA Possesses over all Others.

It is composed of the most efficacious alterative, diuretic, and tonic drugs known in pharmacy, among which are the genuine Honduras Sarsaparilla, Yellow Dock, Stillingia, and the Iodide of Potassium and Iron.

It is a highly concentrated [illegible] scientifically and honestly combined as to secure to it the highest degree of activity and perfect uniformity.

It has received the hearty endorsement of the leading men in the medical profession, who recognize it as a standard pharmaceutical preparation, and prescribe it in their practice.

It contains no poisonous minerals or other dangerous drugs, the use of which for temporary effect in the many crude and cheap mixtures sold as alteratives, produces effects on the system often worse than the diseases they are offered to cure.

It costs no more than any other, but would still be the cheapest blood-purifying medicine in the world, even were its price three times greater, since it is the only one that does "real, lasting good."

Public Library Boylston st 20 85

It has been before the public for nearly forty years, and has constantly grown in popular favor, both at home and abroad, until there is hardly a place in the civilized world where it has not a host of friends, made so by its marvellous cures.

It has been used in, and approved by, at least 4,000,000 families in the United States, and 7,000,000 throughout the world. [illegible] especial reasons for commending its potency in curing obstinate, deeply-seated, and long-standing diseases caused by vitiation of the blood. It must not, however, be expected and is not claimed that a single bottle will cure such cases; but patients should persevere in the use of this remedy until a radical cure is effected.

It is the only blood-purifier that has won and retained the confidence of the people of all tropical countries, where such medicines are much required.

It is the only medicine of its class that sailors, as a rule, have any faith in — and they are right.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 29. CHICAGO, JULY 31, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

THE regular quarterly meeting of the board of directors of the W. T. P. Association will be held in room 102, 161 LaSalle street, Chicago, Ill., on Wednesday, August 6, 1884, commencing at 10 o'clock, a. m. MARY ALLEN WEST, Sec'y.

"MUMM" is the suggestive name of a new drink brewed in the outlawed breweries of Iowa. It is said to be non-alcoholic, but time and chemistry will test the truth of the saying.

MISS WILLARD went from the Pittsburgh convention directly to Maryland, where she made one of the first speeches of the campaign—if not the very first—at Cumberland, the second largest city in the state.

OUR vacation has ended. Many subscribers failed to note its announcement in the issue of July 10, and have complained of the non-appearance of the paper for the last two weeks. Will all such take notice that this is the only number published since that date.

How will this do for Governor St. John's letter of acceptance?

"I will go forth 'mong men not mailed in scorn,
But in the armor of a pure intent;
Great duties are before me, and great signs,
And whether crowned or crownless when I fall
It matters not, so as God's work is done."

A FRIEND writes from Keokuk, Iowa, July 17: "There has not been a single case of drunkenness in the police court of this city for twelve days. Such immunity has not existed for a like period in the history of the city for the last quarter of a century. God be praised that prohibition does prohibit to that extent at least. Let it be known to the honoring of God and to the gladdening of all temperance workers."

THE memorial of the W. C. T. U., asking for a recognition of the claims of prohibition at the various nominating conventions, went in its regular round to the national convention of the Democratic party held in the exposition building of this city. It was most cordially presented to that body by Major E. A. Burke, editor of the Times-Democrat, of New Orleans, and referred without reading to the committee on resolutions, although a large number of documents quite as long were read in the open convention. It was never heard of, or from, thereafter, and "so endeth the third lesson."

THE Illinois State Normal of Heredity and Hygiene, to be held at Lake Bluff from the 15th to 20th of August, promises to be an intellectual feast. We give a partial list of papers prepared for the 18th and 19th, the days devoted to heredity: "The cerebro-spinal and the sympathetic nervous system"; "The study of heredity"; "Heredity"; "The pathology and psychology of heredity"; "Alcoholic Heredity—its character and nature"; "Heredity as related to woman suffrage"; "Tobacco Heredity"; Heredity of Insanity." Discussion as to best methods of teaching children the laws of heredity.

SOMETIME ago the proposition was made by Miss Willard that as an act of sisterly co-operation between ladies north and south, and in recognition of Mrs. President Polk's noble character, a portrait of her should be placed at the White House beside that of her husband. Mrs. Alexander Porter, of Nashville, was made president of a commission for this purpose, and Miss Mary Maxwell as treasurer — Miss Clara Barton and Miss Willard being the chief northern representatives. The portrait has been painted by Duruy, a gifted German artist of the south, and has just been sent to the White House, through senators from Tennessee. Thus do the links that bind women's hearts and hands multiply all along the lines, so that esprit du corps is growing, and that right rapidly.

THE National Woman's Christian Temperance Union will hold a series of meetings at Chautauqua on Friday and Saturday, August 15 and 16. Friday afternoon, at 11 o'clock, Mrs. Emily McLaughlin will deliver an address; at 2 p. m., special exercises will be held to commemorate the tenth birth-day of the National Union. Miss Willard will deliver an address in the evening. Saturday morning Mrs. Mary H. Hunt will speak and the closing address in the afternoon will be given by Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap; Mrs. Jennie F. Willing and Mrs. S. F. Chapin will speak at the anniversary meeting the afternoon of the 15th.

A series of meetings will be held by the National W. C. T. U. at Martha's Vineyard, beginning August 3d, and continuing till the 5th inclusive. Mrs. B. Pearson, of England, Miss Frances E. Willard, Mrs. M. L. Wells, and others, will be present.

THE Republican candidate for governor of Illinois, Gen. Oglesby, is reported by the city dailies as saying, at a recent political rally, "We do not want our laboring population living on a bit of bread and a pint of beer a day. Give them plenty to eat and a gallon of beer, if they want it." Carter Harrison, the Democratic nominee, would doubtless use much the same language substituting whisky for beer, as he is a great believer in the Bourbon of his native state. A third candidate is in the field who is, like Governor St. John, a brother-in-law of the W. C. T. U., James B. Hobbs, an earnest Christian an upright citizen and successful business man. He stands squarely on the prohibition platform and is maintaining a strong and fearless candidacy. Let temperance voters choose which of the three shall serve them.

JOHN P. ST. JOHN, the presidential nominee of the Prohibition party, is an Indianian by birth, and is now fifty-four years old. He began his prophetic career as a "pathfinder" very early in life, travelling at only twenty years of age in California, Mexico, South America, and the Sandwich Islands. In 1852 and 1853 he was found fighting Indians on the frontier and in 1861 left a law practice in which he had newly engaged to join the Sixty-eighth Illinois Volunteers. He ranked at the close of the war as Lieutenant Colonel and had proved himself a good soldier. He then resumed his profession at Independence, Mo., and four years later began his well known career in Kansas. For ten consecutive years he was honored by that state in its legislative and executive departments, and during this term constitutional prohibition triumphed in Kansas. Since 1882 he has been actively engaged in the temperance canvass, and as a speaker no one has been more effective in bringing the prohibition issue clearly before the people. He is in demand in all parts of the country, and wherever he goes makes the impression of calm, clear thought, good sense, business ability, and thorough uprightness. No man in prohibition circles can rally a larger number of voters.

WILLIAM DANIEL, candidate for Vice President on the Prohibition ticket was born in Maryland about fifty-six years ago. Since 1860 he has been in the practice of law in Baltimore, has served his state in the legislature, and latterly most efficiently as head of the State Temperance Alliance, which has secured prohibition in fourteen of the twenty-three counties of Maryland. He is a man of means and liberality, and a life-long Republican until the ignoring of the temperance issue by the Republican National Convention last June. He is a good speaker, a man of fine social qualities, and deeply devoted to the idea of national as well as state prohibition.

"HE KNOWETH YE HAVE NEED."

Across the discord of our lives comes lowly
One harmony our hearts too seldom heed.
The comfort given us by the Teacher holy:
"He knoweth ye have need."

He sends the dew-drop for the flowers' drinking;
He slants his sunshine on the waiting grain:
And when the leaves with summer heat are shrinking,
He giveth them His rain.

Good gifts from out His ever open hand,
On every thing around are freely thrown;
And thinkest thou, O heart! He will withstand
Thy prayer alone?

O men and women, saddened in the living,
Smiles on the lip and sorrow in the heart,
Open your souls more fully for receiving:
Accept your part.

For still that sweet voice of the Father's sending,
Of Him who knows how human hearts can bleed,
Says to the weary ones before Him bending,
"He knoweth ye have need."

Knoweth the need and careth for the needing,
Although His way is seldom quite our way,
And smiles to see how sadly we are treading
The path that leads to day.

Then unto our greatest need replying,
That need of rest which every soul doth keep,
Upon His breast, like children lying,
He giveth us His sleep.

THE SPARROW'S TEXT.

A sparrow lighted, chirping, on a spray,
Close to my window, as I knelt in prayer,
Bowed by a heavy load of anxious care;
The morn was bitter, but the bird was gay,
And seemed by cheery look and chirp to say:
"What though the snow conceals my wonted fare,
Nor I have barn or storehouse any where,
Yet I trust heaven even on a winter's day"?

That little bird came like a winged text,
Fluttering from out God's Word to soothe my breast;
What though my life with wintry cares be vexed,
In a kind Father's watchful love I rest;
He meets this moment's need—I leave the next,
And, always trusting, shall be always blest.

SHALL WOMEN HELP?

ANNA E. DICKINSON.

The work of this world will be done only when every man and every woman shall do his or her share to the full.

Say some men and some women, "Women cannot fight; therefore they should not vote. Women cannot enforce disputed authority; therefore they should not assume it. Men will never consent to the equal rule of women, since women have not the strength to compel obedience."

That is to say, the world of men will never advance beyond a recognition of brute power.

The entire movement of civilization is marked by the ability of men to do without force, or the forms or threatenings of force in government, to accomplish self-government, to submit to the dictates of reason and conscience. In just such degree as the world shows itself ready for the recognition of women in political power, it shows itself fit for self-government. He who uses the whip needs the whip. He who needs the whip, if he have the opportunity, uses it.

So long as politics meant wars and rumors of war, so long as every twisted knot or tangled skein was to be cut by sword or battle-axe, there was no place for women's hands in this field. They could hold and wield no such weapons. But that day is done. Even kings no longer play at chess, with nations for pawns. This war of ours had to defend itself, to make its cause good, to prove that it signified more than national territory, or power, or unity; that it meant, in very truth, liberty, humanity, the rights of man, not alone for those who fought it, but for those who had not the strength, in some cases scarcely the will, to contend for themselves, ere it could go on its way to a victorious close.

When a war is fought on such grounds, wars, for us, are nearly ended.

"Jove means to settle
Astræa in her seat again,
And let down, from her golden chain,
An age of better metal."

The question of government today, and yet more to morrow, are questions sanitary, educational, social, humanitarian.

The drainage of great cities; the duties of boards; the education of children and youth; the fostering of science and art; the suppression of vice and intemperance; the reforming of forms of justice; the re-organization of systems of public charity and public correction; the supervision of homes for the homeless and disabled, for the orphans and the aged, for the deaf, the blind, the sick, the incapable, the insane; the establishment of justice in domestic relations; a re-enactment of laws touching marriage, divorce, the guardianship of children,—

These are matters, one and all, that should interest woman if they do not; that would be the better done for her help; that need her care, the care of which she needs, for mutual growth and benefit.

Women who, as a rule, are so cleanly and careful in their own houses, and such admirable nurses in their own homes, and such capital organizers in their own small domains, would see that all questions concerning the general health of towns and cities, the general care of hospitals and asylums of all sorts, were better met and answered than they are by the men who now face and settle them.

No set of women would keep house in such a filthy way as men keep it in the streets of great cities.

No set of women would keep house to such waste, and to so little comfort, as men keep it in the body of public institutions under their control.

No set of women, with the home-making instinct strong in them, would organize such cheerless barracks, such schools of idleness, as are the huge agglomerations of public charities.

No set of women, being enlightened, would set wide on all sides doors that are the gates to hell, dig pitfalls into which the unwary may stumble, do it in the name of the law, and then thrust out their well beloved to meet the fate that has been prepared for them — only standing ready to punish them if they go down.

Now men say to women, and women consent to the saying, "Thy place is at home. Thy duty is to thy children. Why strive in unwomanly fashion for place and name, and authority, and rights in the world?"

A woman can only do her duty to her home, — to other people's homes, — if her own is safe: her duty to her children, her duty to her own soul, by going into the world, not to strive in unwomanly fashion for place, and name, and authority, and rights; but, in womanly fashion, to do the work that no man is doing, the work that men are doing ill, the work that men are actually forbidding to be done.

It is an easy thing to teach, an easy thing to learn, selfishness, and call it womanliness.

There are plenty to say and to hear the saying, "The world is God's, not thine; let him work out a change if change must be." Take thine ease under thy own vine and fig tree. Let the world rush on its way to sorrow, to sin, to shame. What should such a fragile form as thine do to stop or to stay it?

Let truth fall in the streets, let virtue wander homeless till its feet take hold of the steps that lead down to destruction. What should such a delicate hand as thine do to arrest or save? soil it by no such contact.

Let gilded hells be opened on all sides to lure thy sons and thy neighbor's sons to gamble away their earnings, the support of a home; to draw them to arms that will embrace only to poison, sending them back to innocent and unconscious arms, that will be poisoned in turn; to put to the mouths of the weak in will, the strong in appetite, that that will destroy body and brain, reason and conscience, home and happiness, heart and soul, together. What shouldst thou know of such matters? To know is to be contaminated: keep thy ignorance, or thy ostensible ignorance, and thy womanly charm together.

Let government go to wrack, let commerce and society conspire to accomplish evil, let lives be blasted, and hearts be broken, and souls be damned. What are these to thee? Thy sole duty is as a violet to smell sweet, as a flute to sound fine harmonies.

And yet, sir, and yet, madam, God created this woman, not a flower, not a flute, but a living soul; as such to receive help, and to yield help to all other living souls; to it intrusted seed to sow, talents to multiply, work to be done. By and by the Lord of the harvest will say to it,—

"I gave thee of my seed to sow;
Bringest thou me an hundred fold?
Can she look up with face aglow,
And answer, 'Father, here is gold'?"

Nay. Rather, she will respond: This talent I multiplied not. I was afraid—afraid that multiplication would bring weights to be carried, and provoke envies and jealousies, fears within and cares without. This garden and this field I plowed and planted, and weeded not. The way was rough, and hurt my feet; the sun was hot and spoiled my beauty. To be pleasing in men's eyes, to men's tastes, or men's prejudices, to take my ease, was more to me than to do the work of God.

O my sisters! the world is groaning and travailing in pain until this day, crying out of the darkness wherein it gropes, out of the anguish in which it writhes, for your hands and help and care. Where, then, are your woman's hearts and your woman's consciences that you are silent and still?

Go to the asylums and the hospitals, and make of them homes.

Go to the jails, the prisons, the penitentiaries, and make them reformatories and regenerators.

Go to the ignorant, the rude, the stupid, and see that the light of intelligence is let into their night of mental bondage.

Go to the doors through which men go in men, and come out wild beasts; the doors that return, for the money there left, poverty, fightings, dismantled homes, brawls, murders, that absorb men and money, and in exchange crowd almshouses and jails, and ripen fruit for that ghastly tree of civilization—the gallows. Standing there, inbehalf of men, of women, of children, of society, alike outraged, defied, dishonored, destroyed, say, "In the name of the law, and with the power of the law, I stop this wholesale poison and butchery."

O men, my brothers! of what are you afraid? In just such measure as a man does his duty to the world, does he grow in real manliness. In just such measure as a woman does her duty to the world, does she grow in real womanliness.

Selfishness is not loveliness; weakness is not tenderness. As woman's life broadens and deepens, as her thought and her cares and her responsibilities widen, so does her capacity for love, her strength of love, broaden and deepen, grow in richness and beauty and power.

As women love humanity more, they will give better love to the men by their sides. Out of such work and such life, men, then, will be gainers in that for which they reveal the most desire, and express the most care.

I see grow out of such life and such work a woman who possesses both head and heart; a soul to feel, a brain to think; broad, earnest, just, as well as sweet, tender, and pure; able to give, as well as to receive; to help, as well as to welcome help; a woman to rest a tired man, to inspire a discouraged man, to stimulate a flagging man, as well as to be rested, stimulated, in blessed time and turn; a woman to see in society, in the church, in the state, a family that needs her wisdom, her thoughtful care, as does that of her own home; a woman, as her Maker intended her to be. The nations of the earth shall rise up and call such an one blessed; and God himself shall say to her work, "Well done!"

I ask such work for woman, not alone for herself, but quite as earnestly for the sake of the man who works and walks by her side; since broader thinking, nobler living, a more exalted type of womanhood, would compel — and there is need of it — broader thinking, nobler living, a more exalted type of manhood, among men.

"What does it matter to the world," as Paul Flemming asks, "whether you or I or another did such a deed, or wrote such a book, so be it deed and book were well done?"

To the world, nothing, so that the work be done; if, indeed, it can be done by another. Thy work is thine alone.

Small loss to the world, perhaps, if one man or one woman left his or her task unwrought; but how if the one be multiplied to millions? If each one so said, and was idle, the "matter" would be to the world that all of its labor would be unaccomplished.

And aside from the gaps and flaws so made in the work and destiny of the world, what does it matter to you whether your eyes having seen the work to be done, your ears having heard the cry of distress, and the call to duty, your feet having come to the burden where it lies in the way, you close your eyes, stop your ears, go wide of the path and the burden, and leave it to the chance and the risk of another seeing, hearing, answering, carrying faithfully to the end?

To the world it may or it may not be of some moment: to your soul, or mine, it is, I think, the difference between an essential heaven or hell.

So not alone for the world's sake, not alone for the sake of men and women in connection with time and the things of time, but for the sake of character-growth—growth of the soul—do I ask that each man and woman shall do his or her work, where it may be found, and do it till work for them is done.

Since God put no soul into the world, in frail or stalwart body, to smell a rose, to wander through a flower-garden, to dream away the long, long hours of a sunny summer-time of idleness, to seek selfishly its own pleasures, feed selfishly its own wants, gratify selfishly its own desires; but while it is called today to do whatsoever its hand findeth to do for friend or foe, or the stranger within or without the gates, and to do it with its might; to clamber mountain peaks — peaks of earnest endeavor, of heroic duty—through life, that at death it may be near to heaven; to toil in a harvest field, to labor in a vineyard, the bread and wine of which shall be tasted here, but shall be eaten and drunken to the full in the eternities of God.

EFFECTS OF INTEMPERANCE.

VIRGINIA PENNY.

A happier party of people was never seen than on the steamboat Emily Scott, as she gracefully swept from the port of Louisville, some years ago. The ladies were gay and sociable; the gentlemen polite and gallant. Each individual seemed anxious to contribute to the general enjoyment. Gaiety and happiness were the results. Books of such a character as to enliven were strewn about, and cheerfully loaned. Amusement and mirth lurked in every corner of the boat. The firemen made the lower deck to resound with their joyful songs; while in the stern the deck passengers sawed upon the violin, and manufactured such music as called for the whirling maze of the waltz. In the cabin, the evening passed in a merry, thoughtless manner. The next day was but a repetition, and the evening even more lively. A dance was proposed, and entered into with much zest. Finally, nature warned us that we trespassed on her hours, and yielding to her suggestion, we were soon enjoying her "sweet restorer, balmy sleep."

We passed Cairo safely, and had advanced some distance down the Mississippi river, when, at midnight, we were aroused by the sudden and unexpected cry of fire. Fire is dreadful in any place, and at any time, but on the broad Mississippi, on a dark and stormy night, it is awful. Though frequently exposed to danger, I never was more alarmed and agitated. I slipped on my shoes, threw a cloak around me, and stepped into the cabin. Impaired health had made me excitable and nervous. The shrieks of timid women, the cries of frightened children, and the deep, hoarse tones of command, made every nerve vibrate, and every chord was strung to the highest pitch. The stateroom adjoining mine was occupied by an old lady, nearly helpless from paralysis. Her low, heart-rending moans drew my attention. I opened the door, and would have assisted her from the bed, but her husband came, and I yielded my place. Amid the excitement, and hurry, and confusion, I glided to the guards. The wind blew wildly, and lightning flashed vividly across the heavens. The dark, leafless trees loomed up against the sky, revealing, on either side, a fearful distance to the land. The foaming sky betokened a storm, and the prayer involuntarily arose that heaven would send us rain. From the bow of the hurricane deck arose a broad sheet of flame. Near me I noted a little girl, apparently ten years of age. She seemed unconscious of all around her; but as she looked up to the sweeping flame, I heard her say, "Oh, God! save my mother." Stepping to her side I said, "Dear child, I will try and save you, if you will entrust yourself to me." Sweetly but sadly she smiled, and as I bent to enfold her in my arms she imprinted a kiss and replied: "A thousand thanks — but my mother might perish, and I could not survive." Then like an angel on some errand of mercy she flew from my presence, never to be seen or heard of again.

At once there was a calm, a deep, silent awe. It seemed that the helplessness of man was impressed upon every soul, and the full heart of nature would burst from sympathy. Then, like the faint sobs of a new made orphan, a deep, full, universal wail swept over the waters, and awakened the night birds from their slumbers. On leaving home, my friends had entrusted me to the care of an old gentleman, a highly esteemed friend of my mother. He now stood by, offering words of comfort, and endeavoring to devise some way for our escape. Suddenly there swept by us a form, then a plunge in the water, and all was over. I turned to mark the efforts of others, and saw a weak, delicate, careworn woman. Beside her was her husband, whom I knew to be a man of some property and influence, but unfortunately addicted to the use of liquor. The evening before he had indulged immoderately, and now, helpless as an infant, he stood gazing upon the apparent ruin awaiting him, with a stupid, haggard, demonish countenance that would have awed one of Beelzebub's friends. His wife lovingly clasped him, and, oh, it made me sick at heart to see the convulsions of that agonized man. He felt that she whom he should have then been able to protect must go down to a cold, watery grave, because of his destroying sin—intemperance. Sad and gloomy, yet trusting in Him who said to the waves of Galilee, "Peace, be still," I leaned against the open door of a stateroom for support. The excitement and anxiety had been too great, and I fainted away. I knew nothing more until, opening my eyes, they met the benevolent gaze of an old lady. Arousing every energy, I raised my head from her lap, but what a sight opened to my view. There was the floating vessel almost consumed. Its light made objects around quite distinct. The muttering thunder and the electric flashes added to the horror. Scattered about were people clinging to pieces of timber. Some were grasping at the drowning, and many were sinking to rise no more. Near us, a female, whose long hair skimmed the surface, beat the waves, like a dove wearied with its flight. An effort was made to save her, but in vain. A strong, athletic man buffeted the waves, but was so opposed by the strong wind that he became nearly exhausted. Not far off was a grey-haired man, whom I took to be a Methodist minister, who had contributed to the entertainment and instruction of our serious and thoughtful moments. Here and there were forms struggling with death, and as the burning vessel floated away, one after another, who had bravely combated with the fire, were seen to make a last, long leap.

As the life boat approached the shore, a wild and startling scream, and the flowing tears of a young man with us, told a tale of touching interest: the only son of a widowed mother was safe. She had reached the shore and recognized her son in the boat. To the earnest, inquisitive gaze of a gentle and affectionate girl rescued, and standing on the bank, I heard from our midst the sobs of a middle-aged lady, mingling with the cheering words, "God bless you, my daughter."

Filled with gratitude for our deliverance, we knelt in prayer, and offered the thanks of sincere hearts. The inebriate to whom I have referred, I have since learned was saved as by a miracle. He now considers ardent spirits the greatest curse of our land, abhors the sight of a drunkard, and is an efficient worker in the cause of temperance.

And now I would close my imperfect sketch, but you may ask what caused this dreadful havoc of life and property. It arose from the intoxication of some of the officers. The captain, the pilot and engineer were all to a great extent under the influence of liquor. The stream was wild and broad, and the night dark and foggy. Yet even with those obstacles the boat could have been made to reach the shore with its living freight, but for the drunkenness of the pilot. He lost all control of the boat even before the tiller rope burned. The engineer, a careless, reckless fellow, had neglected to watch the amount of steam, and the condition of the machinery. The inebriated state of the captain was such as to render him unfit for his responsible duties.

This is but one of a hundred cases that have occurred from the same cause, during the few past years, on our western waters. How many dissipated men have been entrusted with offices where life was constantly at stake. Yet dissipation by ardent spirits was not made a ground sufficient for unfitness, or rejection. Oh, King Alcohol, thy reign has been a cruel one. It has been marked with the sighs of widows and the tears of fatherless children It has cast a blight wherever it fell. Thou hast made many a fair and happy home the scene of sorrow, neglect and poverty. Many a youthful mind hast thou filled with dark and gloomy views of life and mankind. Many a gentle spirit hast thou crushed, many a loving heart hast thou broken.

LEAD PENCIL LETTER.—NO. III.

The "Greatest (Intellectual) Show on Earth"—Hon. T. W. Bicknell, of Boston, the Barnum of the Exhibition—Monseigner Capel Speaks—The W. C. T. U. Methods Endorsed—Etc., Etc.

DEAR WOMEN OF THE WHITE RIBBON:—I have had so good a time that I want you to be in it. "An educational cyclone has struck this town," as Dr. Bascom tersely puts it. This National Teachers' Association is the largest gathering of teachers ever seen. Here are any where from five to seven thousand educators, ranking all the way from the dignified college president to primer teacher, and brought together from all over Christendom — intelligent, genial and intensely wide-awake. They fill these lovely, hospitable homes of Madison, pack the hotels, and tent on the Capitol and University Campus. They flock like doves to their windows when the electric lights of the educational world flash out their signals. They swarm in to study the rich and varied "exhibits" of school materials and results — by far the finest ever presented for their contemplation. And from here large numbers of them will hie away to Yellowstone Park, Alaska, California and Colorado, to re-create and to "build up" their weary powers for the autumn's new campaign. Just think of the lonesome, empty school houses of America at this hour, silent but for the dreary buzz of some imprisoned fly upon the window pane! Think of the ten million children let loose into a summer's frolic, and God's greatest and best outdoor university of "real things." And, pleasantest of all, think of three hundred thousand teachers, three-fourths of them women, going their own gait for a while, and gathering to brain, and heart, and weary frame, the subtle, recuperative forces of rest, change and old Mother Nature's thousand inspirations!

But to the convention. It lasted four days, and I was present at one session only, but that was ample material for a longer letter than this must be. The previous evening a "woman's symposium" had been held in two sections, one in Assembly hall, the other in the Congregational church. In the Assembly hall, a lady, Miss Doyle, of Brooklyn, ably presided, and papers of great merit were read by Mrs. May Wright Sewall, of Indianapolis, Miss Clara Conway, of Memphis, Tenn., and Mrs. Eva D. Kellogg, of Boston. By request of president Bicknell, I essayed to talk in both places almost "at once," so hurriedly was I conveyed from one audience to the other. It goes without saying, that my object was to bring the theme of scientific temperance teaching to the front. So, next morning, bright and early, we temperance women were on hand, for the committee on resolutions was to report, and we should know the fate of the subject dearest to the average W. C. T. U. heart.

Well, they had resolutions on schools in the territories, on arbor day, on Indian education, etc., all excellent; and then President Bicknell called the committee on temperance. Think of that! The like was never known before in national educational annals. I must here enroll those honored names: President Bascom, Wisconsin, chairman; Mary Allen West, Illinois; William A. Mowry, Rhode Island; Eva D. Kellogg, Massachusetts; Henry B. Norton, California; May Wright Sewell, Indiana; B. G. Northrop, Connecticut.

The report, brief and to the point, read as follows:

The committee on temperance notes with profound satisfaction the practical direction now being given to the aroused temperance sentiment of this country. Especially do we rejoice in the well directed efforts of the Women's Christian Temperance Union to secure instruction in physiology and hygiene in all grades of the public schools, with particular reference to the effect of alcoholic stimulants upon the human system. Legislation to this effect has already been secured in five states—New York, Michigan, New Hampshire, Vermont and Rhode Island—and we recommend the hearty co-operation of this association in making such legislation general throughout the land.

This was adopted without discussion, and with hardly a dissenting voice.

Leaders of the convention assured me that there was a "practical unanimity of sentiment" as to the wisdom of the methods pursued by the W. C. T. U. in relation to scientific temperance work. Make a note of all this, dear sisters of the local unions. Ask your editors to copy this action of the largest and most representative body of teachers ever gathered upon this planet; talk it over with your boards of education, and be encouraged by the thought that forces at a distance are reaching helpful hands to you. Lieutenant Greely, wretched, starving, utterly hopeless, was reading the service for the dying on either side of him, under that fallen tent, when the whistle of the steam-launch sounded and relief shone in on him like heaven! So for you, often discouraged, and thinking yourselves isolated and forsaken, light shall spring up and strong hands stretch toward you full of gifts you did not not think could reach so far!

Two years ago, at St. Paul, Mrs. Hunt (whose wise planning has done so much to bring these great results), secured the favorable verdict of the National Medical association, and this year the International Sunday School and National Educational associations have specifically and heartily endorsed the methods which each local W. C. T. U., is quietly striving to carry into execution. Let us take courage. "The Modern Spirit" is with us—indeed, we are ourselves, a part of it! The strong movement among scholars toward the universal study of natural science is of incalculable value to us.

The heavenly forces with us side,
The stars are watching at their posts.

When the applause which greeted the adoption of this temperance report had died away, you may be sure I "settled back" with unspeakable content to enjoy the intellectual feast of the morning.

First we had Prof. G. Stanley Hall, of Johns Hopkins University, "on the principles and methods of a system of elementary education." He spoke of childhood as the actual receptacle of all that humanity has attained and dwelt upon the laws of inheritance and heredity after a fashion that would have delighted the heart of good Dr. Burnett, our superintendent of that department in the National W. C. T. U. Indeed, the determination to go to the root in the study of whatever was before it, has been the salient feature of this splendid convention from the president's opening address to the end. That "this is the age that asks the reason why," receives a luminous demonstration from these earnest teachers of the Yankee nation.

Then Hon. Mr. Sheldon, of Boston, associate of President Bicknell in editing educational journals, and the newly elected secretary of this great association, read a masterly paper by Hon. John W. Dickinson on the methods of analysis and synthesis. These I will not attempt to reproduce, but the paper of Hon. J. M. Greenwood, principal of Kansas City schools, was perhaps more level to the general comprehension and I give a few notes:

It is as important for us to find out a child's ignorance as his knowledge. The 'forgettery' is no more to be overlooked than the memory. We must study the child himself as we have never done. Then we can draw out instead of forever cramming down ideas. Prof. Hall had made out a long list of questions for children in the lowest grade, from five to seven years. This related to their acquaintance with familiar objects in nature, with the origin of useful articles, as leather, cloth, etc; with their theological opinions and a great variety of themes.

Prof. Greenwood had noted the per cent. of ignorance as set down against the Boston children and resolved to compare with it the results of careful research among nearly seven hundred, I think, of the primary grade in the west (i. e.. his own schools at Kansas City). It also occurred to him to keep the per cent. of ignorance in the colored children separate. So he read to us the three percentages, Boston, Kansas City, white, and Kansas City, colored.

More amusing disclosures and surprises I have rarely heard than were thus given. For behold, in revelations of keen observation, practical knowledge and shrewd common sense, young Africa led all the rest!

To the question, "Where is your brain? Your elbow? Your ankle?" the colored children gave the largest number of correct responses, but to another question (indicative of the comparative health of that most abused organ in these different grades of being) the Boston children gave an almost unanimous response while not a single colored child could answer. This question was, "Where is your stomach?"

I can not tarry longer, on this unique catechism, but will make a brief synopsis of the delightful bit of talk by no less a personage than Monseignor Capel, the most cultured and gifted Englishman of the Catholic church. He was present as "a looker on in Vienna" and was not introduced in his quality of priest but as "an eminent educator," the statement being made that for five years (at some period of his life, and a remote one, I judge,) he was "Head master of a Masters' Normal School in England." Of medium height, fine figure, dignified yet graceful bearing, in a priest's "fatigue uniform," with close cropped hair, keen, dark eyes, pleasant smile, and the lines of culture unmistakably written on his face, Monseignor is a notable personage to see. In voice and utterance he is the perfection of an English gentleman. His deep, full, musical tones, gliding scale and skillful emphasis, surpassed anything I had heard on this side of the water. A quiet humor pervaded his remarks and he introduced two or three words of undoubted slang, as, "Your presiding officer spotted me at once in the audience," but he took up these expressions as a well-bred person picks up a bit of coal, not with fingers but with tongs; that is, he showed by the playful context and smile that he knew a million times better than to use these words as his vernacular. I confess I liked this of him, for slang is, when we think of it, the formative stage of that "Book of Proverbs" which each age writes for itself, the fittest of course surviving, and only the fit will be used by persons of polite tastes.

Monseignor said in effect: "As you have courteously given me a few minutes, let me put them to the best use. Let me counsel you to impress upon your pupils the supreme importance of language as a study. In a great heterogeneous nation like your own, there cannot be one way of speaking, at least, not yet. I am learning already to discriminate between those from the north and south, the east and west. Which speaks better English, you or your British cousins, is indeed a most delicate question, which we will be careful not to broach. Will you permit me to give you a rule which will I am confident, if faithfully observed, take away the twang of that high key, complained of, as you know, by foreigners in reference to at least a portion of your country. I believe it will also greatly improve the health of teachers and public speakers whose head voice wears so greatly upon the vocal organs. It is this, and it was given to me by an American at that! when I was nineteen years of age, and upon this rule I practiced for six weeks before a mirror, having I assure you, a most attentive audience:

"Carefully pronounce your consonants and leave your vowels to take care of themselves. This rule will subdue the high key and make you heard. One-fifth of the human race speaks English. It is the noblest tongue of all, our mother tongue. The Greeks and Romans, the French and Germans glory in their own native speech and give small attention to that of 'outside barbarians.' Let us do the same. Let us ring out our words like gold coin. Let us learn to be 'full men' by reading, 'ready men' byspeaking, and 'accurate men' by writing, as Lord Bacon counsels us."

Now I deem these words invaluable to every woman in our ranks. If we would as carefully study and carry out their thought as this English gentleman has done, it would increase our acceptability as speakers in the social or the more public circle one hundred fold. Studying to utter the consonants properly opens the lower register of the voice-organ, deepens and enriches the tones, and greatly helps the throat by the very laws of larynx structure. Let us all stand advised.

The next speaker was Dr. Wm. T. Harris, of St. Louis and Concord fame. He is a typical American of the choicest type. Manly, yet of most delicate nature; reverent yet most adventurous in thought; clear-cut as crystal and pointed as diamond in expression, Dr. Harris is a scholar of whose lofty spirit and unmatched results in his lines of study America may well be proud. An incident showed the alertness of his mind. He was seated on the platform making a memorandum when Mr. Sheldon, who was reading an essay for an absentee came across an illegible sentence which contained the advice given by Philip of Macedon to Aristotle when he became precepter to the young Alexander. After thrice trying to decipher the words Mr. Sheldon turned to the gentlemen on the platform whereupon Dr. Harris said, without looking at the manuscript, "Philip said to his son's teacher 'Make yourself unnecessary to him.'" To me there is great wisdom in this counsel, that is, make your pupil so individual, teach him so well how to use the tools of learning that he shall ere long be able to pursue an independent path, to rely on his own powers. Dr. Harris spoke of the science and art of teaching, distinguishing with rare power of illustration between the two. One thought I wish to bring you. He said the two cardinal doctrines of our religion underlie the whole scheme of human affairs, and among the rest, of a teacher's vocation. Grace and vicarious atonement—these are coextensive with the progress of our race. Grace means gift, and each one of us is the heritor of all the ages. Silently about us on every side stand the gifts of invention, of commerce, of music, poetry, love, free to us each, the great civilization, the mastery over nature, the accummulated and uncounted riches of the great aspiring, untiring race to which we belong. Vicariously too have these brave, undaunted workers atoned, wrought out salvation for us from the bondage, the ignorance, the barrenness of early ages. Have we liberty? Vicariously was serfdom killed and freedom purchased for us each at untold sacrifice, and if we are noble we too would leave some gift, work out some redemption for our age and for our country.

This to me was a glorious thought, that we, in our small measure, may live according to those ineffably high and holy purposes which brought to this world One "who was in the beginning with God."

You may imagine, dear sisters, that this convention was indeed a solace to "your representative" who had barely survived the two mobs of howling dervishes in Chicago recently, and I was glad to see expressed by good and gifted Dr. A. D. Mayo, in the closing address, the thought so naturally coming to my own mind, that all of the political conventions in America this year will not mean so much to our people as this gathering up of the leading educators of the nation to study "the child in the midst."

Too much cannot be said of President Bicknell's liberality of spirit and loyalty to the temperance cause. When before did the president of this association in emphatic terms set forth the supreme importance of the temperance question and of woman's relation to the same, putting women upon the program and appointing a temperance committee to receive their resolutions? He is equally progressive on the question of woman's recognition as well as her work—having placed representatives of the meeker sex upon all his committees. As much cannot be said however for the committee on nominations, which reported none but the names of men for the general officiary in a list of between fifty and sixty names. At this a lady from Iowa made earnest and womanly commentary, and I was moved to say that I would not have believed this possible had not my own ears borne witness to the fact. They could at least have put on ladies as vice presidents, asssistant secretaries, or chosen both a gentleman and a lady to represent the states. I am confident that this failure was from no bad motive but simply from the momentum of precedent six thousand years strong. The gentlemen of that convention are too intelligent and liberal minded to intend any discourtesy, least of all an injustice. They simply forgot that to women equally intelligent the well earned recognitions and amenities of their profession are as valuable as to their brothers.

"'Tis sweet to be remembered,
'Tis sad to be forgot."

LESSONS FROM THE SOUTH.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—As you always welcome suggestions I will give you the experience of the Oxford W. C. T. U., who have adopted the plan of offering a gold badge every year for the best essay on temperance, written by the students of their college. Mrs. Sibley and myself were invited to present the badge this year, and it was a charming occasion.

We reached Covington, the nearest town to Oxford, in a dreadful storm, but Mrs. Haygood, wife of the president, was awaiting us in her carriage. The officers of the W. C. T. U., and some of the professors of the college, regardless of the weather and distance, were also there to welcome us.

The evening was stormy, but the church was crowded. Dr. Atticus Haygood, in his own felicitous way, opened the services. The choir, being one of the best in the south, gave us delightful music, and then Mrs. Scomp, wife of Prof. Scomp, and president of the Oxford W. C. T. U., in a chaste and beautiful address, introduced me. How gloriously the women, who have "been bound lo these many years," are being loosed from their infirmity, and how many souls are being gathered into the Kingdom through the teachings of these unsealed lips.

Mrs. Sibley and myself both spoke; and as I took my seat, the president of the college, Dr. Atticus Haygood, arose and said he did so to thank us for the lessons we had given the students of Emory, for we had not only given them lessons on temperance, but he was sure we must have convinced them that there was no such thing as a sex in mind. I had said in my remarks that the W. C. T. U. of the south was not asking to go to the polls in person, but we did want to be represented there for we were the silent constituency of every man who casts a ballot, and when it was cast for the saloon it was cast against us, and that which was dearest to us, our homes. The doctor said he took issue with me, and felt when I was speaking as Henry Ward Beecher did when Miss Willard was speaking: "And yet she cannot vote." He wanted the women to vote, for he did not believe the dreadful traffic which was taking its thousands annually to dishonored graves would ever be prohibited until it was snowed under by the pure white ballots of the mothers, wives and sisters of the land. The gentlemen applauded this sentiment vociferously, and the ladies looked questioningly at them while they did it, as much as to say, Do you really mean it? and do you know what our going to the polls means? Pat, whose speech I read last week, realizes it in its full force, and says: "When the women get to voting I will lave the counthry, for it just manes every dacent right taken away from the men, who will not be allowed to go in their shirt sleeves to vote, or aven to get as gentlemanly drunk as they would at a wake. No shillalying, not even as much as a black eye, at the risk of being thought a blackguard." Well there is a way to prevent it. If the men will represent us by voting whisky out of the country, we will gladly let them do it. But there are poor heart-broken wives and mothers, some of the gentlest and loveliest women in our land, who have too often gone at midnight into saloons, amid oaths, blasphemies, and personal violence, to rescue their loved ones, who feel that "snowing under the liquor traffic," as Dr. Haygood expresses it, would be the easiest and most lady-like way, and their number increases with their despair of help from any other source. God pity the wives and mothers of drunkards, and show us just the right way to help them.

But I was to tell what the ladies of Oxford accomplished by the prize offering. The first prize was taken last year by a young man not identified with any temperance organization, and opposed to pledges. Some of the ladies wished it had been otherwise, and that the successful competitor had been a temperance man. But it was best as it happened, for the beautiful golden badge, with its motto, "For God, and home, and native land," proved an irresistible sermon to the gifted young student, and he left his Alma Mater to do battle for a cause he had so eloquently advocated in his prize essay. Through his efforts largely, prohibition was secured in his county. He is an editor, and his columns give no uncertain sound on the temperance question. So much for W. C. T. U. work.

Our meeting last week was a most enthusiastic one, and was kept up almost until midnight. Over sixty of the students signed our pledge. Sixty voters for "God, and home, and native land," and when we consider that they are all educated, influential young men, ought we not to thank God and take courage? S. F. CHAPIN.

ADVANCE ALONG THE LINE OF WORK AMONG FOREIGNERS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:— At our glorious state convention [Missouri] last week, I was asked to make a little report on the foreign work. I did so, taking only about eight minutes to talk. It shows how ready the people are for this work that I had only to speak of the necessity of a German family paper, and the plan that had been adopted of asking the ten states having largest German population to pledge one hundred and seventy-five dollars apiece, to bring out the enthusiasm of the people—I told them that California, Ohio and Illinois have responded and given this pledge; and now I was only waiting for my own state to do the same thing, that I might have more courage to ask others. In ten minutes they had given me two hundred and seventy dollars — one hundred and seventy-five dollars for the paper, and ninety dollars for other purposes. And they did not seem to be inclined to stop giving, but were restrained by the state treasurer. Several spoke upon the question, giving the facts tha our elections are so influenced by the German vote that it is of first importance that we do good work in this direction. We now have four states, and hope soon to have the other six for one hundred and seventy-five dollars, and then our German paper will be assured. Little Connecticut, which is not one of the ten, gives fifty dollars, and, possibly, more. Oh, what we might do in this coming election with a good German paper. S. F. GRUBB.

"MICHIGAN, MY MICHIGAN."

THE UPPER PENINSULA AND THE TEMPERANCE QUESTION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—"There are two of us," if you really see Michigan aright; south of the lakes—lumber, salt, agriculture, and manufactories, with a population largely American, and very few centers where the foreign elements are gathered in masterful numbers. New England, New York, and a fair sprinkling from Ohio, have given us the tone and make up of our commonwealth in its southern portion.

North of the lakes—mining, mining, everywhere. The rocks that underlie that part of the state and wall in the gleaming lakes are rich with ore; the jutting cliffs are iron, and down under your feet, copper, silver, and even gold are laid in mosaic by the hand of God. Very little farming is done in this soil, which lies like a scarf over the riches below. Here the population is largely foreign —English, Irish, Swede, and Polander, with the shrewd Yankee, who generally does the bossing and manages to get the profits. It is eminently a civilization with a head of gold, and feet of clay. Fortunes newly made are at the top, bringing luxury, ease, and fashion in a social life worldly to the last degree.

Labor at the bottom, hard, unremitting labor, bringing as if impelled by a strange fascination, the hidden treasures of the rocks from their grasp.

Whole streets of houses just alike, where men sleep when above ground, and women care for the children; houses that are built by the great corporations and can never be quite like the homes men build for themselves —and into these a large population is crowded, almost as closely as in the eastern cities. There is little of what can be called public improvements,—the fine school buildings being an exception to this remark—while millions are in such marvellous machinery as you will find turning the rock into gold.

Since 1875 the Michigan south of the lakes has been stirred by the temperance reform. The church, the W. C. T. U., the Red Ribbon clubs, the State Alliance, and the Prohibition party, have been the active organized forces in the field, and legislatures, political parties and elections have felt the thrill and shock of this great contest.

Michigan, north of the lakes, is more than a decade behind in this march of progress, and needs tons of moral dynamite to bring the fine gold of righteousness to the top of society and government.

There is no sign visible to the naked eye that the saloon power, in any fashion, recognizes the right of the state to regulate their traffic, or the majesty of law when enacted. Just now perhaps honorable mention should be made of Marquette, where the mayor is doing something for the Christian Sabbath, but everywhere, on the cars, the streets and in the saloons the carnival of appetite goes on unchecked.

When this "state of things" sends its delegation to political conventions, or the legislature, it means a solid vote for rum, and against all phases of the temperance reform as expressed in legislation. Temperance in the grand full sense in which it has come to be known in the country, can count as its foes in northern Michigan:

1. Polite society both in and out of the church. So enthusiastic are the votaries of pleasure that we were told of a lady in one city who sent east for tracts in favor of dancing and distributed them with as much faithfulness as the women do those against beer and cider, and then organized the children into dancing clubs as well as the older ones. In another town a woman had this same "department of juvenile instruction," and many times last winter the children danced in the parlors of a hotel while their fathers gambled and drank below. Church members, Sunday school workers, and even ministers of the gospel of self denial for Christ's sake, indulge in the social glass, and so it comes to pass that the "golden head" of this northern population is wrong on the temperance question.

2. The toiling classes are in the grasp of the drink habit. I have come to think charitably and speak carefully of our foreign born drinkers because they are not the worst sinners in this matter; they have been so brought up; it is their education and they believe it lawful. These of whom we now speak toil so hard that recreation springs to the extreme of lawlessness and indulgence in appetite, so the "feet of clay" totter and crumble before the power of strong drink.

On the side of righteousness and a coming reformation may be counted the intelligent conviction of as bright and keen a population as can be found in the world, that the present conditions are not the best and need changing, and the slow heart throb of the wronged working classes, who live in poverty to support the lazy, dishonest, law-defying saloon men, who watch for the spoiling of many people.

"We have so many foreigners here this cannot be helped," is the easy, smooth spoken excuse universally heard, but God knows that the blame does not lie with heaviest weight on the toiling masses at the bottom, but upon the easy going, self indulgent, "golden head" which for many reasons is willing it shall be so.

The upper peninsula must be taken for the temperance reform. Conviction born of the Holy Spirit is needed on the church until it is willing to be separate from the world and "lift up a standard for the people," and to this end we ask all who love the truth to pray. Consecration on the part of Christian women to Christ in such measure that social customs, nor polite society shall be able with its flattery or its sneer to make them party to the greatest evil of the age, or keep them silent and idle amid its desolations. Courage on the part of Christian men in religious and political life is sorely needed, not only to bring purity to their own immediate surroundings but to meet their obligations to the welfare of the whole state. Literature of the best and strongest on this line of reform is another demand until personal duty and the truth about the political phases of the temperance question are before both brain and conscience.

Upper Michigan is wonderful in resources, grand in industry, keen and shrewd in business and popular life, but it needs the best that pen and voice can do and a pentecost of spiritual power to bring the "golden head and feet of clay" abreast with the best thought of the day on total abstinence for the individual and prohibition for the state. MARY T. LATHRAP.

"YOU CAN'T COME IN, SIR."

If you would not be a drunkard,
You must not drink a drop;
For if you never should begin,
You'll never have to stop.

The taste of drink, good people say,
Is hard in driving out;
Then, friends, in letting in that taste,
Why, what are you about?

Out of your house to keep a thief,
You shut your door and lock it,
And hang the key upon a nail,
Or put it in your pocket?

So, lest King Rum within you should
His horrid rule begin, sir,
Just shut your lips and lock them tight,
And say, "You can't come in, sir!"

TOMMY'S FUN.

META E. B. THORN.

"I don't see why it is I never can have any fun. I think it's real mean; so there!" and Tommy Josslyn flung himself out of the room with a rude slam that set his mother's head to aching as her heart already ached.

To be sure it was a great disappointment for a boy of eleven years.

Two years before, when the "great day of national independence" had come he had assisted in the celebration with Uncle Jack who had spent his summer vacation on the Josslyn farm, on the borders of Alderburgh, and in various outdoor recreations had recruited before entering on the arduous duties of his senior year at Yale.

The next summer Tommy had been sick with that most unromantic disease, the measles, and all the long, bright day while gay crowds were hurrying by, while bands were playing and bells were ringing and guns firing he could have no part in it all, but tossed restlessly about in his bed that never before had seemed so uncomfortable. True, his parents had done all they could to cheer him and make the day less lonely. He had been permitted to snap a bunch of torpedoes on a square of oil-cloth mamma had laid down beside his bed; little Nannie had kept him supplied with all the fruit he was allowed to eat, and today brought him some extra fine oranges and a dish of the largest and most luscious strawberries he had ever seen. Mamma gave him a new book filled with the loveliest pictures, at which he could glance now and then, though he could not read, lest he injure his eyes. More than all, in Tommy's opinion, Uncle Jack had sent him a new knife with ever so many blades, and a bow and arrows, writing, "Don't be down in the mouth, Tom, bear it like a man, and we'll make it all up next year. When you get well practice with the bow and arrows and then we'll have an archery match and you shall have lots of magnificent big crackers and a toy cannon! So cheer up!"

Then in the afternoon his mother wrapped him up in blankets and comforter, put him on the lounge and rolled him out into the sitting room where he could watch from his windows the passers-by, when, by some kindly chance, to his intense delight the "Fantastic" procession came that way; and in the evening the glorious "fireworks" were in plain view on the distant hill, and Tommy was allowed to remain there on his lounge by the window until the magnificent display ended in a brilliant "Good Night!"

Now I think considering the circumstances Tommy had quite a good time. Indeed he himself acknowledged, as his mamma helped him back to his now cool and inviting bed, that it had been a "pretty jolly Fourth after all."

But as that was a year ago perhaps he had forgotten how every one had striven for his pleasure then, or he might have borne his disappointments more bravely. You see, in the first place, Uncle Jack, who had entered his father's great banking house last year, had been sent off to Europe at a moment's notice, but he took time to write Tom a kind letter and sent with it a large box containing the crackers and cannon he had promised.

"Be a brave boy and I'll not forget you when I come back, Tom," said he, and Tom looked forward for a handsome present on his return.

So he thought he would be quite content, when lo, little Nannie was taken very sick, and now the doctor looked very grave as he said: "Very serious case; brain much involved; must be kept very quiet."

So mamma was compelled to put an end to all Tom's joyous anticipations.

"You will have to postpone your celebration for a few days, my dear. I should not dare to trust you away from us with those large crackers, and it would not do to explode them in the yard now on Nannie's account. I am sure you would not wish to disturb her when our only hope is in keeping her quiet."

"Oh fiddlesticks!" was the disrespectful response, and then, I am sorry to say, he added those unjust words I quoted at the beginning.

Soon after one might have seen a sulky little face peeping out from a snug hiding place in the old apple tree, a face all wrinkled and twisted and knotted into ugly frowns, and with a dark gleam of resentment in the eyes usually so bright and mirthful. Yes, Tom had given his selfish passion the reins, and it was leading him far astray, having already filled his heart with bitterness and rebellious anger.

"They are mine!" he was muttering, "those beautiful crackers and that splendid cannon are mine! She has no right to say I can't fire them. 'Twont hurt Nannie! They are mine! I will! so there! I don't care!" and with these rather incoherent exclamations the busy brain seemed to have come to some determination, and the wilful boy climbed down from his perch and hastened into the house. He stole up stairs to a large store closet where he knew his mother had put the box when it came, and quickly taking it down he hurried away to his own room.

"Yes, it IS MINE! There is my name in beautiful letters as plain as print. It is mine, and I shall do what I please with it."

Yes, he had decided. Could any power in earth or heaven cause that wilful little spirit to desist from its undertaking? Poor mamma observed with pain the shadows in her boy's sunny eyes, but her ministrations on the dear little sick child were too absorbing to give her opportunity for more than a whisper as he was turning away to his own room at bedtime: "God bless my boy, and help him to bear his disappointment bravely."

A brilliant day ushered in by booming guns and pealing bells, and Tommy finds himself with his precious box in his arms and a pocketful of matches busily preparing for his own "fun."

"It is mine," he is still muttering, "mine, and I will have some fun."

So he fixes a cracker in the cannon; now he lights the match, now he touches it, and with a terrible explosion the heavily loaded cracker fairly throws the toy over and the frightened boy falls back into the thicket of lilacs.

At that moment comes a fearful scream from the open window,—the voice of his little sister in tones of wild terror,—"O, mamma, don't let it shoot me! O, mamma, the gun, the gun! Please, oh, please don't let it shoot me!"

Over and over again that pleading cry, over and over again, and with it still ringing in his ears, in an agony of fear and distress he hurries away to his perch in the old apple tree.

"What has he done? He cannot tell, but oh, that he had obeyed!"

Hours slip away. It is almost sunset when he at last finds courage to enter the house. All is still. "Jane," he whispers to the weeping girl who is carrying an armful of clothing through the hall, "Jane, what's the matter?"

"O Tommy, is the excited reply, "your little sister is dead! Somebody fired a gun right near the house, and it threw her into spasms and she died two hours ago. And her ma is 'most crazy, too."

"Where is she?" cried the boy, meaning his mother, but the girl, misunderstanding him, answered eagerly, "O, I'll show you! The dear lamb,—but she's a sweet angel now. Come with me." And she led him into the quiet parlor. Stepping forward she raised the sheet which hung like a snow drift over the sofa, and there like a fragile lily broken from its stem lay—little Nannie! Could it be? Something drew the boy irresistibly to her side, and he stood looking down upon the lovely child.

The blossom-like face, with its aureole of shining rings of golden tresses in loose masses all about it was pure and peaceful as a pearl, and about the slightly-parted lips lingered almost a smile. The large blue eyes were closed and the long, heavy lashes traced faint shadows below them. One dear little hand, perfect and coldly white as marble, rested upon her heart, half clasping a cluster of her favorite sweet violets; in the other, which lay by her side, nestled a few sprays of mignonette. Nothing was there to remind of the long, painful battle with disease.

"She is sleeping!" he murmured at last, and listened for her breathing. But no!

A faint breeze stole in and lifted a curl upon her brow, and wafted a faint odor from the violets, and even stirred the folds of her dress,—the dainty white robe of delicate beauty he had often seen her wear. With a deep, slow sigh the zephyr departed, and still the boy stood with fascinated gaze.

"It must be she is sleeping," again he said, and softly called her once and yet again, and looked to see her arouse.

But the little hands, ever so ready to minister to his comfort, stirred not; the tender eyes that had ever shone lovingly on him, were not lifted; the voice, whose silvery tones had called his name so sweetly, responded not to his anxious entreaty, "Speak to me, Nannie"; the tiny feet that so patiently had run to and fro to supply each but half-expressed want of his when he had tossed in fever, were still now,—still as they had never been before.

Deeper and deeper into the child's heart pressed the conviction that it was true, that his Nannie was gone, gone beyond his recall, and with great swelling billows of grief surging up from his inmost heart, he turned away, and rushing up to his room threw himself upon his bed to sob himself to sleep.

Morning brought to Tommy a vivid recollection of the sad scenes of the day before, and with an aching heart he prepared to descend the stairs. In the lower hall he met his mother, and ere she could speak, with a burst of tears the child's over-burdened heart spent itself, as he threw his arms about her, sobbing: "O Mamma! Nannie, Nannie!"

"Yes darling, I know you are anxious. So are we all. But she seems a little better this morning, and if we can only keep her quiet today we trust will escape more serious trouble."

"Quiet, mamma?" exclaimed the bewildered boy. "But she is dead!"

"No, dear! You must be dreaming. Thank God, she is not dead. Come and see." And taking his nerveless hand she led him to his sister's bedside.

With all their old-time loving expression, though without their usual lustre, the large eyes looked upon him, while the gentle tones murmured, "Dear Tom."

Scarcely believing the evidence of his senses, yet with a thrill of unutterable gladness to which he dared not give expression, he stooped and kissed the slender fingers with quivering lips and hurried from the room.

You can guess the rest of my tale, how the vivid impression of that dream was never really effaced. How it ever abided as an actual reality with the boy, standing in the way of many a lawless act, calming with its solemn sadness many a passionate uprising of spirit, and ever inciting to words and deeds of gentleness and love, especially toward Nannie.

"Oh mamma," he said, after he had told her the story of the dream, "what if it had been true! O, I never want to feel as I did when I thought it was true, —that she was gone and I could never tell her how I loved her, and how sorry I was that I had not been kinder. I mean to show her every day how I love her, and you, too, mamma."

What, indeed, if our dear ones should leave us always to mourn some neglect, some unlovely, unloving word or deed.

CAPT. DEBORAH'S LETTER.

DEAR CHILDREN:—For two whole weeks you have not had a letter from me. I wonder if you have missed your weekly message, and if you will be glad to hear from me again. While you are having your "long vacation," I have been having my short one. I hope you are enjoying yours as much as I have mine.

Since I wrote you last I have received such a nice letter from a division of our Grand Army of the Republic—no, of the World—away off in Coquimbo, Chili. Their superintendent says their Band "was organized about one year ago, and has steadily increased in numbers and and interest. Today we had a nice meeting, and when we proposed to send greetings to THE UNION SIGNAL, all were earnest and anxious to do so. There are native boys and girls who have wine used freely at their homes, but they have signed the pledge and kept it."

You will enjoy the letter, I am sure, and here it is:

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—We, the boys and girls of Coquimbo Band of Hope, send greetings to the temperance boys and girls all over the land where THE UNION SIGNAL may find them. We desire to help on the glorious cause and intend to stand by our colors—though we are so few here in Chili. We are working for sailors, too, as so many come to this port, and already very many have signed the pledge. We thought perhaps you would like to hear of our work if it is only just begun. But we are in earnest, and hope ere long there will be a Band of Hope in every town in Chili. There are enrolled now about 125, but of that number some are sailors who joined and attended our meetings while in port, but have gone on their way, we trust sober and happier men. Our average attendance of children is from forty-five to fifty. We admitted adults in order to reach all who might desire to give their influence on the side of temperance.

Coquimbo, Chili, April 26.

This letter is signed by each of the fifty-three little soldiers present on the day the letter was written. I wish I had room to give the names of all so that you would feel better acquainted with them.

Don't you think, dear little soldiers, that this correspondence of ours is altogether too one-sided? I do, and wish very much you would answer some of my letters and tell me about your battles, victories, and defeats, too, if you have them, and our very best soldiers are sometimes conquered. I am sure we could help each other, and know you could help me.

Ever your loving

CAPTAIN DEBORAH.

MY CALL.

MARIA LYMAN DRAPE.

I have a happy home. No shadow falls
Across the threshold of my peaceful life;
Love's labors light keep me in tuneful song,
And sweet contentment maketh rich my heart:
In this dear nest I thought to pass my days,
Unmindful of the wider world beyond.
Walled round from wrong by true affection's hand,
I marveled much that any woman could
Seek more than this, if God had blessed her so;
I did not need to toil, and it was sweet
To sit and watch my lad and lassie grow,
To feel their loving arms about my neck,
And plan their future with a mother's hope.
But once, when they gathered round my knee
To hear the stories of the twilight hour,
I told them of the world's great misery:
Of little children, who were cold and starved,
And had no tender care, because a wrong,
Like the great Monster of their fairy tales,
Had entered in and spoiled their pretty homes—
Killed all the love, and broke the mother's heart;
Then up my brave lad spoke, with flashing eye:
"Oh; mamma, can't you go and make them stop,
And I will go myself when I am grown!"
That night, when I had kissed their fair, sweet brows,
And said my prayers beside their sleeping forms,
I thought to rest; but all about my couch
Were little children's faces, starved and pale,
And weeping mothers, praying me to come
And cry against this evil in the land.

* * * * * * *

No more my soul can rest in selfish ease;
At morn, and noon, and night, I hear my call,
And when my children nestle in my arms,
A voice says, sweet and clear, "'Tis motherhood
Can feel for motherhood. Go forth and cry,
And these thine own shall catch thy spirit's call,
And do a mighty work when thou art gone."

And I will go. It matters not if you
Who hear my voice shall say it is not best—
I follow on a form you cannot see,
And only thus my soul can find its rest.

AN OLD WANT NEWLY SUPPLIED.

MRS. HATTIE LINN NORTH.

The training school for nurses attached to Cook county hospital has been in existence only a little over two years, but has already given proof of ability to supply a long felt, pressing demand. A commodious home for nurses has been erected during the past year within a block of the hospital. The corps of medical lecturers is composed of both allopathists and homœopathists, who, as we all know, are working together in quite tolerable harmony at the Cook county hospital. The course of lectures embraces the following subjects: Anatomy, physiology, materia medica, therapeutics, obstetrics and surgery. The time of training is two years—a good common school education only being required previous to admission to the training school. An examination is held at the close of each year—the preliminary one conducted by the internes, house physician and surgeon—the final one by a board of examiners, whose names are appended to the diplomas. These physicians are not connected with the training school, so that each examination is conducted on its merits. The high standing in the examinations through which the graduates have passed shows that they go to their work well prepared; and from the patients in the hospital and from the physicians in charge are heard only words of praise for the efficient manner in which all the graver duties of the nurse are discharged, as well as for her helpful and cheerful influence.

During the past year the school has been able to send out some of the undergraduates, whose services were not required in the wards of the hospital, to serve private patients; and they also have given entire satisfaction wherever they have served. The superintendent is in constant receipt of letters which show in what estimation the trained nurses are held by those who have employed them. A physician (Dr. Fenger) writes that Miss Blank has performed her services as a nurse in such a case to his perfect satisfaction, and that he is willing to trust her in the most critical cases of surgery. A grateful parent writes of the nursing his daughter received: "The nurse's efficiency is wonderful, and her adaptability to all circumstances, and readiness to assist in every way, gave us great comfort in this trouble. I cannot praise her too highly, for she lacked no good quality to be desired."

Candidates for admission are received into the school for one month on probation. The most acceptable age is from twenty-one to thirty-five years. They are required to be of good moral character, and in sound health. During the month of probation the pupils are boarded and lodged at the expense of the school. Those who prove satisfactory are accepted as pupil-nurses, and serve for the first year as assistants in the wards of the hospital. During the second year they act as nurses in the hospital, or are sent to private cases. The pay for the first year is eight dollars a month; for the second year, twelve dollars a month. This for personal expenses, it being considered that the education given is a full equivalent for their services.

The regulation dress is of blue and white seersucker, simply made, white apron and cap, and linen collar and cuffs; and as they are scrupulously clean the effect is extremely pretty in the wards of the hospital. In cases of sickness among the nurses themselves, they are cared for gratuitously.

The instruction, which is given in a practical manner at the bedside of the patients, includes the dressing of wounds, etc., the application of fomentations, etc., the management of mechanical appliances for certain diseases, the best method of friction to the body, the management of helpless patients, as making their beds, moving, changing, giving baths in beds, etc.; bandaging, the preparation, cooking and serving of delicacies for the sick; also instruction in the best methods of supplying fresh air, warming and ventilating sick rooms, the care of rooms in keeping everything perfectly clean, making accurate observations and reports to the physicians of the state of the patient, pulse, appetite, temperature, effect of diet, or of medicines, etc.

When the nurse is graduated she is at liberty to choose her own field of labor, whether in hospitals, in private families, or in district nursing among the poor. One of these graduates is serving as district nurse on the west side, and is doing a noble work. The wages realized for private nursing are from fifteen to twenty dollars per week.

Here is opened, it seems to me, just the right field for hundreds of women. Comparing the occupation of nurse with that of physician much may be said in favor of the former as to its convenience for women. Instance the liability of being obliged to go about at night unattended. As to the demand, every family into which sickness has come has felt the need of a trained nurse. Members of the family, however loving and tender, are often ignorant of the first principles of proper nursing, and their very love may prove a hindrance by engendering anxiety, and how reluctantly have we called in friends at such a time, or accepted their kind offers of assistance, knowing what a tax it is upon their time and strength. Professional nurses there have been, to be sure, but how few of them trained, in any proper sense of the word. Incompetent and unobliging, too many of them have well earned the name of Sairey Gamp. What a powerful ally a faithful, efficient nurse would be to any physician! And how many cases are lost, not through any fault of the physician, but from lack of careful nursing.

It is proposed to make this school here in the city a bureau of reference, to which any one could send in time of sickness, and be furnished with an intelligent and well trained woman, abundantly able to take responsible charge of any invalid or sick-room. For there a record would be kept of all graduates, their names, addresses, and various degrees of merit; also the peculiar fitness of some for special branches of professional nursing.

As a final word, I wish to say, that I have been proud of my sex when I have seen those snowy-capped angels of mercy going from cot to cot in the wards of the hospital, and doing their work so neatly, so quietly, so bravely, and so efficiently.

TOPIC: ABSALOM'S REBELLION.

Lesson Text.—II Sam. 15: 1-14.

Golden Text.—Honor thy father and thy mother that thy days may be long on the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.—Ex. 20: 12.

Time.—1023 B. C.

Places.—Jerusalem and Hebron.

1. The causes which lead to and made possible this rebellion of Absalom, are worthy more than passing notice.

Among others we may mention the change in David's character, weakened by sin; the laxity of his rule, evidenced by his no longer leading his army in person, no longer inspiring them by his presence to loyalty to himself, and his failure to administer justice "at the gates"; his favoritism, shown by his leaving the affairs of the government largely in the hands of political favorites, his preference for Solomon, Bathsheba's son, which doubtless roused the jealousy of Absalom, the rightful heir to the throne.

These changes in David's government are not without a parallel in the past and present history of our own government. Impurity in high places, laxity of rule, neglect of justice, open and shameless encouragement of that which is evil and only evil, have necessitated the formation of a party,—quite like that of Absalom in the character of its followers, but very unlike in the spirit of its leaders and the motives actuating them,—and render its ultimate success sure.

2. Absalom's zeal, his assumption of authority, his show of righteous judgment, his politic flattery—all have their counterpart among the politicians of today, are the "tricks of trade" so well known, so adroitly and successfully plied by them. There are many today who "rise up early in the morning that they may follow strong drink," who "sleep not except they have done mischief," evincing an energy worthy of a better cause. The want of a like earnestness, a like promptitude in seizing upon and making the most of opportunities, has caused many a delay, many a failure in our battle for God and Home and Native Land. While we condemn Absalom's motives and falsity we can but admire and commend his earnestness and may well imitate him in this.

3. Absalom's success in winning the hearts of the people by simulating truth and uprightness, the approval and blessing which his spurious devotion won from his father, are notable proofs of the power of truth and purity,—the counterfeit proves the worth of the genuine coin; his brief hold upon "the hearts of the people" proved that he had but the outward form and not the inward reality. That man or party desiring permanent success must not only profess but possess the elements of true greatness. the old-fashioned reverence for God, the old-fashioned fruits of the Spirit.

THE PITTSBURGH CONVENTION.

Lafayette Hall.—The Birthplace of Republicanism. William Daniel—Samuel Dickie—W. C. T. U. Memorial Unanimously Adopted —St. John and Daniel Nominated—Hallelujah Chorus.

[Editorial Correspondence.]

It was a noisy assemblage that gathered in Lafayette Hall, Pittsburgh, on the morning of July 23. Five hundred delegates from thirty states and territories full of the enthusiasm of conviction and the good fellowship of a common consecration, were chatting, "chaffing," joking, preaching, laughing, shouting, each on his own key, as the gavel of Chairman Stewart (Gideon T., of Ohio) fell at precisely eleven o'clock to announce the formal opening of the convention. The hush of order was complete as the last strains of "America" died away and the Rev. Dr. Miner, of Boston, rose to offer prayer. It was a striking feature of this opening prayer, and one not observed before in any of our national nominating conventions, that it called for wisdom to direct the counsels of men and women met to consider the interests of human souls. A refrain of hearty "Amens" came in lustily at its close. The band gave inspiring war reminiscences in the melodies of "Tramp, tramp, tramp," and "Marching through Georgia," and a Pittsburgher of fine presence, C. L. Rose by name, bade handsome welcome to the convention. His somewhat enigmatical closing sentence as he described the candidate that should be nominated, "Let him be one who understands our foreign relations," was received with loud applause.

Chairman Gideon T. Stewart responded for the delegates and followed the response with a very able but very long address as chairman of the national executive committee, during which the roving eye and wearied attention were arrested by the decorations of the hall hitherto unnoticed, and the personnel of the platform. The hall is dingy and old, and not large enough for the comfort of the assembly, but it was brightened to almost metamorphosis by the significant banners and devices. The back ground of the stage was draped with flags of different nations with the words: "American mothers must be protected," prominently displayed. From the proscenium was suspended a banner bearing the portrait of ex-Gov. St. John, of Kansas, the banner of Illinois, worked with the words "St. John our Choice." The center was taken up with a rich silk flag and the banner of the W. C. T. U., to which was attached the word "Welcome," done in flowers. Potted plants were banked in profusion on the edge of the stage and numerous hanging baskets were attached to the galleries at short intervals. The face of the galleries was also decorated with additional flags interspersed with mottoes, such as, "Constitutional Prohibition—By the People, for the People," "We will vote our Convictions," and "Dare to vote Right."

The various unions of Pittsburgh, Alleghany, and vicinity, were represented by ingenious emblems and mottoes —one, that of the Mt. Washington W. C. T. U., was a bracket against the placarded wall on which were two glasses "right side up" and tied with the white ribbon. Evergreen festoons everywhere betokened the busy fingers which had wrought with such loving care for the pleasure of the convention.

On the platform were our own national officers, Miss Willard, Miss Gordon, Mrs. Buell, Mrs. Woodbridge and Miss Pugh, not all in at first, but before the close, all present but Mrs. Stevens, of Maine; Judge Black, of Pennsylvania, and Rev. John Russell, of Michigan, sharing with each other the title "father of political prohibition"; Mother Stewart, of Ohio; Hon. Wm. Daniel of Maryland; Hon. J. T. Tanner and wife, of Alabama; Col. Babcock, of California; Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, of Michigan; Rev. Dr. Miner, of Massachusetts; Horace Waters, of New York, of a face benign, and age "frosty but kindly"; Mrs. Mary T. Burt, of New York; Mrs. Clara Hoffman, of Missouri; Rev. A. J. Jutkins, and R. W. Nelson, of Illinois, and many others good and true.

At the conclusion of Mr. Stewart's address the temporary organization resolved upon by the executive committee, was reported as follows: Chairman, Hon. Wm. Daniel, of Maryland; secretaries, Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, of Ohio, and Charles S. Carter, of the District of Columbia. Mr. Daniel is short of stature, sandy as to hair and complexion, keen of sight and alert in body. On taking the chair he made a magnetic little speech, full of good cheer and confidence in the principles of the Prohibition party. He pleaded that their outworkings might seam over forever the bloody chasm that still yawns between north and south, and is too often widened and deepened by party political strife. As a keynote of endeavor he said, "Aim at the general government. Secure prohibition in the national constitution. More than 2,000 liquor licenses are granted virtually by congress right under the shadow of the national capitol, and we cannot get our national assembly to give the people the right to say No to such infamous work." Right here a sonorous voice in the gallery shouted, "Well, they're in league with the devil."

As Mr. Daniel sat down Dr. Miner rose and said that a lady who never before failed to speak for herself desired him to ask that the congregation sing "Dare to be a Daniel," and afterward that the band give "Maryland, my Maryland." The song was attempted but for lack of due familiarity failed in its responsive mission, and the band for lack of notes could not give the desired melody, whereupon Miss Willard repeated a stanza or two of Maryland's battle cry showing its fine adaptation to the Holy War against the "crime of crimes." The committee on credentials was appointed and the first session adjourned as did so many following, with "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The delegates are early in their places and wait patiently the rising of the committee on credentials, the framework of the convention. It is difficult of adjustment this year, as not all states have had a basis of operations under the call of the National Committee—some have held no state conventions and others are represented by individuals not delegated, but in attendance because of interest. The interval is taken up with little bits of incident privately related—for instance, an Illinois delegate tells how on the car in which he journeyed to Pittsburgh, and which was nearly filled with delegates, a gentleman not bound for the convention passed around a box of choice Havanas, and not one smoker was to be found in the car! Of how many of the coaches that brought delegates to the Chicago conventions could this be said, I wonder, and yet the third party is not, by declaration or intention, fighting against tobacco. It bespeaks however a splendid freedom from all habit slavery that so large a representation could be tested at random on this point. Delegate Hudson, of Ohio, helped bridge the tedium of delay by leading with a choice but improvised choir the singing of several gospel songs, and though the hall was like an oven heated to test both principle and patience, melting strains were sung by melting people with a devotion worthy "the cause of causes."

At last the convention opens. Rev. James Haney, the "big brother" of the W. C. T. U. of Illinois, offered prayer, and the order of business was resumed. Not however till the convention had agreed to receive a delegation from the American Prohibition party, and to listen to its representative, President C. A. Blanchard of Wheaton College.

During his speech which covered and endorsed the principles of the Prohibition Home Protection party, reference to the anti-secrecy principle which distinguished the American from the Prohibition party, brought out angry words and hisses unworthy the body addressed. Whatever may have been the propriety of that part of President Blanchard's speech, characterizing in such a place the allegiance to Masonic and other secret oaths as inconsistent with patriotism, the convention as host owed respectful treatment to its guest after inviting him to speak, and a gentler and more Christian spirit should mark the counsels of an assembly made up almost entirely of the followers of Christ. The committee on credentials still delaying, our National president stepped forward bearing in her hand the memorial of the N. W. C. T. U. and asked for a moment in which to present it to the National Convention of the Prohibition Home Protection party. "It comes to you," she said, "returning from three National Conventions, the Greenback, Republican and Democratic, in all of which it has been ignored or rejected." She then read the petition of the forty-eight states and territories which it embodies, and which may not be too familiar to our readers:

We, members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union believe that, while the poison habits of the nation can be largely restrained by an appeal to the intellect through argument, to the heart through sympathy, and to the conscience through the motives of religion, the trade in those poisons will be best controlled by prohibitory law.

We believe the teachings of science, experience and the Golden Rule combine to testify against the traffic in alcoholic liquors as a drink, and that the homes of America, which are the citadels of patriotism, purity and happiness, have no enemy so relentless as the American saloon.

Therefore, as citizens of the United States, irrespective of sect or section, but having deeply at heart the protection of our homes, we do hereby respectfully and earnestly petition you to advocate and to adopt such measures as are requisite, to the end that prohibition of the importation, exportation, manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages may become an integral part of the National Constitution, and that your party candidate shall by character and public pledge, committed to a National Constitutional Prohibitory amendment.

This was received with great applause, and Miss Willard told how she had gone with it to the Greenback National Convention, how it was referred to the platform committee, and although a majority of the convention favored it, the committee lacked the courage to report it. She next laid it before the Republican Convention at Chicago and was given fifteen minutes to speak in its behalf before the committee on resolutions, although the working men had a whole evening to themselves. "I stopped within three minutes of the limit. That was pretty good for a woman wasn't it?" Lastly through the efforts of Maj. E. A. Burke, of New Orleans, she was enabled to present the memorial to the Democratic National Convention at Chicago, but it was smothered in the committee on resolutions, and the convention declared against all sumptuary laws. She now brought back the memorial to its native heath. Like Noah's dove it had came back to the ark of protection, and the women of the W. C. T. U. stood pledged by resolution adopted at their last National Convention "to stand by that party, by whatsoever name called, which shall furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles and will most surely protect their homes." During Miss Willard's presentation of the memorial, which did not occupy more than three minutes there were frequent outbursts of applause, and one enthusiast in the gallery whose voice had doubtless worn itself out in praise and song, resorted to a stertorous tin horn which rang out most aggressively at each vigorous period of her speech. This ta-ta-ra-ta was stoutly condemned by one of the delegates but as stoutly contended for by another on the ground that it was no "uncertain sound," and therefore rather to be welcomed than banished.

Three cheers were given Miss Willard by the convention and the Hon. J. T. Tanner called for the unanimous adoption of the memorial. This was ruled out of order however, as the convention was not in shape to deal with any question and all such action must await the permanent organization.

Telegrams were announced and among them one for Col. W. W. Dudley, U. S. Commissioner of Pensions, which created great merriment, it being very generally known that he was one of a committee of government officials who had been laboring to no purpose with the officers of the convention in the interest of the Republican party. Mrs. Minnie Mosher Jackson, "Daughter of the Regiment" in the Maryland division of the temperance army, gave a fine recitation, so appeasing the growing impatience at the delay of the credential committee, and as often happens when once we are resigned to wait, waiting ended; the committee appeared on the scene and their report was hailed as a "door of hope" into better order and the conditions of business. The committee reported 570 delegates representing thirty states and one territory (Dakota). Four hundred and sixty-one delegates should have reported under the call of the national committee, but owing to the variety of conditions in the different states, it was decided by the committee to admit all who had come as delegates, and to allow each state the vote of the number of delegates it would be entitled to by the largest representation. A long and heated discussion followed this action of the committee. It was finally adopted, however, with the provision that the permanent organization should pass upon the legality of contested cases. Another "scene of confusion and creature complaint" (the thermometer unaided by the friction of opposing minds, standing at 94° Fahrenheit) accompanied the appointment of a committee on permanent organization which was however accomplished, also the other committees on rules and resolutions. After adopting the W. C. T. U. memorial by unanimous vote, the motion to adjourn prevailed.

EVENING SESSION.

"Keep us as a party free from the wiles of the devil," prayed Rev. Dr. Warner, of New York, at the opening of the evening session. The work started out more smoothly than in the afternoon. The committee on permanent organization reported for permanent chairman Prof. Samuel Dickey, of Albion College, Michigan, and chairman of the Michigan State Committee, and a St. John man; also a long list of vice presidents as follows: Mr. J. T. Tanner, Alabama; Mrs. Judge Tanner, Arkansas; Geo. B. Rogers, Connecticut; J. C. Pepper, Illinois; O. J. Flagg, Colorado; W. J. Entes, Maine; Mrs. Mary J. Lathrap, Michigan; C. S. Temple, Nebraska; Miss Sallie Chess, South Carolina; Rev. H. A. Thompson, Ohio; J. M. Flitch, New Hampshire; Horace Water, New York; M. B. Cox, Minnesota; J. M. Richards, West Virginia; O. H. Kirk, Pennsylvania; A. A. Wheelock, J. D. Kanouse, Dakota; Rev. Henry Coleman, Wisconsin; Mrs. Ada McKinney, Tennessee; Rev. C. A. Bateman, Colorado; A. M. Richards, Kansas; J. Mont.

Hunter, Kentucky; Mrs. Clara Hoffman, Missouri; W. Silverwood, Maryland; Mrs. H. K. Hines, Oregon; Gen. C. B. Fiske, New Jersey; Mrs. Lawrence Lord, Georgia. The following general officers of the W. C. T. U. were added to the list of vice presidents: Miss Frances E. Willard, Mrs. M. A. Woodbridge, Mrs. Carrie Beale, Miss Esther Pugh, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens. The following were elected permanent secretaries: Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, Ohio; Chas. A. Carter, Washington, D. C.; Mrs. Anne Cairnes, Missouri; B. F. Parker, New York; C. A. Hody, Massachusetts. W. H. H. Bartram, of Massachusetts, was made reading secretary.

Professor Dickey who is a "born leader," a man of of decision and affairs, said on taking the chair:

We are here for work and not for words. You and I are here because we are driven here. Everywhere under the folds of the star spangled banner we find this drink curse flourishing. We can not allow it a free and untrammeled existence. We cannot regulate it. We believe it must be suppressed, if we would preserve our self respect. We must take positive, earnest, independent political action. (Applause.) We must build up an intelligent body of voters, a complete party with the complete suppression of the liquor traffic as its fundamental principle.

A rising vote of thanks was adopted for the officers of the temporary organization. The vice presidents were called to the chair and while they were coming forward the band played "Hold the Fort." General Clinton B. Fisk was applauded as he took a seat on the platform as vice president from New Jersey. The Rev. J. A. Brown, of Illinois,—and I am reminded just here that at least one-fifth of the delegates were clergymen—offered the report of the committee on rules, which was adopted, a summary of which is as follows:

Hours of sessions to be from 9 a. m. to 1 p. m. 3 to 6 p. m. Order of business: 1, devotional exercises; 2, reading of minutes; 3, reports of committees; 4, nominations; 5, balloting. No motion shall be considered until it has been stated by the chair, and no resolution until it has been reduced to writing and read by the secretary. No delegate shall speak more than five minutes or more than once on the same question. No speaker nominating a candidate shall speak longer than ten minutes. When nominations are in order they shall be made by calling the roll of the states in alphabetical order, and the same method shall be followed in balloting for candidates. Balloting shall not precede the adoption of the platform. An amendment was adopted that no change of votes shall be made until after the call of the roll of the states.

An effort to extend the time of the nominating speeches to twenty minutes, was unsuccessful. After a recess of ten minutes in which the delegations were electing their respective members of the national committee and of the committee on finance, the following was adopted as the national committee:

California—Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens and Col. Babcock.
Connecticut—Hon. Geo. P. Rogers and A. Moorhouse.
Dakota—Theo. D. Kanouse.
Illinois—Dr. A. J. Jutkins and J. A. Van Fleet.
Kansas—J. H. Bigan and James Perkins.
Maine—Wm. T. Eustis and N. F. Woodbury.
Maryland—John F. Thomas and Rev. E. T. Newman.
Michigan—D. P. Sagendorph and Rev. Jno. Russell.
Minnesota—A. Bixby and W. W. Flannery.
Missouri—M. W. Watson and A. M. Butts.
Nebraska—C. F. L. Templin and John B. Finch.
New Hampshire—Chas. A. Hovey and J. M. Fletcher.
New Jersey—Dr. T. Edgar Hunt and Rev. Sullivan Parsons.
New York—E. J. Bissell and J. W. Bruce.
Ohio—Mrs. Mattie McClellan Brown and Hon. Jay. Odell.
Pennsylvania—Hon. James Black and Wm. T. Dunn.
Tennessee—J. R. Anson and J. W. Smith.
Wisconsin—Hon. Samuel D. Hastings and T. E. Van Kuren.

Just here somebody perpetrated one of the bon mots of the session. "Is there a single woman on that committee?" he shouted, leaving the majority of people in doubt whether he preferred unmarried committee women to Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens and Mrs. McClellan Brown, who were so far the the only women elected, or whether he had overlooked these appointments altogether. At any rate the convention took a hint and shortly after added the names of Frances E. Willard and Mother Stewart.

SECOND DAY.—MORNING SESSION.

The day of days was upon us. The little skirmishing around many minor questions that took place after the prompt opening of the convention with prayer by the Rev. Dr. Lee, of New York, had in it the tremor of expectation and uncertainty. The minutes were dispensed with. A "no-room-for-mirth-or-trifling-here" consciousness held the assembly in check so thoroughly that even Chairman Dickie's gavel fell with a softer tap upon the table. Mr. Mosher, of the Maryland delegation, which is a notable one in dignity, social position, and influence, made a nervous little speech relative to the embassage of the Washington gentlemen, Messrs. Dudley and Price, and offered a resolution, more in the way of jest than earnest, thanking the general government for its interest in the third party bantling. but decidedly condemning said officials for the violation of civil service rules in their eagerness to serve the Republican party.

The roll call of states for nominations was reached through a thicket of resolutions all of which were referred to the committee on resolutions. The event toward which all hearts hastened was fairly upon us. The stentorian but pleasant voice of Secretary Bartram sounded out along the list of sovereign states:

"Alabama!" "Arkansas!" No response.

"California!"—Up rises the goodly, well proportioned figure of Col. George Babcock, the friend of Dr. R. H. McDonald, whose candidacy is safe indeed in such true and loyal hands. Col. Babcock was greeted with enthusiastic applause and called to the platform. He spoke with deep feeling of the rumor which had been circulated in the convention prejudicial to the candidate he was about to name, of the falsity of statements urged as truth that as the proprietor of a patent medicine he had been selling alcoholic bitters, of the brave and efficient temperance work done in the far west by the man whose interests are so dear to the temperance workers of California and who is so hated and feared by the whisky dealers of the Pacific. He described his work among the outcast and lowly—his broadcast sowing of temperance literature, his splendid provision for the shelter of the little waifs of a cosmopolitan city.

"Georgia."—The nomination of McDonald is seconded by Mrs. Florence Lord.

"Illinois"—and George C. Christian the genial and happy, steps to the platform. Everybody leans forward intent, for everybody knows he is to nominate the hero of Kansas. He began:

MR. CHAIRMAN AND LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:—I wish to present a name that needs no defense—a name that is known in every household, and the name of a man who is better fitted than any other to lead the party. We want a man who will always tell the truth on the platform and will draw the people to his feet. If we nominate such a man our cause will be presented to the people more forcibly than by any other means. I love to present the name of a man who is acquainted with war. He has been in the front of battle for many years, and is practically the father of constitutional prohibition. His presence is magnetic. More than that he is the brother-in-law of the noble W. C. T. U. He has no "barrel," or if he has one the bung has been out so long and the contents have so long been flowing into the temperance work that he is a poor man to-day. But as he is I present him to you as our candidate for the presidency of these United States, the staunch patriot, the faithful advocate of good government, the natural leader of men, Hon. John P. St. John, of Kansas.

When Mr. Christian finished the convention went wild. Over one-half the delegates, and that the lordlier half, jumped on their chairs and with waving of fans and loud shouts attested the popularity of the name that had been presented.

Indiana followed with an endorsement of the nomination of St. John.

"Kansas."—The Rev. A. M. Richardson rose and said, "The delegates of Kansas desire the convention to allow Miss Frances E. Willard to nominate the candidate of Kansas."

Permission was easily won, and Miss Willard stepped forward to make the best speech of her life, impossible to report, but full of the magnetism of her own strong conviction. She said:

Long ago, and long ago, and long ago it was, that a little girl on a Wisconsin prairie farm sat up unusually late one night to wait for her mother who had gone into town to hear John P. Hale, then the Free Soil candidate for president. She never dreamed to live to see the day when in the same hall which had been honored by that pioneer nomination of Republicanism, a woman might be called upon to present her choice for the nominee of a new party of moral ideas—but I have lived to see that day. The heroes of the people should be selected from the men of the people. A man who from the ranks had moved onward and upward, always true to the work.

She drew an eloquent and graphic picture of the career of the ex-Governor; as a poor lad in Indiana, the state of his birth, a barefoot boy crossing the muddy Missouri, driving an ox team over the plains, across the Rockies and the Sierras; studying his Blackstone and his Coke by the camp fire while others were revelling. Then in the bloody arbitrament of war he joined the ranks and thought not of a substitute, and fought gallantly for the right until the close; when recognizing the new war, the war against the liquor curse, he joined the fray modestly as has always been his wont but fighting vigorously as he had done in the contest with slavery. Next the governor of a great state, and the idol of his party, he fearlessly and earnestly took up the new cause, never asking if it was popular, only satisfying himself that it was right, he sacrificed political preferment without a regret. He ventured into the whiskydom of Leavenworth, though warned that death awaited him at the hands of the enraged devotees of the liquor traffic. "Very well," was the reply, "if there is anybody to be killed I will do as well as another."

Today he would have been in the U. S. senate had he not joined our cause and fought our battles. I have no word to say against Mr. McDonald. All honor to that noble man. I believe his vinegar bitters are all right. But today we need a pathfinder over the mountains of difficulty, a new Fremont who will find a way or make a way over the rock-ribbed mountains of vice, of bigotry and indifference, to the valley where peaceful and Christian homes are reared as monuments to industry, contentment and devotion. I believe he will prove the sunglass that will focus the most rays in this coming conflict. I have spoken to you today those truths in which I most earnestly believe. We need a man like Gov. St. John whose character and devotion to the temperance cause is too exalted to allow the most imperceptible breath of slander and falsehood to assault or smirch that fair name, which is the "future's now and fame's." I take more pleasure and honest pride than I can give expression to, in presenting the name of Gov. St. John, of Kansas, as the unanimous choice of the state I have the honor to represent upon this memorable occasion.

It was easy to perceive how thoroughly the people appreciated her and her work. The hall was so still and quiet that no sound but her voice was distinguishable. Men stood gazing at her as if fascinated. Old men sat crying like children. Her deep earnestness struck a sympathetic chord in every heart. No artifice of word or manner marred her perfect delivery, and when she sat down, apparently every one in the hall arose at one time, and hundreds of throats made the air quiver with such loud and prolonged applause that it seemed as if it would never cease. She was surrounded by dozens of delegates, who poured their congratulations upon her. The leader of the W. C. T. U. moves hearts and lives wherever her voice is heard.

"Kentucky"—was called, and the young leader, J. Monte Hunter, in a short but business like speech seconded the nomination of McDonald.

"Maine."—N. F. Eustis, a fine looking gentleman took the platform. He said:

I have been asked whether Maine will nominate a prohibition electoral ticket. I want to say that we will. We are not to blame for the defection from our ranks of our leader of four years ago, Neal Dow. He is a grand old man, but with the weight of four score years upon his shoulders he has returned to his old idols. But the temperance and prohibition fire has not been quenched. It still burns brightly, and Maine wants to redeem itself before the country. I have not a word to say against any of the candidates that may be presented to this convention. They are all good men. But up in Maine we have been looking over the field, and our eyes have been attracted by the record of a sturdy soldier in the prohibition cause. He has always stood firm for protection to home and country. We must not forget the veterans, and on behalf of Maine I want to present the name of one of the grandest of them—Hon. Gideon P. Stewart, of Ohio. Nominate him, and he will lead us nearer to victory than any other man can.

"Maryland."—A second for McDonald was given by a son of the late Senator Nye.

"Massachusetts"—and the tall, commanding form of Dr. Miner was seen at the front. His words were few but picked:

The man who should preside over this great continent must be a man who knows the will of God, man and the devil from each other. He should be a man of known courage, pluck, brains and executive ability. A state who honors Dow, Black, Stewart, and others whose names have been mentioned in this connection, I do not need to say that the man who, while new to our party, is not new to our principles is Governor St. John, of Kansas. No other name promises so much for the success of our painciples.

Loud and ringing applause.

And now to the call of "Michigan," there comes a stripling "David," one who has sent many clattering shots into the giant's camp, Michael Fanning, a Catholic temperance boy and man. He pleaded for a clean, pure, Christian man, "no doubting Thomas, no denying Peter, but a Moses who having received high honors from the Egyptians nevertheless turns his back upon all to suffer affliction with the people of God. Give us John P. St. John." Wilder demonstrations than ever at the mention of this electric name.

"Minnesota."—The Rev. Mr. Satterlee, a man of quiet but well determined force, said:

The North Star state is here with a very quiet delegation. We have been most interested listeners. In a fight of forty-six years we do not come to you with sightless eyes. We have seen too many sad, dark days for that. We come unprejudiced, most gladly ready to hear the good things spoken of the candidates named. We can truly say what has God wrought that he has raised us up so many noble men as candidates for this high position? I, therefore, have the honor of presenting the name of Gov. John P. St. John as the choice of the North Star state. The Republican press of Minneapolis called upon him to do what Balaam refused to do—to curse what God had blessed.

There was double applause at the conclusion of Rev. Mr. Satterlee's address, for the reason that when he left the stage the announcement was made that Mrs. Clara Hoffman, the president of the Missouri W. C. T. U., would, on behalf of Missouri, second the nomination of St. John. Missouri had been counted in the McDonald column, and it was therefore sufficient provocation for long applause when its real position became known.

Mrs. Hoffman's speech electrified the audience and surprised even those who knew her best, for its impassioned eloquence and power. The papers speak of her as "almost the equal of Frances E. Willard." She began by saying: "I come from a state, of which you say, 'Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?' In the name of my state and of the W. C. T. U. I have the honor to represent. I stand here to second the nomination of Gov. St[illegible]. He returns the trust of a great state pure[illegible] took it. He has not crouched be[illegible] cowed before monopolies. Hi[illegible] to the poor as well as the rich. [illegible]ocated that our children shall be educa[illegible]e blood money of the liquor traffic. He is not [illegible]umed knight, nor a Henry of Navarre, but rather call him the Lion Heart of the new crusade which seeks not the ruined temple of a risen Lord but to enshrine in fit temples the immorta soul. He served his country in the slavery contest, and has stood up manfully in this war against the liquor traffic. He met in Chicago on one occasion with that political party, who ignored his appeals for the temperance cause, and then finding his arguments without avail, he quietly ignored that party. As he has been true to the cause of prohibition in Kansas, so will he prove true to the party of Prohibition in the United States. Missouri seconds the nomination of John P. St. John."

"New Jersey."—A short little man, with a stout heart as was shown on several occasions—Mr. Ransom said that New Jersey stood by Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, of that state for its first choice, but seconded the popular nomination most happily.

Prof. Hopkins, the editor of the American Reformer, was the chosen mouthpiece of the fine delegation of seventy-five from New York—and when the Empire State was called, took the platform, and eloquently seconded St. John's nomination.

"Nebraska."—There is but one delegate from this great western state, and he has much to do to represent it. Up rises into view of all the familiar figure of John B. Finch. "The people often ask us why Nebraska always follows two great characters, St. John and Willard. I reply: 'We know our leaders.'" The speaker then related his first knowledge of Gov. St. John at Bismarck Grove, Kansas, and added the words of St. John himself, 'If I can save one drunkard, bind up one

PENNSYLVANIA.

Mercer County.—The annual meeting of our county W. C. T. U. will be held in Greenville, September 3, 4 and 5. An interesting program is being prepared.

Mrs. M'Laughlin's engagements among us are as follows: Salem, August 29; Sharon and Middlesex, August 30 and 31; Mercer, September 1; Grove City Y. W. C. T. U., September 2; Fredonia, September 3; Greenville, September 4.

Our convention will close on Friday, September 5. Mass meetings to be held Wednesday and Thursday evenings, addressed by Narcissa White and Mrs. M'Laughlin. A young ladies' session, and 'model union' reports of superintendents of departments, with question box, are among the features of the convention. Mrs. Rev. Eckles, of Lawrence county, has promised to be present and conduct a Bible reading. We also hope to have our state superintendent of literature, Mrs. Douglass Meadville, with us.

Judge M'Calmont, of Venango county, has been nominated for judge on the prohibition ticket of this county.

Our women love The Union Signal, and we hope to send a long list of new subscribers in September. We shall not forget to have its claims presented at our convention by the very best talent we can afford, and a thorough canvass made by the most winning ladies we can find among our delegates. Cor. Sec.

Little Britain.—I want to tell you about the anniversary of the W. C. T. U. of Little Britain, held Sabbath evening, July 6, in the Presbyterian church. This union was organized by Mrs. E. D. C. Mair, of Allegheny, two years ago. A few months after its organization, its president, Mrs. E. C. Turner, was confined to her room by illness. For five months that union held its meetings gathered round that bed of suffering; and dear "Baby Ellen" was only six weeks old when she attended her first temperance meeting, her young mother presiding. Such devotion must make our dear Miss Willard feel that hers is a precious constituency.

This anniversary was the first public meeting of this W. C. T. U. Mrs. Turner presided well, and Mrs. Collins, the secretary, clearly and distinctly read a report that was full of interest. The special lines of work followed by the Little Britain union have been the distribution of temperance literature and opening up the subject of unfermented wine for communion in the churches of Lancaster county. Temperance instruction has been introduced by them in several neighboring public schools. They are planning for efficient work to secure scientific temperance instruction in the schools of Pennsylvania. They have now forty members. Mrs. Mair, who is Mrs. Turner's mother, spoke of the great needs which had called women out into temperance work, and clearly held up the inconsistency of the government which legalizes whisky and then severely punishes crime committed under its influence. Another lady followed, pressing the claims of the union upon the ladies present, and said a few earnest words to the gentlemen. This was followed by an address by the Rev. S. Turner, which showed him to be a trumpet of no uncertain sound on the temperance question. The Lord has given the Presbyterian church a few such — we are asking Him to give us many more, and I feel sure He will.

My special errand in going to Little Britain was to be present at a social gathering of the Y. W. C. T. U., held at the parsonage the evening before. Mrs. Turner had invited the young folks, far and near, but it was harvest time, and I was surprised to see the parlors filled as they were. Miss Rachel Scott, its young president, acquitted herself well, as one whose heart is fully committed to a well loved cause. After the reading of scriptures, prayer and singing, I was glad to have an informal talk with these dear girls (my girls), and tell them of their sister unions throughout the state, and what they are doing in various ways. It is so good to meet with those with whom we have corresponded, and behold the work for which we have prayed.

Mrs. Mair, in her own sweet motherly way, in a few remarks seemed to take us all into her big heart. During the social hour which followed, refreshments were served and there was much introducing and friendly chat. Six new members were added to the union. It was a moonlight night, and it was a pretty sight to see the young faces and pretty white dresses and hear the pleasant good byes as the girls drove away, seated by their young and manly escorts. The whole picture was such as one must go into our rich farming counties to see. These Y. W. C. T. Unions are the little seeds (perhaps "less than all the seeds") sown in the ground; but who shall measure the harvest they shall yield in temperate lives in future homes when early temperance education shall prevent the mistakes which have caused and are causing so much sorrow in the homes of today. Mrs. Wm. Patten,

NEW JERSEY.

GLEANINGS BY R. P. PENFIELD.

Middletown.—The New Jersey State Temperance Teachers' Association held its semi-annual convention in this place June 5, Mrs. M. G. Baldwin, president, in the chair. Delegates from various parts of the State were present. A short address from the presiding officer to temperance teachers, and a very carefully prepared paper was read by Mrs. Vanderbeek, vice president, of Plainfield, on the temperance teacher's opportunities. Dr. E. W. Hunt, of Trenton, addressed the convention in the afternoon, on the importance of teaching the exact nature of alcohol and its effects, and of the opportunity it gives of imparting truths which are too much neglected in the public schools of today. After due consideration, the association adopted for their badge the red, white and blue, our national colors, as the most appropriate, they representing the triple pledge. The annual meeting will be held Dec. 4, at Plainfield. A mass meeting was held in the evening, and addressed by Mr. Mingens, of New York, on "The Church and the Saloon — which shall triumph?"

The Middletown Band of Hope is in a flourishing condition. It is supplied with one hundred copies of the Temperance Banner, and David C. Cook's paper weekly.

Westfield.—The new W. C. T. U. is actively engaged to deliver the town from the evils of intemperance. Committees have visited the owner of the hotel and urged him to do all he can to make it a temperance house. They were received kindly and assured of his sympathy with them in their work. A committee also visited the druggist to secure his aid in the good work. There will be a public temperance meeting held the last Sabbath evening of each month, beginning with June, in the different churches, the pastor taking charge of the services. This youthful union, not yet three months old, organized by Mrs. Ellis, bids fair to become a power in this community. The Union Signal will receive attention at once, and we hope a club will be secured very soon. The reform men are holding on in the good way.

Mattewan.—The 27th of May, set apart for prayer, was observed in this place by a general meeting in the M. E. church on the evening of that day. Rev. N. G. Williams, pastor, an outspoken temperance man. The Presbyterians and Baptists joined the movement, and gave the prestige of their approval. The vice president, the Rev. Mr. Ballard, delivered an address on 'the privilege of the church to remove the incubus upon the industry and morality of the people by leading public sentiment in the abolishment of the liquor traffic."

Trenton.—The reform club held their last Opera house meeting on Sunday, the Rev. John Handly being the speaker. He was the first speaker in the opening services in March last, and most fittingly was his speech at the close. He grows better and better. The W. C. T. U. are praying and the Lord hears them. Their new building for reading room, library and meeting rooms, will be commenced next week, and is to be finished by November 1, and the women of the union hardly know whether to pray or praise most—their hearts are full of gladness.

Mount Holly.—Meeting called for Thursday was not largely attended, but such was the interest manifest that they re-organized, electing Mrs. Dr. Smith president, who has much experience in temperance work; Mrs. Mark R. Sovy, recording secretary; Mrs. E. T. Idell, secretary, and Mrs. Judd, treasurer. A good audience in the Baptist church in the evening; Mrs. Downs and the Rev. A. Lawrence were the speakers.

Freehold.—Meetings on Flower and Prison day, June 9th, with prayer services in the jail at 10:30 a. m., and ladies' meeting at 3:30 p. m., and a mass meeting in the evening at the Reformed church. Fifteen states are now organized for this department of labor of the W. C. T. U., which owes its origin and successful workings to the active brain of the dear invalid of twenty years.

Paterson.—Good news comes from Paterson. May 30, their usual day for the children, was observed with great success. Five new Bands of Hope have been organized since January 1—thus increasing the number of children to a large company, filling one of the largest churches; seven ministers present. That was truly encouraging to this handful of feeble women, who keep their flag flying and their work before the people.

Elizabeth.—Has also been stirred up by the labors of Mabee and English, and greater activity in the temperance cause is manifested.

MARYLAND.

May 31st—a day just "as rare as any in June"—was such a notable day in the temperance cause at Glenelg, I thought The Union Signal readers would like to know about it, and perhaps some of them "go and do likewise." The Harvard W. C. T. U. invited the public generally to come (with well filled baskets) to the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. George M. Tatum, and spend the day picnic fashion, only the intellectual entertainment was held in the large parlors of the host and hostess. Seats for four hundred were placed in the rooms with a platform for the speakers. On one side the platform over the mantle was our motto in green, "For God and home and native land"; on the other side Harvard W. C. T. U. Of course there were roses and other flowers everywhere. By eleven o'clock the spacious grounds were filled with carriages coming from all directions.

The people were called together by the ringing of the large farm bell outside. A choir of ladies and gentlemen sang several songs as the people gathered. Then the president of the union (Mrs. Tatum) read the scriptures, then a soul stirring prayer by Miss Jennie Smith; song again; then an earnest address by the state president, Mrs. Dr. Thomas, of Baltimore. After that an eloquent and forcible lecture by Miss Henrietta G. Moore. With some more music the audience of over three hundred were dismissed with the injunction to "please take their seats again immediately on the ringing of the bell." Then, dear friends, I wish you could have seen the picture on the lawn; such quantities of good things the people brought. A table-cloth spread on the ground served as tables (except in a few instances when small tables were brought,) and the ladies were allowed to take seats in the carriages while the gentlemen gallantly passed the eatables. It was something quite new to your correspondent, this manner of pic-nicing; but all the more enjoyed. And such hospitable people as these southern people are! I don't know how many invitations I had to dine that day—being a foreigner among them. After the feasting, and roaming about over the grounds, going to the top of the high tower to view the beautiful hills in the distance, the great bell rang out its invitation to once more gather in the parlors to listen to Miss Jennie Smith give one of her effective appeals for the "dear cause;" then with music and the passing of the pledge, the day closed with as great work done for temperance as is often brought into one day.

And now, dear friends, I write all this hoping it may help some one else make temperance sentiment in other country places. I am sure that there could not be a better way to get the people together. They will go to a private house and grounds when a church or hall would be no inducement, and when once there, with such earnest talkers as Miss Moore, Miss Jennie Smith, and Mrs. Thomas, they are won over to the cause for which we work and pray. F. C. J.

NEW YORK.

Ulster County.—The fifth annual meeting of the Ulster County W. C. T. U. was held in the Wirts Street Baptist church, Rondout, June 25 and 26. There were between thirty and forty delegates present, representing some nine unions. The first session opened on Wednesday afternoon with a devotional meeting, conducted by Rev. Mrs. DeWitt, of Wellkill. The workers consecrated themselves anew to the service of the Master, and His presence was manifest. In the evening, notwithstanding the terrible storm, a fair audience gathered to listen to the addresses delivered by Mrs. Mary E. Burt, our state president, and Miss M. E. Winslow, editor of Our Work. They were both intensely interesting. The choir rendered finely our national anthem, "For God and Home and Native Land." Thursday morning opened with a praise meeting, led by Mrs. Burt. We have very much to praise God for in the work accomplished during the past year in our state. The morning was given up largely to reports from local unions, showing all in good working order. Nearly all have temperance schools or Bands of Hope, and are interested in taking measures to enforce our compulsory temperance educational law. We have superintendents for most of the departments of work, all actively interested in their particular branch, as though it was the only one. Miss Julia Colman was with us with her literature, cards, etc., which are so helpful to us in our work: She conducted a model reading on beer. Topic: "Is there food in beer?"

Our newly elected officers: President, Mrs. F. C. Scoville, of Saugerties; vice president, Mrs. W. H. Vroom, of High Falls; corresponding secretary, Miss Lucy Stebbins, of Rondout; recording secretary, Mrs. G. R. Adams, of Rondout; treasurer, Mrs. R. E. McKinstry, of Gardiner. Mrs. H. G. Nichols, who has been president since our organization, retires on account of ill health and a press of other duties. She still remains county organizer, and we expect to report many more unions another year. The outlook is encouraging. "The Lord of Hosts is with us." Mrs. G. R. Adams, Rec. Sec.

SOUTHERN GLEANINGS.

MRS. GEORGIE H. MC LEOD.

The sound of the sewing machines has been heard all day long in many a home for months, and dainty garments fashioned thereon have robed fair girl graduates, and formed outfits for the summer exodus. We who stay at home, listen to the chatter of those we meet, until Saratoga, Cape May, Ocean Grove and White Mountains form confused images, which we now gladly discard for thoughts of a pleasant sojourn sought by some of our W. C. T. U. girls within hearing of the sea, and from inland the hum of bees, and on the summer air the breath of apple blossoms and June roses. Ten years ago we did not ask as now, Where shall we find the best W. C. T. U. gatherings in the heated term?

Our beloved leaders, Frances E. Willard and Sallie F. Chapin, sought the mountain resorts and seaside rests with no thoughts of the white ribbon hosts they were to marshall for "for God, and home, and native land." Now these ceaseless workers take the brief rest they allow themselves only where the temperance forces gather, and still work, plead, toil and pray for the home against the saloon. God speed their efforts, for the need is sore.

Maryland.—Workers have recorded a blessed success in the efforts of Mrs. Welsh in the Free Kindergarten Eight months ago, I (who love children) turned away with feelings of pain from the little waifs gathered in No. 16 West Baltimore street—soiled, neglected, almost idiotic in expression—I thought surely the attempt to civilize these children will be a waste of time. I recognized my mistake when, a few weeks ago, I attended their exhibition. These happy, rosy children could scarcely be recognized for those who once excited my pity. The sweet voices, trained by Y. W. C. T. U. girls, the pretty work of the little fingers, so proudly shown, and the ready, intelligent answers, were a marvel to many present. We find, too, that in helping these children many homes are reached and made better and purer by the influence they are exerting.

"What can we do?" ask the girls. We answer: Win flowers of living beauty, flowers that shall bloom by and by in the Garden of Life, by helping the work in the Kindergartens.

North Carolina.—Mrs. Chapin, at Asheville and Statesville, will find the best element in the state, and these sojourners in the cool regions of the old state, who, perchance, never attended a W. C. T. U. meeting at home will be obliged now to hear all about the movement, and strong Mrs. Chapin, eloquent as of yore, be led to enlist under our beloved banner.

Tennessee.—Unions are winning new inspiration at the convention of their state, and are steadily watching and working in every department. Some of God's dear children attended the Sunday-school convention at Louisville, and are eagerly making ready to put into practice the hints gathered there. A noble worker of Crescent City, Ill., is aiding and encouraging.

Louisiana.—The tireless state secretary sows and gathers, day after day, the fruit of the labor of her hands. Louisiana will bring up to our National convention hands full of golden sheaves, and so I doubt not will many from our southern states.

I have not so many items sent me these summer days, but I know it is not because the dear workers are idle, only because they are "on the wing."

OREGON.

REPORT OF STATE CONVENTION.

Convention met on June 4, 1884, at nine o'clock, a. m. Devotional exercises conducted by Mrs. Stubbs. Convention called to order at 10 o'clock, president, Mrs. Hines, presiding.

Fifty delegates were reported in attendance. The addresses of welcome by Mrs. George Turrell and Prof. Wycoff, of Albany, and responses by Mrs. Laura Turner, of East Portland, and Mrs. Leavitt, were listened to with marked attention.

In her annual address the president congratulated the unions upon the work done; encouraged and advised them and prayed that all would return to their several unions with renewed zeal and earnestness for the work of the coming year. Reports of vice presidents followed this address. Mrs. Riggs, of the first district, reported unions organized, with much success and encouragement. Second district no report: third district, Mrs. Edwards reported ten unions organized, present membership 200. No report from the fourth, fifth and sixth districts.

Reports of superintendents of departments show that work has been done in all the departments, and the way opened for greater progress in the year to come.

The corresponding secretary reported thirty-three unions in the state, all in good working order. Treasurer's report, balance in the treasury, $138 94.

The election of officers resulted in the re-election of the old officers, without an exception, thereby showing a just appreciation of their fitness for the positions. The officers are: Mrs. H. K. Hines, president; Mrs. Belle Cooke, corresponding secretary; Mrs. M. H. Cartwright, recording secretary; Mrs. L. E. Blain, treasurer. The marchings, songs, and recitations by Band of Hope, on the last evening, were very good, and reflected much credit upon those having charge of this department.

The convention was entirely harmonious, entertaining to our citizens, of great profit to the delegates, and through them will be of great benefit to the various unions represented.

Mrs. Leavitt's addresses and pointed remarks during the business sessions, her interesting replies to the queries of the question box, and especially her addresses have contributed in the highest degree to the success of the convention.

The delegation was not so large as was expected, several unions being unrepresented. A much larger delegation will be secured by holding the annual convention at another time of the year.

The outlook for the state organization with its thirty-three auxiliaries, is bright, and promises great progress for the coming year.

From the resolutions offered the following may prove suggestive:

Resolved, That evangelistic work among our soldiers and seamen demands some new plan of operation.

Resolved, That a delegation of ladies be selected who are in the spirit of the work, to co-operate with the W. C. T. U. of Astoria, during the fishing season; and further, that the same ladies, after correspondence with the officers in command of the military posts of the state, institute similar meetings for soldiers in connection with our nearest local unions.

Resolved, That this convention recommend that the members of the W. C. T. U. devote time and study to the important matter of hygiene, as touched upon in THE UNION SIGNAL in regard to the selection and preparation of food for the table, that we tempt not nor create an appetite for strong drink.

Resolved, That the W. C. T. U. of Oregon is utterly opposed to license, either high or low, of the liquor traffic, or any other evil.

Resolved, That, in the opinion of this convention, alcohol is not necessary as a medicine, and therefore that it is necessary for our druggists to keep it for that purpose is not valid.

Resolved, That inasmuch as blackmailing is practiced by the Sunday Mercury, and we believe the reading of the same has a demoralizing effect upon our people—therefore be it

Resolved, That the members of this union use every means in their power to suppress its sale on the railroads and lines of travel.

W. C. T. U.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

CHENEY.—Our union has been sadly afflicted in the death from consumption of Mrs. Mary A. Eastman, one of our vice presidents. She died in great peace last Sunday at noon. In the early part of winter, she was able to help us in our temperance work, even to help in our public meetings. Meek, modest, yet earnest and faithful, was our dear, sweet sister, who has gone. A delicate lady, yet "she hath done what she could."

When I learned that she was dying, I went to her house just as the first bell rang for church. She knew me, and wished that all her friends would come. "I shall be home before long, and I hope you will all follow." In reply to my question, "It's all right is it not?" "O, yes!" I said: "It's all bright ahead?" "O, it is," emphatically, yet so calm and tranquil. When a complaint was made of cold and chilliness, as her feet came nearer to the river of death, I said, "Jesus will take you safely over, won't He?" "O, yes, I know He will." She had before, when talking was less difficult, talked much of the future to the relatives and attendants, had given her hand and farewell to the family, bidding them meet her in heaven. Her breathing became shorter and shorter and she was gone, safe in the arms of Jesus, the most peaceful and easy death I ever saw.

The day our sister was buried, Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, our superintendent, came; and we wish that she might remain as superintendent of Pacific coast work a long time. She delivered three lectures here, with which the people were very much pleased. Many adjectives have been used in admiration of our dear Mrs. Leavitt and her work. I will not make you repeat them; they were some of the best ones and we do not wonder the California papers express the belief that "her work is permanent."

These lectures make an even twenty that have been given under our auspices since organization. We have lost our recording secretary by removal, and the corresponding secretary has gone east for a vacation. And you may think that on the evening that I presided at Mrs. Leavitt's first lecture, in the same church and in the same pulpit where was the funeral of Mrs. Eastman and the sermon preached, where were some of the floral decorations still on the pulpit and organ, I felt a very lonely and a depressed president. But, apropos of some former remarks of yours, exhortatory to local presidents: I always preside at our meetings unless compelled to remain at home because of illness, and then a vice-president presides. I honor the ministers of the gospel as much as any one I know; but when will the women ever do the work that God is plainly calling them to do if they don't begin and do it! More on this subject another time. We are very hopeful as to results of Mrs. Leavitt's labors here. LUCY A. SWITZER, Pres't.

IOWA.

SECOND DISTRICT CONVENTION.

The annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of the second district at Maquoketa, July 2d and 3rd, was an u... large gathering even for this band of noble ... sacrificing workers, and its sessions were atte... house full of interested spectators. The wome... union have worked effectively for temperance reform, for to them more than to any other force is due the enactment of the stringent laws that are driving the saloon from our soil. Consequently through all the able addresses and papers there rang a note of triumph, though the fact was not lost sight of that they have yet much to do.

The first session Tuesday afternoon was mainly devoted to organizing the convention. Tuesday evening, after prayer and singing by an excellent choir led by Miss Cherry, Mrs. S. F. Millikan delivered the address of welcome.

In her response Mrs. J. B. Edgar, of Davenport, said:

To my mind this is a battle of the mothers for their children. Shall we keep them for the home, or shall the saloon take them from us? Among the fading glories of the Centennial exposition one picture is ever present to my memory: Rizpah keeping watch over the dead bodies of her seven sons, "that neither the birds of the air by day, nor the beasts of the field by night, should touch them." My mind had not then been turned to this temperance work. I had not yet had the "arrest of thought." So then it was to me a type of all hurtful things, "the evil that is in the world." Now it is the evil of intemperance.

The fierce determination to protect the agony of love depicted in that face, I see again in every effort the women of Iowa are making to see that laws are made and executed that will prevent the evil of intemperance from touching their sons. If Rizpah kept this vigil over her dead sons, how much more watchful should we be over our living sons.

Mrs. Aldrich made a powerful plea for the enforcement of the prohibitory law.

On Wednesday three sessions were held. In the morning reports were received from the counties, showing a general increase in membership and zeal, and a couple of thoughtful papers were read. In the afternoon a lecture on the pathological effects of alcohol, illustrated by charts, was given for the children.

Officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: President, Miss Eunice E. Frink of Clarence; secretary, Mrs. F. E. Webb, of Dewitt; treasurer, Mrs. Julia B. Dunham of Maquoketa.

The largest audience ever assembled under a roof in Jackson county gathered in the Maquoketa rink on Wednesday evening to hear a lecture from Miss Frances E. Willard.

The address was characterized by the lofty thought, poetic sentiment, chaste language and apt illustration that have given her the first place among the lady orators of the land. N. S. B.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Miss Mary A. Wadsworth, of Boston, recently spent two weeks in the southwestern part of the state lecturing under the auspices of the N. H. W. C. T. U. She is a talented and pleasing speaker, with a fine command of language, and makes a most favorable impression upon her audience. Her subject (temperance work in the south) brought out new and interesting features which were presented in an entertaining manner and enlivened by cheering incidents of the progress of the work in that section.

Miss W. was accompanied by Miss Wendell, the state corresponding secretary, who presided at the meetings and assisted in the organizing. Through their efforts existing unions were strengthened and new ones formed at Winchester, Hinsdale, Walpole and Wilton.

Miss Wadsworth, also, addressed the Cheshire conference of Congregational churches, held at Swanzey, with great acceptance. The conference adopted by a unanimous vote the following:

Resolved, That we gladly recognize the New Hampshire W. C. T. U. as an organization doing a necessary and useful work in our state, and pledge to it our most earnest and hearty support.

Miss Wadsworth has since spoken to good audiences at Deny, Laconia and Concord.

MARYLAND.

The Free Kindergarten, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. of Baltimore, opened November 7, 1883, with children taken from the very depths of wretchedness, most of them from the homes of drunkenness. Their ragged garments were scarcely sufficient to cover their bodies, and the expression of their faces showed they were only familiar with degradation and vice. Even the very little ones of three and four years, we found were accustomed to the use of beer and tobacco. One poor little fellow, of scarcely four years, whose hard, pinched features told a tale that touched our hearts, after being with us a few days, said, in a sorrowful tone: "I don't want to be Satan's child—I want to be good." Another little fellow of four years, who is familiar with the use of tobacco, and who told us he would not smoke any more, was offered a cigarette by one of his old companions, but refused, saying, "No, I am Mrs. Webb's child now." ANNUAL REPORT.

ILLINOIS.

REPORT OF NINTH DISTRCT CONVENTIONS.

Soon after the election of our president, Miss Shedd, in February last, a plan was made by her to hold a series of conventions, one in each of the six counties of this (the ninth) district. In accordance with this, from June 23 to 28, inclusive, conventions were held in the counties ... Iroquois, and Kankakee, at the cities of Paxtons ... giving two days to Rounds, and ...

Mrs. F. C. Hathaway was also with ...

The report of our district president gives a total of twenty-six local unions, two Y. W. C. T. Unions, and twenty-six Bands of Hope. Though the number of unions and Bands of Hope is the same, yet there are unions that do not support Bands of Hope, and Bands of Hope where there are no unions.

This report, with reports from the superintendents of departments, shows a very encouraging advancement in the work in our district. In resolutions adopted it was recommended that the plan of work adopted at our last annual state meeting at Alton be carried out as fully as practicable in our local unions, and special effort was urged in the several lines of evangelistic work, work among foreigners, work in rural districts, and legislative work.

Quite an original resolution, and one appreciated by those weary with the labors of the week, was that offered by Mrs. Cutler, of Kankakee, in which she thanked the workers and delegates for their presence and assistance in the work of the convention. We feel sure we but echo the sentiments of each delegate when we extend our heartfelt thanks to all those who in any manner contributed to make our sojourn among them so pleasant.

Sisters of the ninth district, while, as we have said, the reports of what has been done are very encouraging, let us not be satisfied with the success attained, but strive for still further advancement in every department of work.

Our report that goes to the next annual state meeting to be held at Peoria, October 7 to 10, inclusive, ought to compare favorably with that of any district in our state. Will it? The answer lies with the local unions of the district. What shall it be? ALICE BRIGGS, Sec'y.

IN MEMORIAM.

Our W. C. T. U. suffers an irreparable loss in the death of Mrs. B. G. Roots, of Tamaroa. She and her husband, always inseparable, were among our stauchest friends. They were foremost in every good work; leaders of the educational forces, both in Sunday school and public school, and everywhere and always towers of strength in the temperance cause. In bringing our cause before the State Teachers' association, I was always sure of their support, and this far outweighed the sneers and ridicule heaped upon us by other would-be leaders in that body. At the late International Sunday School convention at Louisville, they were present, aiding by their influence in securing the great victory for our cause there, and rejoiced over it. They were also present at the National Teachers' association in Madison, Wis. The last interview with Mrs. Roots was there concerning our work. After preparing the resolution endorsing the efforts of the W. C. T. U. to secure temperance in public schools, which was presented to that convention, I submitted it to her for criticism. After discussing it thoroughly we went together into the assembly chamber, and sent the resolution up to the desk. I well remember how anxiously she watched the passage of that little bit of paper from hand to hand through that vast audience, and the satisfaction with which she announced its safe arrival at the president's desk. There we parted, she to go to Milwaukee, to meet sudden death — nay, rather, to gain an abundant entrance into life eternal.

Her home life was ideally perfect. I was never in a home which seemed to me so fitting a type of heaven as the one now left desolate by her translation. In church work, in Sunday school, in the Band of Hope, — everywhere,—she rounded out a perfect sphere of usefulness. To all these bereaved circles our tender sympathies go out; deeper and tenderer is our sympathy for the home circle, especially for the husband, from whom is taken the life of his life. God comfort and strengthen them all, and raise up those who shall be fitted and worthy to take up the varied work which has so suddenly dropped from her dead fingers. MARY ALLEN WEST.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

—The annual meeting of the W. C. T. U. of North Springfield was held at the Third Presbyterian church on the 23d inst.

—The workers will be entertained by the ladies of Franklin. All representatives and visitors will find good accommodations on the grounds at reasonable rates.

—Unions have been organized at Fairview, Cuba, Table Grove and Ipavia by Mrs. C. H. Smith, at Freeburg by Mrs. L. S. Rounds, and at Momence by Miss Shedd.

—Mrs. L. S. Rounds attended the Freeburg convention July 10 and organized a fine union there, also lectured at Greenfield and Belleville. She expects to organize in August at St. Charles, and attend various camp meetings throughout the state.

WISCONSIN.

Young ladies' unions, of the state of Wisconsin, are requested to send reports of the year's work to Mrs. S. E. Wanless, State Supt. Young Woman's Work., Rosendale, Wis. It is necessary that these reports should be sent in that the state superintendent may make her report to the state union which meets September 23. Please state in these reports whether you are auxiliary to state union or not. MRS. S. E. WANLESS.

RHODE ISLAND.

Thus far, the warm weather has not caused the work to lag in our state. Several unions have recently held their annual meetings, the reports showing good and efficient work. Flower mission day was quite generally observed, and some very touching incidents occurred, showing the good results of the efforts made.

Five new unions have been recently organized, and the state organizer, Mrs. H. D. Walker, has encouragement from other localities. As the cities and large villages in Rhode Island have unions already at work, these younger ones are all in small villages, or country places. These localities are the feeders of our cities and towns, and it is very important, if we are going to conquer the state for temperance, to hold these strategic positions.

Some of our unions are arranging for open air meetings for the summer. Last Sabbath one was held by the Central Falls Union. Scene: an open common in the midst of the town, shaded by a few trees, with an improvised platform; audience, about two hundred persons, of all ages, of different nationalities, and from all classes in society; dramatis personæ, the president of the Central Falls Union, some young ladies from one of the churches, who furnished the music, and Mrs. E. S. Burlingame, speaker. The audience was quiet and respectful, and listened closely to the exercises.

Mrs. J. H. Barney, state president, is at present in Vermont doing excellent service, and, we hope, recruiting her health.

At the recent reception given by the Methodists of Providence to Bishop Mallelieu, Mrs. G. F. Martin, president of the Providence W. C. T. U., made a telling address in connection with the presentation of a basket of flowers to Mrs. Mallelieu, in which she said some things right to the point in regard to the action of the recent General Conference in relation to women. M. J. M.

APPOINTMENTS.

THE PITTSBURGH CONVENTION.

[Concluded from p. 8.]

broken heart, I would not climb over the bodies of Kansas drunkards to the highest office in the gift of its people.' "I therefore take pleasure in naming Gov. St. John as the choice of Nebraska."

"Ohio." — A presidential candidate himself comes forward—no less a personage than the Hon. Gideon T. Stewart. He withdraws himself handsomely. He seconded, on behalf of the commonwealth of Ohio, the nomination of St. John.

By this time it is evident that St. John is to have a royal vote; and so when Mr. I. Newton Price, representing Pennsylvania, nominates the old war horse of prohibition — Hon. James Black — a halt is called, and the convention, relieved of its strain, takes a recess of two minutes in hurrahing for James Black.

As the noise subsides, Col. Babcock comes forward, and in a manly, self respectful way withdraws the name of Dr. McDonald from the contest. A tremendous round of applause greets the decision. He only asks to read the letter of Dr. McDonald, upon which he has been able to present his name. It is a worthy document and his request is granted.

It is hard work to call the roll after this. Every name is withdrawn but that of St. John. Cries of "Nominate him by acclamation," drown the voices of Wisconsin, Texas, and others far down the roll. But "let all things be done decently, and in order," is chairman Dickie's motto. He succeeds in holding the convention to the rules, and as the hour of adjournment is passing, the most remarkable feat of parliamentary practice is accomplished — the convention is adjourned without a ballot and in the very climacteric of enthusiasm.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The air without had cooled before the convention was called to order in the afternoon, but not so the ardor within the hall. The suspension of the rules was called for that the balloting might precede the platform. The rules gave way under the pressure of such pent up enthusiasm. Somebody was ready with "hurrahs,"— and they could no longer be withheld. The roll call of states began. The first called made little speeches as the chairman gave in the solid ballot of the states for St. John, but soon these could not be heard, and the name and number was all that could be tolerated between the bursts of applause. The call was quickly finished, and in a sort of transport the audience received the announcement long prefigured without ballot sheets or pencil—that of the 602 votes cast by the convention, John P. St. John had received the entire number.

The scene that followed was but a continuation of the exhaustive and rapturous acclaim that had accompanied the balloting. Sober old men, with whom the fiery days of youth were two score years behind, leaped upon their seats and swung hats and canes and handkerchiefs, and yelled and laughed and almost cried for joy. The delegates seemed to forget that they were doctors and lawyers and college professers and acted like boys, threw up their hats, waved their canes like boys at a base ball game. The galleries caught the infection, and it was long before anybody could make himself heard above the tumult. The loud, clear voice of Rev. John H. Miller led off in that grandest of old hymns, "Our God is Marching On," and hundred of strong voices joined in the chorus. There were loud cries of "Amen!" and "Glory to God!" during the singing, from all parts of the house.

"Three cheers for St. John," shouted Prof. A. A. Hopkins, of New York, leaping upon a chair and waving his hat. They were given with a hearty good will. It was several minutes before the crowd got quieted. Then Mr. Miller sang the remaining verse of the hymn and wound up with the long meter doxology.

"It gives me great pleasure to make the formal announcement that John P. St. John has been nominated for president," said Chairman Dickey. "I want to ask this convention to inflate your lungs again and give three cheers that shall almost lift the roof off this hall."

The cheers were given even more noisily than before, and a telegram went singing over the wires to Gov. St. John at Rochester, N. Y.

EVENING SESSION.

The first exercise of the evening that reached my ears was the inimitable begging of George C. Christian. He is the prince of mendicants, and under his cunning manipulation the convention in half an hour pledged $5,000 to the national campaign fund. After this the plattorm. It is a long and wordy document—not the crisp, clear, incisive statement of political creed that leaves its well defined impact on the brain—but neither are those of the other parties. The platform settled, the nomination of a Vice President was the last order of the evening. Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, our corresponding secretary, was the first to nominate. Her choice for Vice President was the Hon. George P. Rogers of Connecticut. Mrs. Lord of Georgia called upon Mrs. Minnie Mosher Jackson to express Georgia's preference, which proved in a very handsome and humorous speech by that attractive little lady, to be the Hon. William Daniel of Baltimore. And on the roll call till New Jersey was reached all were for William Daniel, the little giant of Maryland, the president of the Maryland Temperance Alliance, under whose leadership that state has secured prohibition in fourteen of its twenty-three counties. New Jersey nominated Gen. Clinton B. Fiske of that little republic. He was on the platform, a marked as well as remarkable man; genial, able, administrative, successful in business, a Christian gentleman. It looked as if he were the coming man, but Gen. Fiske soon rose and made one of the most brilliant speeches of the entire convention, withdrawing himself somewhat as follows:

"This is the most singular convention I have ever seen," he said laughingly. "I attribute it all to the ladies. When you will you will, and when you won't you won't. I came here to do duty as a private soldier. I haven't said much in the convention, but I have seen in the papers that I have had trouble with my canvass. Now I have always said that I could not and would not be a candidate. I have received 1,200 letters asking me to be a candidate. That shows that 1,200 people didn't think I was for high license. But the most touching thing in this connection was the petition of two thousand colored people asking me to go on the ticket as their representative. I find I am about the only colored man here." The General related an incident that occurred during a recent visit to London. He had gone to hear the Colored Jubilee Singers. One of the troupe recognized him in the audience and he was called upon the stage. When he got there one of the women remarked: "Why, he's nearly as white as I." "Let us now go home," he said. "Let the controversy be kept up in the pulpit and the pew, in the press and through the ballot box. I allowed this nomination to go on because it would give me a chance to explain myself. I've simply come here to say that I'm not a candidate. You must not vote for me. If I could tell you how to vote I would say, Vote for my brother, Mr. Daniel. Let us go forth doing our best to bind together the north and the south. After a while we will be the great party. We will follow the funeral of the old parties. That circular letter killed the Roosevelt high license bill. I can't tell you how it was done, but it wasn't so great a mistake after all."

The motion was then carried to nominate William Daniel by acclamation and a rousing cheer assured the successful candidate that his leadership was one of hearts as well as votes.

The work of the convention was done, all save a few resolutions one of which I give as it endorses a most praiseworthy effort on the part of leading Illinoisans to educate and agitate till our cause is won. It was offered by Judge Groo, of New York, and unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we learn with pleasure of the organization of a national prohibition camp meeting association, believing that its work will help to educate the masses of our people to the level of prohibition.

Everybody was invited to a reception at the Monongahela House, given by the California delegation, and everybody went. It was a most enjoyable gathering—banquet, speeches, and the like—but most intemperate for temperance people, as it did not fairly wind up till four o'clock in the morning. Of this, however, I speak not as one who "revelled," but who took her wending homeward way through the blazing forges of the Iron City at midnight and so lost the pleasures so bountifully provided by the princely Californians.

No word came from Governor St. John during the closing session as was hoped, but the next day his acceptance was telegraphed to the committee charged with the announcement of his nomination. He is therefore the assured standard bearer of the Prohibition party in the United States which now flings out its unstained banner declaring with reverent feeling for "The gospel according to St. John, and the prophecy of Daniel."

FLOWER MISSIONS.

MORE TESTIMONY.

I have not been quite idle. I have written to all the counties in the state asking to have both county and local superintendents appointed, giving them what instructions I could in regard to the work and asking them to report to me. So far, I have only had reports of three appointments: Miss Butler, in Mansfield, Tioga county, Miss Turner, of Blairsville, and my sister in Indiana. Here at home the work has been very successful. On prison day we went to the jail, where there were but two inmates, one, a man convicted and sentenced to death for killing his father, and the other serving a short term for debt. The murderer is an outlaw, and although he seemed much pleased at our coming, barred the door and refused to let us in. The other man received us kindly and we left the flowers with text attached, and some reading matter. We hope he will send for us again as he kept the flowers and was very proud of them.

We have visited several sick persons, carrying fruit, flowers, etc., and have been most kindly received. One lady dying of cancer, has been so thankful for the words of comfort and the prayers. She not only asked that we come but has sent for us. I sat with her all last Wednesday night, with my sister, who is a local superintendent of Indiana mission, and if I could tell you the suffering she endured and how unshaken her faith is, you would not think the work in vain.

My appointment came so late I have not much of a showing for the year, but I can readily see how much might be done, how much could be accomplished through this mission. If I only had more time to devote to it, if I only had more means—I feel the need of both every day. My work necessarily leaves me but little time and I do not have the means I so much need and wish for.

Mrs. Watson sent me the card written her asking for some report and I send all I have been able to gather.

Of course it is all new and I had but little idea how to start out in it. As you say, ways and methods will suggest themselves as we go along. It has been so in the work here. Our ladies seem so honest in their efforts, and really I do think their work is already telling.

FANNIE W. NIXON,
State Supt. Pa Flower Mission.
Indiana, Pa.

DELAWARE.

The following extracts are from a letter received from Delaware:

On that day our temperance room was opened at noon by a committee of our ladies, for the reception of flowers previously requested, which by the way received liberal response. While the ladies were arranging the bouquets, a lady, (not a member of our union), but one who is active in every good word and work, when it can be done quietly and who is a regular correspondent of Miss Casseday, brought several of her very interesting letters, and read them to us, which entertained and interested us greatly. She also brought her picture, taken of course on her bed, which added still more to the interest of the occasion. I suppose you saw by the papers that our committee met the Wilmington friends, took them to our room and after social greetings we all proceeded to the jail, our minister leading, followed by six boys, members of our Band of Hope, each wearing his star and carrying the baskets of flowers. We who are accustomed to visiting the gloomy place were greatly cheered by the floral decorations which the sheriff's family had arranged, consisting of two large stands on the first floor covered with white, trimmed with vines and ornamented with handsome pot flowers. It was so unexpected to us that we fully appreciated the kindness that suggested it.

The singing, praying, speaking and reading were all appropriate and enjoyable, but I must especially mention the remarks of Mr. Morrow, of Wilmington, as the most appropriate to the occasion that I have ever heard, and certainly must have done good.

WHY I AM A REPUBLICAN.—This volume has a history and defense of the Republican party, with reasons which justify its continuance in power, by Hon. Geo. S. Boutwell. The Hon. John J. Ingalls says: "No man of this generation is better qualified by habit of thought, by experience and attainments, to write the history of the Republican party, to defend its policy, if defense be needed, and to state the reasons which justify its continuance in power, than Gov. Boutwell. O. L. Baskin & Co., publishers, Chicago, Ills.

AFTER DINNER.

Persons who suffer from Indigestion can arrest the progress of that painful malady by the use of an after-dinner pill, so composed that it will give tone to the stomach, prevent heartburn, rouse the liver to healthful action, invigorate the kidneys, and thus, through the activity of these organs, promote the natural movement of the stomach and bowels. AYER'S PILLS are so compounded that their action, though mild, effectually produces the above results. They also, in curing Constipation, remove the cause of Biliousness, Liver Complaint, Kidney Disease, Rheumatism, and many other serious ailments.

AYER'S PILLS

contain no mineral nor poisonous substance, and do not gripe unless the bowels are irritated, and even then their influence is healing. To continue their effect in constipated or chronic cases, they need only be taken in diminishing instead of increasing doses. For seamen, and inhabitants or travelers in sparsely settled countries where physicians are not at hand, they are of inestimable value. There is hardly a sickness they will not alleviate, and in most cases cure, if taken promptly. To young girls just entering upon womanhood, and to women whose period of maternity is drawing to a close, Ayer's Pills, in moderate doses, merely sufficient to ensure regular action of the bowels, will be found of

Signal Notes.

IN twenty ports in England and Ireland an aggregate of 7,748 seamen signed the total abstinence pledge last year. This is an effective plan for lessening the dangers of the sea.

MR. W. S. CAINE, M. P., presiding at the annual meeting of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union, said there were now about 5 000,000 abstainers in the United Kingdom, most of whom had become so through the influence of Bands of Hope. The union reports 11,009 Bands of Hope. a membership of 1,824,377 and 55,000 active honorary workers.

RECENTLY, after a most exciting contest, the temperance people carried Ballard county, Kentucky, on the question of local option. The town of Hinckleville was greatly enthused and overjoyed at the result, which was largely due to the personal efforts of the Trewalla brothers and of Mrs. Jennie Trewa la. The majority was tremendous—only 600!! In Hinkleville all the bells were rung simultaneously for one hour.

DANIEL WEBSTER once said, "Keep slavery out of politics." A great many lesser Websters are crying today to "Keep temperance out of politics." It reminds one of the anecdote of the great Arago when approached with a petition to sign abolishing capital punishment. "I have no objection," said he, "to sign the d cument, providing the murderers first stop their murdering."

IT is reported that the Wells & Fargo Express Company propose to boycott the town of Garnet, Kansas, because its citizens refuse to afford encouragement to that company in its violation of the state prohibitory law. The company has attempted to aid the whisky sellers by carrying liquor packages, and its agent at Garnet has been arrested on several charges and fined $50 and costs on each. "Prohibition fanaticism," the Chicago Tribune styles this effort on the part of the people to enforce the law.

DR. J. M. HOWIE (Liverpool), at the National Temperance League anniversary, told of a patient who in a recent illness had been advised by his doctor to take brandy, and who asked Dr. Howie's sanction to continue its use daily. He admitted he had been ordered "drugs, soups, poultices, and to keep in bed." Dr. Howie told him that to be consistent, he ought also to keep daily to drugs and soups, and remain in bed during the remainder of his life; and "why," said the doctor, "do you come to me without a poultice?"

PROMINENT business and temperance men of Canada have obtained a charter from parliament, and are taking active measures to establish "The Temperance and General Life Assurance Company of North America. A considerable amount of stock has already been secured, and it is thought the guarantee stock will be quickly taken up and prove a profitable and safe investment. The experience of the "United Kingdom Temperance and General Provident Institution of England" for the last seventeen years, shows that the lives of total abstainers have been over 30 per cent. better than the lives of moderate drinkers, it is therefore to the interest of total abstainers everywhere to form such organizations.

TWENTY-SEVEN counties and cities in the Province of Ontario have fallen into the line of Scott Act agitation; in Quebec four counties are organized; good work is being done in the Maritime Provinces; and from Manitoba comes the news that that province is rousing itself for a hot campaign. From every part of the country we are receiving cheering reports of unexpectedly favorable results of canvassing, and daily brightening prospects of success. Already several petitions are completed, and a convention of county presidents has been called to meet at Toronto on the third of July, to confer upon further action, and arrange for joint presentation of petitions to the government as far as practicable,

Miscellaneous Selections.

The police of Chicago found a boy helplessly drunk on the street on a recent Sunday night. On Monday, when he appeared at the police court, he was a complete physical wreck. His eyes stared wildly his face was pale, and his hands trembled. There was every indication that he had the delirium tremens. He gave his age as fifteen. How long shall these things be?

IN view of the anticipated heat of the coming weeks, and the cholera agitation as well, the following timely hints from the London Lancet, equally applicable in all forms of epidemic disease, are worthy of careful attention: "The first important thing to be observed in great heat is temperance—temperance in all things. Heat gives rise to feelings of exhaustion; this leads to drinking repeated doses of alcohol in some shape or other, than which nothing can be worse. We do not say that a strictly temperance man never gets sun-stroke; but we aver that a man who keeps his house and his person, if we may so express it, well ventilated by opening the windows of the former and clothing himself rationally, who attends to the functions of the skin by 'tubing' regularly, and who lives temperately, is a very unlikely subject indeed for sunstroke."

IT is often said that prohibition of the liquor traffic will entail great loss upon the various business interests of a community, state or nation. The following practical results of the great temperance revival in Medina, N. Y., are by no means exceptional, and prove total abstinence a profitable investment: Men on every side are telling of old debts paid up and of sales to men who two months ago would not have dreamed of purchasing such articles. A butcher said, "I have ordered an extra lot of cattle and must order more. I cannot keep up with the demand since this temperance work began." A dry goods merchant told of a woman coming in to pay a debt of $14 and saying she had just paid a grocery bill of $60, all because her husband had signed the pledge. A coal dealer told of a man paying a bill and saying he was ashamed that it had run so long, but he had signed the pledge but a little while before and "this was beer and whisky money."

WHEN the Republican party came into power in 1869 it found prohibitory laws or their equivalent in thirteen states, viz: Prohibitory laws in Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Michigan, Minnesota and Nebraska; and laws which allowed the people of any town to say by vote whether they would have license or no license in Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois and Wisconsin. Prior to 1876 the Republican party had repealed the prohibitory laws in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island and Michigan, and the local option law in Pennsylvania, and in each case without submitting the question to the people. Since then the Republican party has repealed all prohibitory laws except those in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont.—Ex.

WHILE reports concerning Iowa's prohibitory law show that it is being very generally observed, there is, as was expected, strong opposition and open defiance in a few large cities, but the Prohibitionists are determined and there is every probability of ultimate success. At Muscatine a prominent saloon keeper was found guilty on two counts, and fined $100 on each, the full limit of the law. The case was fought inch by inch by the saloon men, and was appealed to the district court.

A Des Moines saloonist was fined $100 for selling two glasses of "mead."

At Marshalltown one Mrs. Blank (most fittingly named) was made the heroine of a disgraceful resistance to the law by the saloon bummers, but is being vigorously prosecuted.

What Cheer, Iowa's Leadville, reports saloons all closed.

This general acceptance of the situation will settle into a permanent respect for and compliance with the law—if the first violations are met with the full penalties.

INDIGESTION AND CONSTIPATION

ARE CURED BY

AYER'S PILLS.

Dyspepsia

Is one of the most dangerous of the diseases caused by these complaints. Affecting as it does the centre of life—the stomach—it quickly deranges and imperils the whole system, physical and mental. Its symptoms are manifold, and many of them so serious that they are generally regarded and treated as special maladies.

The Only Cure

For the various forms of dyspeptic diseases, is in a medicine that will remove its primary cause, by restoring the stomach, liver, kidneys, and bowels to a healthful condition. Any other treatment is as useless as an effort would be to make a watch keep time by simply gilding its case, when it had a broken main-spring.

Ayer's Pills

Are the best medicine to accomplish the necessary work of cleansing, stimulating and restoring. They are more thorough in their purgative effect than any others, yet are not violent in their action, exercise a powerful influence for good upon the other vital organs as well as the bowels, and effectually

Banish Disease.

For Biliousness, Jaundice, and other evil consequences of hepatic disorders, there is no remedy so prompt and thorough as AYER'S PILLS. They are also, by their efficacy in regulating the digestive functions, of the greatest value to women in the most critical stages of existence.

Kidney Diseases

Also spring from disorders of the digestive functions, and are not only exceedingly painful in themselves, but have symptoms, such as Dropsy and Rheumatism, which are of the gravest character. The work of the blood. When, through disease, they cease to do this,

Prompt Relief

Must be accorded to avert most serious consequences. Medicines th[illegible] lull their pain by dulling their sens[illegible] or that stimulate them to unnatu[illegible] do infinitely more harm tha[illegible] store them to health, the kidn[illegible] cleansed, their inflammation alla[illegible] their strength restored.

Ayer's Pills

Do this more effectually than any other. Their diuretic effect is not less marked and beneficial than their purgative power. Not only do they, at once, by a moving dose, free the clogged, and rouse the torpid organs, but their continuous effect, when taken in small doses, is to regulate the machinery of life, and

Restore Health and Vigor.

For all the several varieties of Piles, and for the many Cutaneous Disorders produced by Blood Impurities thrown into the circulation during attacks of constipation, no cure is so quick and easy as AYER'S PILLS, which free the bowels and aid nature.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth; that Thy beloved may be delivered."

VOL. X.—NO. 30. CHICAGO, AUGUST 7, 1884. $1 75 PER YEAR.

ATTITUDE OF THE NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION TOWARD POLITICAL PARTIES. RESOLUTION PASSED AT THE TENTH ANNUAL MEETING, DETROIT, MICH.:

We will lend our influence to that party, by whatever name called, which shall furnish the best endorsement of prohibition principles, and will most surely protect our homes.

THE Pennsylvania W. C. T. U. has added unto itself one hundred and thirty-eight new unions this year.

THE Farmers Review does not hesitate to say that the use of alcoholic drinks in harvest is like putting oil and pitch under steam boilers. They will get up a sudden head of steam, but will burn out the boilers, or cause an explosion.

CHOLERA does not seize its victims by hazard. It has been ascertained that of every one hundred persons who die of this disease ninety are habitual drinkers. Invisible placards on every spirit shop in the land read "Cholera sold here."

GEORGIA has secured such prohibition in some of her counties, that the jail stands open, night and day—notably at Jonesboro, where the whole institution has been offered for sale, and the conscientious sheriff is forced to think of resigning for lack of something to do.

AN eminent physician says: "When taken only or chiefly with food and as constituents of general free living, fermented liquors, beer or wine contribute to the production of an abundance of ill assimilated, overheated blood, which either finds vent in eruptions of the surface, or as local hemorrhages, or causes vertigo, stupor, bilious attacks, gout, gravel and dyspepsia."

THE ease with which temperance law may be enforced when its enforcement is in the hands of earnest men is shown by the fact that six young men of Prince Edward's Island have banished every saloon from one county of 40,000 inhabitants. In a town in this county not a single arrest for drunkenness has been made in six months, and the docket of the last circuit court did not contain a single criminal case.

FOR fear that some editorial paragraphers will seriously injure their brains in the cudgelling for new thrusts at St. John as "the brother-in-law of the president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union—" let us hasten to say that the gentleman in question is not the brother-in-law of the president, but of the W. C. T. U. itself—a title paid to the good men who have been so fortunate as to marry into this happy family.

THE annual convention of the Catholic Total Abstinence Societies of America is in progress in this city. It is a wonderful demonstration of the power of organization. Archbishop, bishops and priests occupy the platform, and the body of Central Music hall is filled to overflowing, with interested members and lookers on. Through the kindness of Father Hagan, the president of the diocesan society, who is in thorough sympathy with our work, the officers of the W. C. T. U. have been given excellent seats, and are full of enthusiasm as this splendid army draws up in line of battle against our common enemy. A report of the proceedings will be given next week.

ONE month of prohibition in Iowa, over whose legal construction no court can quibble, has wrought mightily for the peace of the commonwealth. A recalcitrant dram seller in Oxford who had been storing his liquors in boxes and barrels labeled sugar, molasses, etc., found himself in the pitiless clutches of the law, unable to get bail, while the indignant citizens marched in a procession to the tolling of all the church bells in town, and tumbled $300 worth of his illegal wares into the river. Burlington saloonists although supposed to be shielded by the immunity which is said to belong to river towns, have had seven convictions, and on July 29, the town had less than half a dozen open dram shops. These were expected to be closed up the next day.

THE Iowa legislature which distinguished itself by the enactment of statutory prohibition thrust hard also at other vices. On petition of the W. C. T. U., the code was altered in such a way as to make it a criminal offense to keep or visit one of those houses whose doors open inward upon moral death. The law is made easy of enforcement by the admission of evidence as to the general reputation of such places. Men and women are visited alike with imprisonment in the penitentiary, up to a term of five years.

SOME political exhorters are holding up Iowa as an ensample of the fidelity of the Republican party to prohibition. Such samples are like the peaches in the baskets at the huckster stands—very ripe and mellow on top but very green and acrid underneath.

NOT that Iowa does not give us one of the noblest incidents in prohibition history, and if this great and glorious state were indeed a sample of what the Republican party would as well as could accomplish, another party to do the work would be as much of an absurdity as is the claim that the Republicanism or Democracy of the nation will at some more convenient season seize the club and accomplish the Herculean task.

SINCE the election at Olympia, W. T. at which time the united votes of good men and women delivered that capital city from the legalized saloon, there has been no more watched-for day in the territory than July 14, when Seattle, one of its largest cities, was to test the question of license at the ballot box. The day dawned, men and women came early to the polls, carriages were driven everywhere for voters. One woman with her span of horses brought many other women to vote who lived at a distance. "I never before saw so many men walking out with their wives as there are this morning," remarked one of the "oldest inhabitants." "That is because it is election day, and of nearly 3,000 registered voters about one-third are women,' was the reply.

The result of all this activity and the large vote, three times as large as any before polled, is a complete victory for law and order in two of the three wards of the city.

HARPER'S MONTHLY for August describes vividly the "supreme moment" in a nominating convention when, as if by a sign from heaven, delegates deliberate, waver, change and go over in a body to the winning candidate. The outsider sees nothing, hears nothing, but the delegate is wise beyond our ken. It is his business to be clear-eyed and watchful for just such a moment.

Something of this same impulse comes to honest men outside convention halls. The true citizen, alert and keen in care of his country's good, is not left to walk in silence and darkness, but he too hears "a voice we cannot hear," and to him there comes the "supreme moment" when he must leave the old affiliations, the glad allegiance of years, and separate himself to a peculiar choice. Good men about him are blind and deaf, seeing no need, hearing no cry, but to him it is given to stand out boldly and exchange absolute righteousness for lesser evil, to declare for principle against expediency. Hundreds and thousands of such citizens are today at the clock-tick of the "supreme moment" in politics. God grant they may meet it squarely and with brave hearts.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND SYNOD — SHALL WOMEN VOTE?

"This is a serious subject, but it has a ludicrous side."—Bishop Medley.

"No," says Bishop Medley,
"Home is woman's sphere;
Man must be made happy
While he tarries here.
His the right to govern
In the church and state;
Women with the franchise
Would deteriorate.
Fancy women raving
With the Irish band,
In the House of Commons,
Of our mother land.
Fighting Mr. Gladstone
Or Sir Stafford N.—
Who would be securing
The happiness of men?
No," says Bishop Medley.

"No," says Parson Armstrong,
"Listen to Saint Paul;
Women, in the churches,
Should keep silence all.
If they seek for knowledge,
Let the husbands teach;
They have all the wisdom
And the right of speech.
No," says Parson Armstrong.

Deborah, Judge of Israel,
You sadly missed your sphere;
Was no man made unhappy
By your mad career?
Miriam, hush your music!
Silence, I beseech;
Let some man interpret
The lesson you would teach.
How could you, saintly Anna,
Tarry all day and night
Within the sacred temple
And serve with such delight?
Was there no Bishop Medley,
No Parson Armstrong wise,
To teach you woman's duty
In home's safe cloister lies?

Tryphena and Tryphosa,
Who labored in the Lord;
The well beloved Persis
Who did great help afford;
Priscilla, who instructed
Apollos in the truth;
Lois and Eunice who once taught
A bishop in his youth.—
Were they indeed mistaken,
And does the Bible plan
Make woman's only mission
The happiness of man?

Alas! too late the lesson
For these illustrious dead
Who missed their high vocation
And served the Lord instead:
Of their deterioration,
The Bible does not tell,
But modern wives and maidens,
This lesson ponder well:
For modern priest and bishop
Affirm that so 'twill be,
A woman voting in the church
Will lose her modesty!

Then women cease, I charge you,
Your efforts in the cause;
You have no interest in funds
No knowledge of the laws;
Withdraw your contributions,
Devise no scheme or plan,
But concentrate your efforts
On the happiness of man!

THE CAPTURE OF THE BEER WAGON.

A REMINISCENCE OF THE CRUSADE.

MARY N. HADLEY.

During the crusade we were told that beer was being furnished to the saloons of our town by a wagon from Xenia, and I had been looking out for it for several days. Upon this morning Thomas Young, a colored man who had been keeping a saloon in Clarktown (a suburb or part of Wilmington lying south of the railroad) having signed the pledge his liquors were poured out. A colored lad present caught some in his hat as it ran and drank enough to make him fearless or brave for the time. We then passed on to a place opposite the jail where a keg of gin was emptied out, after which the company repaired to the M. E. church. I remained behind talking with Phœbe Timberlake when John Brazille (an old acquaintance) came up, and speaking low said, "Aunt Mary the beer wagon is at Mrs. Burks." I caught the idea in a moment, but on looking around I found my friend Phœbe was gone, and while I turned to look for her John had passed away also. I then said to myself, What shall I do? If I go to get help the wagon will be gone. So I started and walked rapidly half a square. I could then see the wagon standing near the saloon. Directly the man made an effort to start. I said, Lord don't let him start till I get there. He made three attempts to start, but the horses seemed to weave about and he did not get them started. I was very sure the saloon keeper saw me coming and gave him warning. He finally gave it up and got down and went into the house. I overtook him at the door. I said:

"I hear thee is furnishing the saloons of our town with beer, and we do not want thee to bring it here any more. We women are trying to save our people from drunkenness. Thee must not bring it here."

He said the women had better be at home darning stockings, that "Jesus made wine and it was right."

I told him the wine that Jesus made was not fermented wine.

He then went into the house and I called to my friend J. B. who worked in a blacksmith shop on the opposite side of the street and told him I must have help. I then went into the house, and among the beer kegs where they had gone, he got two kegs. I saw money in her hand, which she put behind her to keep me from seeing. She then reached back and gave it him. He then started and I followed, praying in spirit for help. In starting he took the wrong road and had to back his horses and turn round again, which caused him some delay, I still anxiously desiring help. At this moment I heard my husband's voice say, "Here she is." Judge Doan's wife was with him.

The wagon by this time was on the street again. We ran and as he drove into Main street the colored lad (the same who caught the whisky in his hat) came running to us. My husband called out to the lad, "Stop that wagon!" The lad sprang to the horses' heads, caught them and held on bravely. The Judge's wife also joined him and assisted in holding them.

THE MEETING.

J. B. had gone to the church and told that help was needed. They said the meeting was not dismissed that day; they all started "pell mell" as hard as they could. I looked up the street and saw the whole street full of people coming on "double quick." After they reached us, I said to the beer man, "Thee told me the women had better be at home darning stockings. I can prove now by my husband that he has plenty of stockings already darned." I then made a little speech which was followed by our dear sister Lizzie Runyan, wife of Rev. Mr. Runyan of the M. E. church, in one of her most powerful prayers. She asked our Heavenly Father to strike his horses down that they might not be able to go.

He (the beer man) kept saying, "Let my horses go;" the lad replying, "When the ladies tell me to I will." While our sister Rhoda C. Worthington was writing a pledge for him to sign the Marshall of the town said, "Let him go."

Several hundred people were gathered in the street. The number was estimated at one thousand. The man was very much frightened and glad to be released.

Mrs. R. E. Doan and some other ladies went immediately and sent a telegram to the ladies of Sabina, that they might be ready for him. He made a "Jehu drive" all the way to that place, but found the women ready and waiting for him. After he reached there one of his horses fell down in the wagon yard and came very near dying.

After this circumstance had occurred I went to Waynesville to assist in the crusade, and was jokingly told by a brother of Esther Pugh that my men were better off than he was, as they had plenty of stockings darned. I found the beer peddler had told the story at Xenia and it had got into the newspaper.

Later on the crusade sisters Lizzie Runyan, Sarah Walker and I went to Xenia to labor. My work was not in the part of the city where this man was engaged in his business, but the ladies who were there told me that he inquired for me.

A FIELD DAY IN THE CAMPAIGN.

JULIA COLMAN.

It would be putting it mildly to say that the local W. C. T. U. president of Sometown was much perplexed. It was a practical difficulty that met her, one that meets all of us in the cities and larger towns and in a few of the smaller towns, also.

The union had been alive and active for some years and it had been accounted successful above the average. A large number of men had been reformed and organized into a society. A flourishing temperance school was established working successfully, and unfermented wine was used in all the evangelical churches in the place. A law and order league was taking care of the legal line of action. Gospel temperance meetings were kept up unremittingly. And yet in spite of all this the enemy was gaining ground. They had suppressed, prayed out, and prosecuted a large number of saloons, but by actual count (they numbered some hundreds) there were more saloons pro rata for the inhabitants than there were before they had commenced work as a union.

It did not help the matter to say this was so all through the country, that the use of beer was steadily rising, having doubled within the last ten years. It was some comfort to believe that but for the active temperance work the case might have been far worse, but that was not enough. So long as the beer waves were rising, would they not eventually drown us out?

Privately, too, she had further reasons. She not only met an increasing number of beer pitchers in the street, which meant beer in so many familes, but the beer pitcher had met her in her own family, or a branch of it. A married daughter had come to live near by and to her dismay she had found her going to the saloon to get beer for her husband! She could not believe her ears nor her eyes, but the daughter was honest enough about it and even took credit for going herself instead of letting her husband or her children go for it. She would not trust them to go but the doctor had said that her husband must have a pint of beer every day with his dinner and it must be freshly drawn. So every day when the dinner was ready, she put on her hat and ran to the corner and handed in her beer pitcher. She would not go in herself. The saloon keeper understood it, filled it quietly and handed it out. Horrible covenant with death! But that was stopped now. She had plied that family with the "Beer Question" and the "Readings on Beer" and Arthur's "Glass of Ale," and similar works until they dropped the whole thing, doctor and all.

Now a pile of these effective documents lay before our good lady as she was mooting the question of what could be done in the same line to reach the great public. Apathy and beer were the main difficulties in the present problem. "If I could only get up a procession with music and fireworks," she said to herself, "I might get the public attention." "Well, why not?" said a little voice in her ear. "What is there so bad about music and processions that you should not press them into service?"

That was the beginning of a train of thought and planning which ended in "I'll try it!" First of all there should come a large German band well paid and thoroughly committed to the absence of beer. The German element was large in Sometown. Then should follow the members of the different temperance organizations and all the other citizens that could be enlisted, with banners, cartoons, mottoes, and object lessons, all on beer. Here are a few of them: 1st. A wagon with two tables; on one of these a small sack of grain and a keg supposed to contain the beer that might be made from the grain. On the other table the bread made from the same amount of grain. Motto, "Bread or Beer." 2d. A white cotton banner on a cross stick, a transparent beer bottle hanging at either corner, one full of beer, the other with the water and the alcohol boiled out and the words above, "The food there is in it; rather dear water."

3d. Cartoon: A wood chopper plying his ax and saying, "I take bread."

4th. Cartoon: A beer soaker sitting lazily smoking and saying, "I take beer and tobacco."

5th. Cartoon: A bock beer goat (often seen in saloon windows).

6th. A small bare-boned horse with panels hung either side inscribed, "A market for your grain."

7th. A large, fine, sleek horse carrying panels inscribed, "Grain well marketed."

8th. Banner with inscriptions, "Spent for beer in Sometown, $2,000 per day," "Spent for beer in the United States $500,000,000 per year, followed by inscription "What have you to show for it?"

9th. A large load of empty barrels with the inscription above, "All I have left; and these belong to the brewer."

10th. Cartoon: The wood chopper and a fine house with the inscription, "What I have left; a house of my own and no rent to pay."

11th. A large empty barrel with both ends out and the inscription, "We see through it."

Many other things were suggested, good ones, too, so that they could easily have had a procession twice as long. The public was notified in the papers that these cartoons and devices would be explained in five minute talks at the grove, to which the procession made its way, securing an immense audience well kept in order by the police. The best speakers obtainable were pressed into service and took up the various devices with a few effective remarks, grave, witty, or pathetic. A little boy well drilled gave the "Sermon on Malt" slightly modified. A little girl pitifully dressed with a beer pail in her hand came to the front and said,

"Angels weep I know,
For the child below
That carries a pail of beer."

The bock beer cartoon made an excellent object lesson for the exposure of the foulness of beer and the foul effects it produces on the system, telling how Nasby came near killing himself with it by the doctor's prescription, how he reformed and studied beer and what a crusade he afterwards ran against it in his paper, the best of these things being printed in a five cent pamphlet, "Beer and the Body," which was for sale at a stand well advertised near by. Several other cheap pamphlets in the same line were there also and it is safe to say that more temperance documents were eagerly perused that day than ever before in Sometown. Besides these thousands of the beer handbills were distributed along the line of march and at the grove.

It was a pretty large undertaking and it cost something, but the W. C. T. U. president is convinced it was the right thing to do. The work was fatiguing, but then they reached a good many people in the course of soliciting help and co-operation whom they could never reach before, and they had induced them to read on beer beforehand, "just to show you why we are trying to do this." Some objected that beer was not half as bad as whisky, but the W. C. T. U. decided if they were ever to reach and stir up an apathetic community they must attack their pet tipple. They would do it good naturedly and kindly but effectively, and to this end they never missed their opportunity to put in a leaflet or handbill when it came appropriate. They reasoned that beer is a bad subject and cannot bear exposure; that the truth is mighty and it will prevail if we work for it; that knowledge is power; that beer tells lies, and if it can be unmasked and the people made to see what mischief it does, they will not take it to their own undoing.

It is strange how readily we often give our assent to these wise sayings and yet how slow we are to act upon them. We say it is proper to follow the tactics of the traffic and fight them on their own ground, while we largely overlook the fact that pushing beer is their very best card and we usually make no effort to push it back again. The W. C. T. U. of Sometown now think it one of the very best campaign efforts they could have made to get up this fusilade against beer, and if any other W. C. T. U. thinks so too I shall be glad to help them with the same kind of documents that were sent to Sometown.

Processions of this sort would be wonderfully suitable for the coming political campaign. They would mean something and therefore they would present a striking contrast to the transparent emptiness and the dark lanterns of the usual political processions.

AN ALLEGORY.

J. BUNYAN, JR.

As I lay in meditation I thought I saw, away to the westward, a high hill reaching far up among the clouds. The slope of this hill was toward the south, and the strangely bright sunshine made the scene seem very near to me. As I looked I saw that it was a fair country, well tilled, and abounding in fruitfulness. I saw many great houses, of grand appearance, like the abodes of wealthy squires; and some were so great that I took them for palaces of the king. There were many of these palaces and I scarce could tell which was handsomer. So many great buildings there were that I bethought me to look for the houses of the common people, but in all the country, though I looked diligently, I could not detect one mean dwelling. This must be a famous country I thought set apart for the rich and the great. All the buildings were very pleasingly devised; there was not one, even among the great palaces, which a person would not have entered with joy.

But soon my attention was taken by the people. They were clad in garments of many bright colors, and none seemed to be poorer clad than the rest. Though I was far away I could plainly see the expression on each face, and I wondered greatly; for they were all smiling as if some great good tidings had lately been fetched them, yet they seemed to be going about their usual business. Wherever I looked not one unhappy or sober or pale face was to be seen.

At length I observed a woman in middle life, very gracious and well favored, who was standing before a pole, well up the hill, on which was nailed a public notice. She was smiling, as if very happy, and as she read the words of the notice she kept smiling harder and harder until I thought she would smile herself to death. But she began to jump up and down like a little child, and to clap her hands, and so eased herself.

When she had gone away I looked at the notice. It was very old and the letters were faded, but I saw that the grounds round about were well cared for, and around the foot of the pole was a beautiful fence which shone like polished steel. I longed greatly to know how the notice read, and after some time I made out this:

"What maketh drunk may not be sold in this land."

"An impure person may not dwell in this land."

Then I knew why all the people in that country were so happy and I started up thinking to betake myself thither.

But as I looked to see how I should go I perceived that the way was cut off by fortifications, defended, as I saw from the standards, by the lovers of strong drink, and by those whose lives are impure, and those who are governed by the greed for gain, and by those who are ambitious for public place, and by those who fear to be considered odd, and by those who say that the Nazarene was a liquor manufacturer, and by those who drink wine at the communion table, and by those who say that God made woman inferior, and by these who are bound to keep her inferior whether or no, and by those who pooh, pooh, at having anything different from what it is.

I saw further that the fortifications were two ramparts. The nearer was in a sad condition. In many places it was leveled with the ground, and it was clear that every where it was much lower than it had been when it was built. The parts which still stood were battered and weakened, and in many places seemed on the point of falling. The further rampart was comparatively strong, although this, too, had been much weakened, for it was a tremendous affair in its best days. The names of the two ramparts were Wineisagoodcreature Redoubt and Womansspherei-isthehome Redoubt.

I saw that a large part of the defenders (and almost all of the fighters) were at the first redoubt. There seemed to be great alarm among them, for their rampart was so reduced as to be of little use; yet they seemed not to flinch, though the faces of some were blanched, and others were tearing with rage. Very few of the defenders at the second rampart were on duty. The great body of them were in camp beyond, and many of them seemed not unwilling that Wineisagoodcreature Redoubt should be carried.

Then I turned my attention to the attacking army. I saw that they were very few in comparison with the defenders,—scarcely one to ten; but they were fighting might and main, and they had a great supply of weapons and each soldier wore an armor made out of a very tough metal called truth. So they could hurl their weapons (which were made of the same metal) against the rampart, while themselves could not be hurt. To such a war I could see but one issue; indeed, as I looked on, it seemed as though a strong charge would sweep every thing before it.

But I saw some of the attackers who seemed to be trying to hurl their weapons over the first redoubt, to hit Womanssphereisthehome. I watched the course of some of their weapons, and saw that they all were stopped by Wineisagoodcreature Redoubt; and these weapons seemed to be made of softer metal than the others, so that they did little execution.

After I had seen that none of the weapons struck the second redoubt, I wondered greatly at seeing plainly that it was growing weaker and weaker. It was some time before I discovered the cause. Whenever a woman (for both sexes were in the attacking army) made a good hurl against Wineisagoodcreature, she not only did good execution there, but besides, a corresponding piece fell out of Womanssphereisthehome. I did not understand it, but so it was. I saw also that as those who were encamped beyond the second redoubt saw the valor of those women, some of them crept away and by a roundabout path joined the attackers on the other side.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE AMONG SOLDIERS.

MRS. S. D. LA FETRA.

The following letter written by one of the veterans at Washington City, D. C., is certainly a strong incentive to work among the soldiers of our army. The author is over sixty years of age, and is among the converts to temperance and Christianity in the district work during the past year. He writes to one of the workers June 17, 1884, just after recovering from what the physicians thought would be his death bed.

My Dear Sister:— May grace, mercy and peace be multiplied unto you and your dear family, from the Great Head of the Church; may you enioy much of His divine favor, and grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Dear sister, I am just home again from the hospital, and my first thoughts went over to you and all the dear workers in the gospel temperance cause. Oh! how I thank you all for your kind greeting to me, for your sympathy and your prayers. While I was passing through the furnace of affliction, it was such a comfort and stay to know that dear friends and loving hearts were sending up their earnest prayers to the throne of grace for poor unworthy me. Dear sister, I did feel the blessed hope that if my work was done on earth, I was ready to say not my will, but Thine be done. Oh! how blessed I found the precious promises of God made manifest in my affliction. How I experienced the blessedness of that gospel truth, because I live ye shall live also. Oh, how I pray for you and yours, that God may spread over you His everlasting shield. Then, sister, you can say:

Let cares, like a wild deluge come, and storms of sorrow fall,
So I but safely reach my home, my God, my heaven, my all!

We have no reason to fear. Hear what our loving

Father says for our comfort: When thou shalt pass through the deep waters of afflictions, they shall not overflow thee; when thou passest through the fire, it shall not burn thee. Every tongue that speaketh against thee thou shalt condemn, and every weapon prepared against thee shall be harmless, and every dart hurled against thee shall be quenched in the sanctifying blood of a dying Christ, and we shall gain the victory and rejoice under the trophies of the cross. Because I live ye shall live also, and your life is hid with Christ in God. Dear sister, I want to give you a little of my experience. The night before the Fourth was my worst, and seemed to baffle the skill of the physicians who were at my bed-side all that night. When the weary wheels of life seemed about to stop moving, and the world faded away from me, though a mild and great calm I felt within, and that on Christ the solid rock I stood, and that if the billows of death were to wreck the frail bark, the immortal spirit would fly to the heaven of eternal rest, I fell into a deep sleep, and thought I was passing through a deep, dark valley. A shining form appeared to me, and said: "Fear not, I am with you," and he led me on I saw a light and beyond I saw the New Jerusalem. I looked up at the gates, but they were closed, and while looking sweet voices began to sing, "Lift up ye gates and be ye opened everlasting doors." The doors and gates then were open, and the dazzling scenes that greeted my eyes, I cannot describe. I saw the Savior sitting upon his eternal throne surrounded by hosts of angels and archangels, the spirits of the just and redeemed. I wanted to go in but was not permitted. I saw the river, and tree of life standing in the midst of the streets, and then one of the cherubim plucked one of the leaves and brought it to me saying, Take this and return whence you came and work for God, home and native land. I saw my dear mother standing on the other side of the river waving a palm of victory to me. The gates then closed and I heard a voice, "Be strong and faithful unto death and thou shalt receive a crown of life." At this point I woke.

I will close now with a little poem which was very sweet during my sickness:

"Light after darkness, gain after loss;
Strength after weakness, crown after cross;
Sweet after bitter, song after sigh;
Home after suffering, promise nigh;
Near after distance, gleam after gloom;
Light after misery, life after tomb;
Song after sorrow, calm after blast;
Rest after weariness, sweet rest at last.
Shower after drought, sun after rain;
Love after loneliness, peace after pain;
After long agony rapture of bliss,
Right now the pathway was leading to this."

Your friend and brother, Thomas Forman.

TEMPERANCE WORK IN THE KEYSTONE STATE.

Dear Union Signal:—I had intended long ere this to send you some items from Pennsylvania, but each night found me so weary from the day's labor that I could attempt no extra writing.

Pennsylvania is a great state in population as well as square miles. Of course we all read that years ago in our geographies—but I now know it by many weary journeyings over it from north to south, from east to west. As some of your readers are aware I had engaged to spend some time this spring in Chicago, lecturing en route in Ohio, Indiana, Canada and Michigan, but the demand and need for me in my own state was so imperative that, much to my regret, I was compelled for the the time to relinquish my western trip, as I could not reconcile my conscience to the stepping over a near duty to reach one more remote. This is my apology to those unions in the above named states who expected me this spring but failed to receive any dates of my coming.

At our last state convention the Pennsylvania W. C. T. U. determined to secure, if possible, from our next legislature the passage of a scientific temperance education law, but realizing that an aroused public sentiment concerning such a law must precede any hope of its passage by our legislature, and that organized effort can alone secure the required public sentiment I have been devoting almost my entire time since April in organizing local and county unions and addressing mass meetings in our leading county towns upon the necessity of such a law, and am happy to be able to report that since our last state convention held in October, I have had the pleasure of organizing forty local unions and assisting in the organization or convention of seven county unions, and this in addition to the regular work of my department, "Giving Instruction in Methods of Teaching Scientific Temperance before Teachers' Institutes," and also lecturing almost every night.

I wish that I had time, for the information of your Pennsylvania readers, to give a full account of the work in the several counties which I have visited in the last two months: Of brave Erie county, with its many local auxilaries; of energetic Center county, the banner county of the state for increased ratio of organization since our last state convention, having at that time but one feeble union, but holding its county convention in May with delegates from thirteen wide awake unions, some of them with a membership of fifty ladies, and all bring most inspiring reports of work accomplished or begun. Could I only introduce you to the earnest, capable women of Lewistown, county-seat of Miflin county, and of Huntingdon, county-seat of Huntingdon county, who, overcoming all difficulties have secured the organization of their respective counties in local and county unions. The individual members of these two central unions bore almost entirely the expense of the organization.

I would that you could all peep into the bright, comfortable headquarters, lunch and reading rooms of the Lock Haven, Clinton county, W. C. T. U. and see what energetic, consecrated effort may accomplish under even the most adverse circumstances, and catch a glimpse of the central pivot of all, the lovely president of that union, Mrs. Blanchard, a refined, consecrated Episcopalian lady, whose whole life had been sheltered from every outside blast, yet when the temperance cause appealed to her as the cause of God and duty found courage to follow with childlike simplicity wherever her Lord had seemed to lead.

How it must cheer the heart of all to find old Westmorland county, famous for its whisky insurrection of 1791, now organized for God and home and native land. Of Chester county, settled not only by the Friends, but organized also as the friends of temperance.

But especially may we congratulate ourselves as a state W. C. T. U. over the organization accomplished in those intensely German and conservative counties of Lancaster and York. And yet in every unorganized place at which I lectured in these counties I was able to effect a local organization, some of them with a large membership. Indeed, I am fully convinced that all we need to make our "Pennsylvania Dutch" the most earnest of temperance men and women is simply organization and work, convincing their heads as well as their hearts.

At Litiz, Lancaster county, arrangements were made for me to lecture during the convention of the General Synod of the Moravian church, an assemblage which meets only once in ten or twelve years, and is then composed of delegates from not only all states of the United States, but from all parts of the world.

The synod, after some hesitancy decided to adjourn one session for the purpose of attending the lecture. At the close of my address one of the Moravian ministers arose and in a ringing speech proposed a rising vote of thanks for the lecture. Another minister in a few stirring words seconded the motion, and a unanimous vote of thanks was given. But the best news followed after me in a letter which stated, "The next day after your lecture, the Moravian Synod, stirred up by the meeting of the preceding night, passed a series of most radical temperance resolutions, I believe the first of the kind ever passed by the Moravian church."

But I cannot close this letter without especially commending the local unions of Lancaster City and the Borough of York, under whose auspices I lectured and organized in their respective counties. Lancaster union, small in number but mighty in deed, considering the beer sentiment with which it has to contend, and York union with its indefatigable Mrs. McCall and its entire membership out of the very best element of the city, considered either from a social, intellectual, or religious standpoint.

But verily I sometimes wonder if any other speaker of our nation, can claim as her constituency such a universally large-hearted, intelligent, consecrated sisterhood as I can. And oh, their loving kindness to me! how often it has been like the healing, strengthening balm to my fatherless, motherless, homesick heart. God bless the women of Pennsylvania.

But finally the one great lesson which my journeyings over Pennsylvania, has taught me is, that the great, indeed almost imperative need of our state is a central headquarters for the state W. C. T. U. filled with supplies for local unions, and where a salaried secretary would be seated day and night, systematically writing to, helping and encouraging the new unions and carefully planning systematic work for all. But considering the diversified condition of our state, and the constantly increasing number of unions, no one woman can do the work now necessary to be done by the corresponding secretary, unless she devote her whole time entirely and exclusively to the work of that office. But can we ask any woman to do this without compensation? Women of Pennsylvania, think of this before our next state convention!

Narcissa E. White.

LOCAL OPTION IN GARRET COUNTY, MD.

Dear Union Signal:—I am just home from a grand spiritual feast held at Johnstown in this county. The occasion was a county Sunday school convention, held under the auspices of the Maryland Sunday School Union. The convention began on Friday afternoon and closed on Sunday evening, after eight most interesting and enthusiastic sessions. The church after the first session was full to overflowing, and it was evident that there would be an immense outpouring of people on the Sabbath. Therefore the Sabbath services were held in a grove, and fully 1500 people were present, from every district in the county, and from the four states, Maryland, West Virginia, Virginia and Pennsylvania. The dear Master was with us in great power, and I feel a certainty many, very many will date their journey heavenward from this convention.

I wish particularly to speak of the sessions which were conducted in the interest of prohibition. Next fall the voters of this county will have the privilege of deciding for or against the existence of the liquor traffic. Saturday afternoon was devoted entirely to this question, and in all parts of the county men with their families left their fields and work and repaired to Johnstown, until there was scarcely standing room in the church. You could read in their faces and in the vigor of their amens a determination that the liquor curse should no longer be a ruling element in Garrett county. This question seems to be uppermost in the minds and deep in the hearts of the people, as was indicated by the earnest responses to every mention of the struggle by the speakers at the various sessions.

I wish to relate an incident which is suggestive of the effects of the meetings. Unfortunately (as will so often be the case where rum is sold), on Saturday night a few young men were seen under the influence of liquor. They were prayed for earnestly. On Sunday morning, on the sill of one of the church windows, was resting peacefully a bottle containing a small quantity of whisky. I accept this as a testimony that our prayers were answered and some poor victim of the bottle had taken an initiatory step toward the kingdom by giving up the accursed drink ere the last drop had been drained. Let us hope this may be true. I have that bottle, with the contents, and shall label it and give it a prominent place in my cabinet, as a trophy gathered in our stuggle with the arch enemy.

The last session of the convention (Sunday night) was an occasion of wonderful outpouring of the Divine Spirit. The house was crowded with an audience so attentive that the dropping of a pin could be heard at any stage of the exercises. The speakers and people seemed to be full of the Spirit, and the audience seemed to be deeply impressed. This was evident even before a call was made for such as desired prayers to stand upon their feet.

When the call was made over a hundred persons, young men, young ladies, fathers and mothers of families, and little children arose their feet. Among these were some of the most hardened sinners of the county. "I was astonished," said an unconverted man, "to see those men stand up for prayers. Why, they are considered desperately wicked." Yet some of these men with tearful eyes grasped our hand and said they were determined to be Christians.

The hand shakings and God bless you at the conclusion of the meeting showed that denominational differences had been forgotten, and God's people were one in Christ.

Johnstown is a little village about eighteen miles north of Mountain Lake Park. Our ride was through a most beautiful and romantic country, as full of undeveloped wealth as of grandeur of scenery. The soil is rich and productive, and on each hand the fields of wheat and rye bowed under the stroke of the breeze like the waves of the sea. Here and there were comfortable mountain homes, homes of men who had years ago braved the perils of the wilderness and bared their arms to the task of planting a home where father and mother and little ones could reap the sweet fruits of industry; and God has made the hills to blossom as the rose, and abundance to crown their labors.

When I looked upon these great hills and ever and anon from their tops got a glimpse of the green slopes and peaceful valleys, oh how my heart bled for homes that are blighted and the hearts that are breaking because of the accursed drink, and I prayed, just as I want you to pray, dear sisters, that the Lord Jehovah may strengthen the arm of His servants that a grand victory may be achieved this fall for the right.

With the extinction of the liquor traffic—with this temptation out of the way of our strong, robust, promising young men, a new and brighter era will down on Garrett county, an era of development of her wonderful resources—and grander still, an era of progressiveness in Christian holiness such as she has never seen.

A W. C. T. U. CONVENTION IN THE NATIONAL YELLOWSTONE PARK.

Dear Union Signal:—Dr. Chalmers said of the Wesleyans at their beginnings: "They are all at it, and always at it." And it was Cobden, I think, who said: "The secret of success is Agitate! AGITATE! AGITATE! It is the persistency and continuousness of the temperance folk which wears down opposition and communicates the fire of their own enthusiasm to all in their path. The great geysers of the Yellowstone themselves are not more tremendous in their explosive power than are those women who have become temperance "water boilers."

It is not strange therefore, that beside the fuming geysers there should be another temperance explosion caused by the arrival in a camping-out temperance party, of Mrs. J. Ellen Foster. It was beside the boiling, sputtering, smoking "giantess" geyser that she held an enthusiastic W. C. T. U. convention, in a tent in company with several other members of the society, some guides, horses, mules and mosquitoes. Even in this party of health-seeking relaxation, there was felt the earnest determination which runs through the lives of all those who have engaged in this grand work to reclaim our homes and native land from the curse of drink. And as one of the many connected steps it was decided to memorialize congress to protect the grandest desplays of scenery in the world from the degrading results of liquor selling.

At the annual convention of the National W. C. T. U. in Detroit last autumn it was decided if possible to hold a convention this summer in the national Yellowstone Park, for the purpose of taking possession for temperance of this great pleasure ground of the nation. And the timely meeting of Mrs. Foster with the company of temperance campers-out seemed to make the desired opportunity. The following account is submitted by the secretary of the meeting:

The first convention of the National W. C. T. U. in the National Yellowstone Park was held on Saturday, July 19, at Camp Willard in the upper geyser basin. Mr. R. Pearsall Smith was chosen chairman, pro tem., and gave the opening address, upon which followed a temperance hymn and devotional exercises conducted by Hannah Whitall Smith. Mr. Smith then appointed Mrs. J. Ellen Foster chairman of the meeting, and named the committees upon organizations and resolutions. After the address by Mrs. Foster, which was frequently interrupted by enthusiastic cheers, the reports from the different departments were called for.

Mrs. Foster, superintendent of the legislative department, gave an interesting account of the work under this head. She was followed by Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith, superintendent of the evangelistical department, and Miss Alys Smith, who spoke for the flower mission. Then followed reports from the departments of heredity and hygiene, from Miss Mary Whitall Smith, assistant superintendent of the department of heredity, and Miss Dike of Montclair, New Jersey. After this the meeting listened to a few short speeches upon woman's franchise, and to the report of the agent of The Union Signal. Eight subscriptions to the paper were taken at the time and more followed afterward. The convention then listened to reports from the departments of juvenile work, scientific state instruction and temperance literature.

Miss Alys Smith moved that the emblematic white ribbon of the society should be tied to the tree nearest the great geyser, called the "Giantess" as this geyser spouted pure water and might be called a "woman spouter."

The motion having been carried and all the reports unanimously adopted, the committee on resolutions retired, while the meeting adjourned for a few hours.

After the devotional exercises with which the afternoon session opened, the convention listened to the report of the committee on resolutions. The following resolutions were presented and adopted:

Resolved, That we see in this wide domain of forest and stream, of deep canons and bold peaks, rushing geysers and beautiful waterfalls, a miniature of the broad land we love and which we seek to save from the curse of drink.

Resolved, That as we have seen with much sorrow and great apprehension that intoxicating liquors are being sold within the limits of the United States Reservation in Wyoming territory, by act of congress set apart as a National Park, we do hereby memorialize the next congress to prohibit all traffic in intoxicating liquors within these limits of our common country, and refer this, our memorial, to the next annual meeting of the N. W. C. T. U. to be presented in such time and manner as shall seem to them wise and proper.

Resolved, That we rejoice in the opportunity we have enjoyed of setting forth the aims and methods of work of the N. W. C. T. U. in this United States reservation known as the National Park: that we hereby reverently pledge to God and home and native land the love of our hearts and the labor of our lives.

Resolved, That we request the secretary to forward to The Union Signal a report of this convention, for publication.

These resolutions were received with great enthusiasm, some of the guides in the audience declaring emphatically that they thought "it was a mighty good thing;" and that "they had heard of the women's work before but they did not know there was half so much to them."

Some members of the convention then marched to the Giantess Geyser, and while the temperance doxology was being sung, Emory Foster climbed the nearest tree and tied upon the highest branch the white ribbon. The convention then adjourned sine die.

Mary Whitall Smith.

TRIPS IN TENNESSEE.

Dear Union Signal:—An idle hour resting here in in Covington, just before going to meet the women, gives me a chance to chat with you. The work goes bravely on all over the Union, and now when we call "Watchman, what of the night?" the answer comes, "All is well," for we are pressing right to the citadel of the enemy, and where a brave worker falls another springs into the ranks. Ten weeks ago I took up the state work of organizing unions in Tennessee. The way was dark the clouds heavy. Mrs. H. H. Harrison and I alone believed something could be done. I made it a subject of prayer, long and earnest, and plead for an open door.

I was engaged by the executive committee of Tennessee to advocate "Prohibition Constitutional Amendment," the secretary to arrange my trips and conduct all business. This gave me a chance to organize the W. C. T. U. all along the line. Uniting the two has given the success for which I humbly prayed. Twenty-six unions have been organized since I began, and seven prohibition clubs in various parts of the state. All are officered by leading men and women.
